Mr. MORGAN. I am very sorry to have to object to that bill, but it will take two or three hours to discuss it before the Senate. There is no possibility of passing it through this session of Congress. It ought not to pass for the reason that it is a mere disturbance of the situation in Hawaii, which if let alone will redound to the advantage of those people and also of the United States. No harm is being done in Hawaii by anything that is going on there now, and I am compelled, if that bill is to be put through the Senate—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will state to the Senator, if he will permit me, that this bill simply extends the immigration, the contract labor, and the Chinese exclusion laws of the United States to Hawaii—laws that are in force to-day in the United States, laws that have the entire approval of the country. It is an important question.

Mr. MORGAN. I know it is.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I hope the Senator will permit the bill to be laid before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not so certain about the laws on the statute books of the United States as they are now having the entire approval of the country, and I am quite sure that they are not executed in any proper way. I am sure, also, that if we pass this bill we have no agencies whatever in Hawaii for the purpose of executing the law. We have no judicial establishment there and the law would be a dead letter on the statute book, merely interfering—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will permit me, the third section of the proposed law provides all the necessary machinery for executing it, for carrying it into full operation. It is provided that the circuit judges in chambers of Hawaii shall be invested with the authority of United States judges, and that the marshals and deputy marshals of Hawaii shall perform all the duties now devolved upon United States marshals under our immigration laws. The collectors of customs and deputy collectors are clothed with the authority which is now vested in the internal-revenue collectors of the United States under our Chinese-exclusion acts. It will be observed that the bill provides for the requisite official machinery to give as full and complete effect to the laws in question in the Hawaiian Islands as in the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Government sent a commission down there consisting of Mr. CULLOM and myself and Mr. HITT of the House of Representatives in connection with two gentlemen in Hawaii, President Dole and Judge Frear, who, by the way, is a very able man as well as a great jurist. That commission have examined into these questions most critically. We made our report here to the Congress of the United States. The bill that we recommended went before the Committee on Foreign Relations in this body, and also in the other House, and those bills have been reported and are on the Calendar. They provide a full and complete system of government in Hawaii.

I am not quite sure—I say it with all sincerity—that no movement can be made for special legislation in Hawaii that will not disturb that community without doing any good to the people of the United States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I know very well, as the Senator does, that an able commission was sent to Hawaii. The distinguished Senator from Alabama was one of its members. That commission has reported to the Senate. I am familiar with its report. It is entitled to the very highest commendation. I regret that the few hours remaining of this session are not adequate to permit the Congress of the United States to take from the Calendar the bill reported by the commission and give it due and proper consideration.

The bill which is offered by the Committee on Immigration has been withheld in the hope that the work of the Senator from Alabama and his colleagues might receive the approval of Congress, but it is quite evident that it can not now be done. The bill to which I invite the attention of the Senate is intended to meet a present pressing emergency, and unless it becomes a law thousands of contract laborers now pouring into the islands at the rate of a thousand or more a month will be added to the undesirable population of Hawaii. It seems to the committee having this bill in charge that it is of the utmost importance that the importation of contract laborers into the Hawaiian Islands, which are now within the jurisdiction and control of the United States, should be stopped at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Hawaiian laborers will come to Hawaii, under our laws as they exist in the United States, just as freely as they come now under the supposed contract. The Hawaiian Government, the Hawaiian people, do not want the contract. It amounts to nothing so far as they are concerned. Our laws do not keep Japanese out of the United States, and the Hawaiian laws prohibit the immigration of Chinese, so that the immigration into Hawaii consists now entirely, so far as Orientals are concerned, of Japanese.

The labor contracts that are authorized by those laws are no incentive to bringing Japanese there at all. On the contrary, they are rather an embarrassment. Japanese had a perfect right to go there until we annexed Hawaii. They did not have the right to go there except under the Hawaiian permission, but they go there now freely, not more freely than they did before, except that before they went as contract laborers, and now they go as rightful immigrants. That is the only difference.

We may here pass this bill, and we do nothing at all except to interrupt the autonomy in Hawaii in such a way as to produce confusion in the whole government. I assure the Senate that that is so, and the difficulties will be multiplied every day after we pass this one single bill. It is a subject that we are obliged to take up and treat as a whole, every part considered with reference to the balance. Otherwise we are going to produce confusion there of the worst kind.

Now, if we are compelled to go into this matter by a vote of the Senate, of course I shall take the liberty of occupying as much time as is necessary to present the subject fully before the Senate. I make no threat of delay or anything of that sort, but I will not consent upon a subject of this kind to be hastened into legislation that I know will be ruinous to those people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senate that this discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. I know it is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. Does he not think that we ought immediately to prevent the importation of laborers under contract into the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not, if the Senator will tell me?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me to read some papers here, it is all right, but I do not want to take half an hour of the time of the Senate in reading papers.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course, if the Senator has made up his mind, I could not hope to change it, but I thought every Senator here would be willing to do the one thing, if it is to be done, and that is to prevent the importation of laborers under contract into Hawaii, which may be done now under the Hawaiian laws.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not necessary to prevent the importation of laborers into Hawaii under contract or laborers not under contract. It is not necessary, and by all means it is not emergent, that we should do anything of the kind. In doing what is proposed in this bill we will interrupt the course of legislation in Hawaii and interrupt our own legislation here, and confuse it to such a degree that the courts will not be able to administer the laws in that country.

Now, I have said this much in a preliminary way with a view of trying to persuade the Senate not to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I do object.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I regret that the Senator feels obliged to object.

Mr. MORGAN. I regret it very much, too.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I give notice now that at the earliest moment practicable to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to consider and vote upon the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Regular order.

Mr. MORGAN. In reply to that notice, I will state that whenever the bill is taken up I shall undertake to amend it in such a way as to try to save those people from ruin in consequence of this legislation, and I will take all the time that is necessary to do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The question is on the passage of the fortification appropriation bill which was before the Senate. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

COURTS IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11160) to authorize the appointment of a clerk of the district courts of the United States within and for the eastern district of Virginia, to validate their acts, and prescribe where the records shall be kept, to report it without amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That within and for the eastern district of Virginia there shall be only one clerk, to be appointed by the judge of the district court, and said clerk may have as many deputies as may be necessary, to be appointed as now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That all acts heretofore performed by the several persons acting as the clerks of said court at its several places of meeting, and all payments heretofore made, in pursuance of law or judgments and decrees of said court, or sums due, to any one or all of said clerks, are hereby validated.

SEC. 3. That the records of said court shall be kept at the respective places of meeting thereof.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the last section—"That this act shall be in force from and after its passage." It is wholly unnecessary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill by striking out section 4.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope that will not be done, as it is a House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the amendment. I understood that it was a Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood it was a Senate bill. Now I am informed that it is a House bill, and I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. TILLMAN and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized as speaking to the pending question, which is on the passage of the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. If I could get through by one or two yieldings I would do so, as I am always agreeable and try to do whatever is proper; but I do not want to have an inundation of these requests.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will yield in order that the Carnegie library bill may be put into conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will take but a few moments to do it. It is an important matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I feel that after that is disposed of, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] proposes to go on at half past 9, we ought to proceed with the fortifications bill.

Mr. MONEY. That is the order at half past 9. Meanwhile I should like to get consent—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed to report back favorably from the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill (H. R. 11712) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library, with an amendment. I will state that the amendment consists in striking out the House bill and inserting the bill that has passed the Senate heretofore. Hence I suggest that it will be unnecessary to read the amendment, as the Senate will understand precisely what it is.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator who has the bill in charge tell us what will be done when the bill passes? What shape will it be in?

Mr. GALLINGER. If we adopt the amendment proposed by the committee, the bill will go into conference, and the belief is that we will agree upon a bill in conference beyond a doubt.

Mr. TELLER. But what kind of a bill, I should like to know?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not state to the Senator in advance what conclusion will be reached.

Mr. TELLER. I shall object to the bill if the Senator can not give me an idea as to whether the Senate committee are in favor of the Mount Vernon site or some other site.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that the Senate reported in the first place a bill in favor of the Mount Vernon site, but the proposed Senate amendment proposes the purchase of a site.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I do not think the Mount Vernon site ought to be taken. I think that destroys the streets there.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that there has been no discussion of that at all between the committees of the House and the Senate, and we want to send it to conference for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I am very much opposed to the bill going through if it means that. We shall have a chance at it, I suppose, when it comes back from the conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably. I have no authority to state to the Senator what conclusion will be reached, only that we hope to reach a conclusion.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator expect to abandon the Mount Vernon Square site or modify it? That is the whole question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am reporting this bill in behalf of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], who is unavoidably absent. I will frankly say that I have not discussed this matter either with the chairman of the committee or with any other Senator, or with members of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the bill appropriate $250,000 for a site?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senate amendment does.

Mr. NELSON. Does it appropriate that amount for a site?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does, if we adopt the amendment; but it will then go to conference, and what conclusion the conferees may reach I can not state in advance, of course.

Mr. BUTLER. What does the bill provide for?

Mr. GALLINGER. The House bill provides for building the library on Mount Vernon Square. The Senate has taken another view of the case. I simply ask that the Senate amendment be adopted and that the bill may be sent into conference.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the difference between the House bill and the Senate bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have stated the nature of the House bill as I understand it, and also the proposed Senate amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The House bill provides for the Mount Vernon site.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have stated that the House bill provides for Mount Vernon Square and the Senate amendment provides for the purchase of a site.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope, in justice to the fortifications bill—

Mr. NELSON. I must object if it appropriates $250,000 for a site.

Mr. GALLINGER. The purpose is merely to send the bill into conference, and I do not think the Senator ought to object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order.

ESTATE OF ROGER A. HIERN.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to yield to me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, but can not yield any further; otherwise I shall have no time.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from South Carolina yields to the Senator from Mississippi, I give notice that I shall not consent to yield to anyone else.

Mr. MONEY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2403) to remove a suspension upon the disbursement of an appropriation, favorably reported from the Committee on Claims. It is a small matter that I want to get on the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the appropriation made by act of March 3, 1879, to be paid to Robert Otis, as administrator of the estate of Roger A. Hiern, be, and hereby is, made available for payment to the administrator de bonis non of said estate, said Robert Otis having died; and the suspension imposed by joint resolution of July 1, 1879, upon the disbursement of said appropriation until the further action of Congress is hereby raised and removed.

Mr. SPOONER. What are the restrictions?

Mr. MONEY. An act was passed about twenty years ago to pay certain owners of a steamboat, and the share belonging to Roger A. Hiern, or rather to his estate, was held in suspension because it was urged that he had been disloyal. That was afterwards disproved abundantly by affidavits, and no further attempt was made to block it; but it simply hung suspended, the money having been already appropriated. It has been investigated carefully and a report made in favor of the removal of the suspension.

Mr. SPOONER. By what committee?

Mr. MONEY. By the Committee on Claims of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER. The title is too indefinite, I think, for any bill. Can not the Senator amend it?

Mr. MONEY. The bill was originally entitled "A bill for the relief of Robert Otis, administrator de bonis non of Roger A. Hiern," but the title was corrected by the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it a House bill?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; it is a Senate bill. The title itself was corrected to its present form.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a very ridiculous title.

Mr. MONEY. I am not responsible for the action of the committee. I was very greatly obliged to them to get a report at all.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina still further yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. To whom?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. I have a bill of but four lines.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have yielded until there are only about thirty-five minutes left. I should like to yield to my friend, but some one else then will impose on my good nature, and I am afraid I will have to refuse him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that I shall object to the consideration of any other business until the fortification appropriation bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for, and the Senator from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of order will be stated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When a bill is under consideration and a Senator takes the floor to make a speech, I desire to know whether it is in order for him to yield to Senators to have other bills passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to be a time-honored practice here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It may be a time-honored practice. The PRESIDING OFFICER. No bill has been taken up without the unanimous consent of the Senate since the present occupant was in the chair.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say just a word in answer to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I have always understood that was the purpose of the unanimous consent of the Senate. A Senator has no right to farm it out. When nobody objects, he yields, and it is under the unanimous consent of the Senate that he does so, otherwise he would have to decline to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad to say that if I am proceeding in disorder it is because I have learned that from my older associates here, for the practice has been going on ever since I have been a member of this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is strictly in order.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? on which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we have under consideration the bill appropriating money for fortifications. I shall not address myself to that measure, because I have no criticism to make on the bill as reported, and I would not impose on the Senate but for the fact that this afternoon one of the Senators, who is a member of the Appropriations Committee, took occasion to inject into the debate on this bill a discussion and a criticism of the armor-plate matter, and to indicate, as far as one could judge from his language, that he disagrees very much with the action of the Senate, and feels that we made a great blunder and ought to correct it. He being, as I said, one of the conferees, and the other two conferees being opposed to the action of the Senate, we are in this anomalous condition that the Senate by a considerable majority has taken action limiting the armor-plate price to $300 and instructing the Secretary of the Navy to commence the erection of an armor-plate factory in the event contracts can not be made at that price.

Mr. BUTLER. By a vote of 39 to 27.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from North Carolina simply interjected a statement of fact in regard to the vote, that it was by a vote of 39 to 27 that the order for the armor-plate factory was passed by the Senate.

Now, as I said, the anomaly is presented of this measure, which is of vital importance in the estimation of many of us, being in the hands of Senate conferees who are opposed to it and who will naturally be inclined to yield the point to the House conference committee, and they will report back here to-morrow, in all likelihood, a conference report in which this provision or these provisions will be stricken out and some objectionable agreement made, and tell us under whip and spur, "Now, we must pass this bill, because we can not cripple the Navy. There are forty-odd million dollars in this measure, and the whole thing must go through whether you like it or not. We have not got time to do anything else."

Well, the objection I have to that is that the conferees on the part of the Senate ought to stand by the Senate's action, and if there is any compromise, as there may be one necessary, it ought to be one that the Senate will agree to after a discussion as a proper and reasonable compromise rather than one that will be added after coercion. We do not want to cripple the Navy. We do not want to refuse enough money to carry on the work now being done, or enough men, or enough munitions of war, or to weaken in any wise the Administration in its undertaking to use our vessels to the best advantage in any way that seems proper for the public welfare.

Mr. President, the argument was advanced this afternoon that the armor for the three battle ships ordered last July, not having been contracted for, if we did not change the bill in essential particulars, those vessels can not be completed. I do not like to appear to criticize the Secretary of the Navy.

I believe if there is a man connected with the Administration whose work as the head of a Department has been satisfactory to the country and has reflected credit on himself, that man is John D. Long. I believe that the Secretary of the Navy is as high and clean a man as there is in Washington. But he has to depend in a large measure in his official capacity upon the advice and the initiative of his heads of bureaus.

If this armor plate has not been contracted for at $400, the amount authorized last July and appropriated for, whose fault is it? It can not be our fault. We gave all the money that was necessary to complete these vessels so that their armament could be placed on them and they could go to sea. But they contracted for the vessel and left the armor uncontracted for.

In saying this I do not intend in the slightest degree to cast any reflections upon the Secretary of the Navy; but I say the object appears to have been to leave the armor for these three vessels—10,000 tons—uncontracted for, with a view to get the House of Representatives to authorize the purchase of new, improved armor made by Krupp at a higher price of $145, at $545 a ton.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The House provision was for the payment of $445 a ton for armor plate. It is said that the Krupp armor costs $545 a ton, and the present law is for the payment of $400 a ton.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no present law except for the battle ships authorized last July.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know, but it was $400 a ton for those.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now, does not the Senator understand that this $445 is expected to purchase Krupp armor?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir, I do not; and we have the express authority of Captain O'Neil for saying that we can not get it at that price, and we have also letters from Carnegie and the Bethlehem Company saying that they will not furnish it for that price.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If it could be bought for that price, it would be a good purchase, would it not?

Mr. TILLMAN. It would be if it is so much better than the other; but I do not believe a word of it. I think it is simply a scheme to rob us of $145 a ton more than what we pay for the armor we now get, which ought to be good enough for us until we have by some battle demonstrated the effect of artillery on our present ships, until we have demonstrated that the armor which is at present on the Iowa, on the Oregon, and the other vessels is not as good as any that is made.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I can not agree with the Senator from South Carolina that anybody is attempting to rob us, or if they are, that anybody connected with the Government is willing to permit that robbery.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not say that anybody connected with the Government is in collusion with these armor thieves. I only say that the Secretary of the Navy and his bureaus have left themselves open to suspicion that they have delayed making these contracts solely for the purpose of having us pay $145 a ton more for armor than was authorized to be paid. That is all.

It may be, and I dare say it is, true that those gentlemen are perfectly honest in the belief that the Krupp armor at $145 more a ton is more desirable. If it had been proven satisfactorily that this armor was so much more desirable that we ought to give $145 a ton more for it, I would be the last man to say one word. I am not an unreasonable man; but in this instance we have no proof to that effect. It is only a surmise and guesswork.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask the Senator, is there a particle of proof put before us by the Secretary of the Navy or his Department, so far as he has informed us, to show that the Krupp armor is superior to the Harvey armor?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] yesterday evening read the formula under which the two armors are made. I think one has 1 per cent of chromium in it and the other has no chromium in it. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if that is not so.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is very little difference.

Mr. TILLMAN. The difference is so little, so insignificant, that it would take a great stretch of the imagination to have anyone believe that the Krupp armor is more valuable.

Mr. BUTLER. Not only that, but the specifications as to how these classes of armor were made show that the Krupp armor is made by the use of natural gas, while the Harvey armor is made by wood charcoal, which is much more expensive, and that the results of the two processes do not differ materially.

It is all set out in the RECORD of yesterday, and I challenge any proof to show, first, that that Krupp armor is superior in quality to the Harvey armor, and second, to show that it costs any more to produce it. If the Navy Department have any such evidence, they have for some mysterious reason withheld it from the Naval Committee and from the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] this afternoon to say that the Krupp armor was lighter, that it made a battle ship lighter, and that it did not weigh as much as the Harvey armor.

Mr. TILLMAN. The claim is that the Krupp armor is 25 per cent better, and therefore you can make it 25 per cent thinner or lighter than the other and have the same protection; but we have no proof to that effect. We have only the assertions of those interested in having this armor put upon the Government at this increase in price.

Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who interposed here this evening as the defender of the Secretary of the Navy, who needs no defense, is not here. I say that we agreed last July to raise the price of armor from $300 a ton to $400 a ton under the plea that the war was on, that we could not afford to delay hurrying forward the battle ships, and if $100 a ton was all that stood between us and ordering those ships, that was not a sufficient amount to warrant our refusal. Therefore we increased the price from $300 a ton to $400 after the Senate had on two previous occasions peremptorily refused to stand the imposition and the robbery practiced upon the Government by Carnegie and the Bethlehem Company.

Notwithstanding all the rush and hurry which was then supposed to exist, the Secretary of the Navy quietly pursues his way and orders a vessel and then leaves the armor uncontracted for. If there was not any real hurry then, when there was war, what is the need of hurry now, when we have no war? If there was a need for hurry then, why was not the armor contracted for?

Mr. President, I think there is one way out of this. While the Senate conferees will do as they please and will report back to us just such an agreement as they deem best and proper, I would suggest that I for one am willing to do this: I am willing to authorize the purchase of enough armor, 10,000 tons, at $400 a ton, to finish the three vessels now on the stocks—the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio. But I want to carry with that the proposition that we will order an armor factory to be built immediately and give the appropriation for it.

We are told that a million and a half is not enough for an armor factory. Well, let us give three millions, let us give five millions, if need be, to build for the Government a first-class armor factory, so that we shall be in a position to be independent of this armor trust; and hereafter, two years from now, after these battle ships are completed, we shall not be compelled to go over this same fight and this same struggle with these greedy corporations, which have got us in their power and stand here as a monopoly demanding any price they please, we being helpless and unable to resist their demand.

That is what I am willing to do. Let us finish every battle ship now authorized at $400 a ton, and then let us order an armor factory without regard to any contracts that may be made hereafter, or else we will be two years from now or next year in the same fix we are now, helpless, and we will have to stand whatever imposition or demand the armor-plate trust sees proper to present.

If this country were now in dire distress and at war with a great power, and we were strained to the utmost to create a new navy rapidly, those people would be able to say to us, "We will not make your armor at less than $1,000 a ton," and we could not help ourselves. That is what I am trying to get this country out of. I am trying to get it out of the power of this combination, which is now robbing us every year, and doing it under the pretense of patriotism as the basis of their action.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate by a discussion of the armor-plate question. I have no special regard for the establishments which are making armor plate in this country. If anyone has a prejudice against them, I think, after all I have heard about this subject, that I share that prejudice. What I want, Mr. President, is that the American battle ships shall be covered with the very best armor in the world. I should regret very much that any American battle ship should be covered with armor inferior to that upon the ships of any other nation, and I think the Senator from South Carolina would regret that just as much as I would.

Mr. TILLMAN. I certainly would.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think every Senator would regret it. I think what every American Senator wants is that our battle ships shall be covered with the very best armor in the world. We may not understand this matter, but it seems to me that with the great navy that England is building, with the great navy that Germany is building, and with the great navy that Russia is building—these three great naval powers—it is scarcely supposable that they are paying extravagant prices for armor. If these three great nations are paying for a certain kind of armor this high price, I think that fact of itself is some evidence that the price which is asked for the best kind of armor is not too high.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Excuse me a moment. Whatever we may do in this country with regard to armor-plate monopolies and trusts and all that of sort of thing, I can not believe that these three great nations—England, Germany, and Russia—are also being taken by the throat by a combination and are submitting to it, and I think there is in that fact a certain degree of evidence that the price is not so exorbitant after all.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Connecticut answer me a question before he sits down?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know that I can.

Mr. TILLMAN. What proof have you that those nations are paying this high price?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has been so stated here.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has not the Senator heard those of us who have investigated this question, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], myself, and other members of the Naval Committee, reiterate time and again that there is an armor trust that is world-wide, embracing every armor factory in the world?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well. Then, if all these other nations must submit to it, must we do it, too?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not believe that England and Germany and Russia are submitting in any great degree to the exactions of a trust. I do not believe they would do so.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator from Connecticut believe the Secretary of the Navy, who investigated this question, and who has written a report and sent it to the Senate stating that fact?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Stating what—that those nations are submitting to an unconscionable price at the hands of a trust? Has he stated that?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is the very thing he has stated.

Mr. BUTLER. Exactly that very thing; and it has been read to the Senate and put into the Record three or four times; twice by me.

Mr. TILLMAN. Secretary Herbert, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, presented these facts to us, and he presented the report of his two experts who had been sent to Europe to find out what it cost to make armor, and they reported that it cost about $264 a ton.

Mr. CHANDLER. One hundred and sixty-seven dollars.

Mr. TILLMAN. But, taking all the etceteras and percentages, the wear and tear of plant, interest on the investment, and everything else—

Mr. BUTLER. And 6 per cent interest on the investment.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire, who knows as much or more about the Navy than any other man in this country, after fully investigating the subject, reported that if we allowed $300 we would allow 33½ per cent profit at that price.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senator is perhaps wandering a little away from the question about which I inquired. That, I understand, had reference to the old armor.

Mr. TILLMAN. The harveyized armor, not the Krupp armor. The Krupp armor is just a figment of the imagination which these people have conjured up with which to come into this Senate and say to us now, "The Harvey armor we formerly used is obsolete; we have got something very much better, 25 per cent better, and we simply want $145 a ton above the price you are now paying," which is $100 a ton more than the Senator from New Hampshire says we ought to pay. That is the situation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it or is it not true that Great Britain, Russia, and Germany are paying $575 a ton for armor?

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no proof that they are.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has been stated here over and over again. If they are not—

Mr. TILLMAN. All we know is this—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is nothing in my point if they are not paying that price; but if they are, I insist there is something in it.

Mr. TILLMAN. All we know is this: That when this fight first came on, the origin of it, I believe, came about from the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] discovering that the Bethlehem Iron Works had been charging us $580 a ton and at the same time made armor for Russia at $240 a ton.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, my objection to this armor-plate business is that I do not want anybody—Carnegie or anybody else—to have an option on what we shall be charged to build a navy. I want to take away that option. If we find that we are in a tight place, they may charge the Government more than we can afford to pay to have a navy at all.

I believe the expenditure of $5,000,000 to build a Government armor plant, even if we never use it—and probably we would not, for they would then come right down—would be a wise expenditure, for we would then take away the option of these monopolies and the world would then compete. I do not want these companies to have the power to control the building of a navy by the United States, which they now have and which they are exercising most arbitrarily.

I shall be opposed to any bill going through here leaving that option in the Carnegie Company or any other company. Build your own armor plant. I do not know whether you can build it cheaply or not. Then they will not have that option, because the Government can manufacture the armor itself; otherwise these companies can charge what they please, and make you pay it, or you will have no Navy.

It is a most disgraceful position for the United States to occupy to be under the control of a monopoly of this kind. It must not be. I think we are not doing our duty if we allow the United States longer to occupy such a position as that.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, who has been recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I only wish to take two or three minutes to call attention to the actual situation.

The difficulty about the armor companies and the Navy Department at this time, I will say, is that they have precipitated this question upon us within the last two or three weeks. We authorized the payment of $400 a ton for armor. We authorized that price—

Mr. TILLMAN. Under war excitement.

Mr. CHANDLER. We authorized that price for the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio, and it was not until two weeks ago that I knew that the armor for the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio had not been contracted for. The Senator from South Carolina may be able to tell me how long ago it was since he knew that the ships we authorized nearly a year ago did not have their armor contracted for.

Mr. TILLMAN. I never knew it until I got it from you. You always find out all the devilment that it is about sooner than anybody else in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, whether it is devilment or not, I never knew until two weeks ago that the contract for this armor at $400 a ton had not been made.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who was absent yesterday and could not then make his speech on this subject, came in to-day to complain that there is want of patriotism in this body because we are not willing to pay $545 a ton for armor. He seemed to think that we must make haste to authorize more battle ships and authorize the payment of $545 a ton for armor, when the Navy Department, which had authority a year ago—right in the middle of the war, when we did not know how many wars with other nations that war would involve—to build these three battle ships, contracted for the hulls of the ships and left the armor uncontracted for; and now, Mr. President, we have been told within a fortnight that we must authorize the payment of not only $545 a ton for armor for our future ships, but that we must authorize it for the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio.

Mr. TILLMAN. And the new monitors.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, with his permission, some questions strictly for information. I ask him what is the classification or name of the armor plate that is to cost $400 a ton?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is called the Harvey armor.

Mr. MORGAN. What class of armor below that is upon our battle ships?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is none below that upon our battle ships. Our present battle ships are covered with Harvey armor.

Mr. MORGAN. All with Harvey armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. And now it is proposed to put on the Krupp armor, at $545 a ton. What is the advantage of the Krupp armor over the Harvey armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator want to catechise me by asking one question at a time, or will he put all his questions at once, and let me answer them all at once?

Mr. MORGAN. It will be easier for me to have the Senator answer my questions as I put them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, I remain on the stand, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. I repeat the question to the Senator: What is the difference between the Harvey armor and the Krupp armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. The formula is before the Senate. I can not detect the chemical difference.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there anybody here who knows of the difference?

Mr. CHANDLER. No. Captain O'Neil says it is called a secret, but the formula is well known.

Mr. MORGAN. How much of that additional cost is a contribution to the patentee?

Mr. CHANDLER. Forty-five dollars. The American manufacturers tell us that the Krupp armor will cost $100 more a ton than the present armor; that is, $500 a ton, and $45 a ton for what they call royalties. They are not royalties, but they are payments for a secret, which is no secret, as Captain O'Neil says.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I want to ask the Senator, do we want any better ships in his opinion—he was once Secretary of the Navy—than those with which we whipped in the battles at Manila and Santiago de Cuba?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a very general question. We do want them if we can get them.

Mr. MORGAN. But can you get them?

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I should like to proceed with my argument.

Mr. MORGAN. Is there any assurance that they can be gotten?

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no assurance that we can get them by using the Krupp armor in place of the Harvey armor. There is no such assurance as would compel us here and now to stand and deliver at the demand of these manufacturers between now and Saturday noon.

Mr. MORGAN. Part of what we are paying for new-fashioned armor we are paying in the way of royalties to the patentees?

Mr. CHANDLER. Forty-five dollars a ton is what they ask. Now will the Senator allow me to go on?

Mr. MORGAN. I will, with great pleasure. I have got all the information I want.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the discovery had been made that here was a better armor—25 per cent better and stronger for the same weight and material—which justified the Navy Department in not making a contract for armor for these three ships and justified the demand for $545 a ton for the armor which we might put on any of the new ships we would authorize this year, should not those facts have been presented to Congress on the first Monday in December?

Should not the Navy Department and the makers of this armor have come here more than sixty days ago and told us of this discovery, and shown us the facts, and convinced us of them, instead of waiting? So far as the Senate is concerned and the Senate committee is concerned, we remained in profound ignorance of this armor and of the demand that $545 a ton was to be made upon us if we contracted for any more ships, and in profound ignorance of the fact that the armor for the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio had not been contracted for.

I say, Mr. President, in all candor, that no attempt ought to have been made to ignore the Senate in this way. The naval bill came over here, I think, within the last ten days, at least very recently, and until that bill passed the House we had no knowledge that this demand was to be made upon us. Now we are told, without sufficient evidence, I may say with substantially no evidence whatever, that this new armor is better than the $400 armor, and that we must take it, or else present ourselves to the world as willing to have inferior battle ships to those of any other nation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield to the Senator when I answer the question he asked me when he was up a few minutes ago.

It is said that European Governments are paying this high price for armor. There is no proof of it. Captain O'Neil says "I am reliably informed;" and the evidence we get is merely the say so of A, B, and C. There has been no investigation of the subject of armor made since Secretary Herbert made his investigation, as the result of which he reported that it cost $400 a ton to make armor, allowing a liberal profit.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Krupp armor, I understand, is lighter than the Harvey armor.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President, it is not lighter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is thinner?

Mr. CHANDLER. We do not know, it is not clear, whether it is proposed to put the gain in strength into making the battle ships stronger, or whether it is proposed to put the gain into making the plates lighter so as to gain in displacement.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Krupp armor is thinner and lighter than the harveyized armor, then it is possible, is it not, that the armor for battle ships would not cost any more at $545 a ton for the Krupp armor than at $400 a ton for the Harvey armor? I do not myself know how that is.

Mr. CHANDLER. It goes without saying that if you get a better article for a larger price, you are just as well off. Now I yield five minutes to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] sits down, I know the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] will allow me to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I wish first to make a parliamentary inquiry. I ask if the Senator from New Hampshire has a monopoly on the time of the Senate?

Mr. TILLMAN. I would state for the information of the Senator, with the permission of the Chair, that at half past 9 o'clock we have to stop all of this kind of talk and commence eulogies on a late member of the House of Representatives from the State of Mississippi.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator let me first settle with the Senator from North Carolina? There is an appointment for eulogies in this Chamber at half past 9 o'clock, and it is very important that this bill should be voted on before the eulogies commence. I knew that the Senator from North Carolina wanted to say a few words by way, I hope, of closing this discussion, and I yielded to him, knowing that he was always ready and always eager.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit, I do not want to appear to be—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina can say what I was about to say so much better than I could say it that I gladly yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thank the Senator for the compliment, but I do not think by any means that the Senator can not say better than I whatever he desires to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that we may have a vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg pardon. I must have an answer from you to one question. When we had the subject of the cost of armor under investigation, and devoted day after day and week after week to the examination of witnesses, did we not almost beg Carnegie and the Bethlehem people to show us their books, so that we could arrive at some intelligent conclusion as to what they actually were paying for this armor, what it cost them, and did they not invariably refuse?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator always tells the truth except upon some phases of the Southern question. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say for the benefit of my friend that I tell it more directly and frankly on that question than on almost anything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I attempted to get the floor this afternoon when the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] finished his remarks. I regret that he is not present tonight, because I wish to reply to him and to ask him certain questions. It is a little awkward to reply to a Senator who is absent, and impossible to propound to him questions, and, besides, embarrassing to have such a speech go into the RECORD without a reply, though it has been partially replied to by the Senators who have spoken.

Mr. President, a year ago certain Senators, I think including the Senator from Massachusetts, told us that we ought to submit to this high price for armor, because we were in the midst of war, and because we were building a few ships now, and that it was not certain that we would build many more; it was during a time of war. Senators told us then that it was not certain that we would ever build more than one or two ships a year hereafter, and therefore we should submit to the dictation and extortion of the armor trust and not enter upon the scheme of building our own armor factory.

We are now told we should submit because we are going to build a big navy, and I suppose because we are not at war with a naval power. We are also lectured for not authorizing the building of more ships. I am in favor of a big navy, and if it had appeared that we could advance that object by authorizing more ships at this time, I should have voted for it. We have as many war ships authorized now as it is possible for us to build or get under way before the next Congress meets.

The Senator from Massachusetts also said that here is a wonderful invention, a new and improved armor, vastly superior to anything we have, and therefore we should pay any price to get it.

I am sorry I can not say it in his presence, but I will say here now that there is not a particle of proof that the Krupp armor is superior to that which we have, and there is not a line in the bill to show that we are going to buy Krupp armor or anything superior to what we have. These armor people have not dealt squarely with us. They have not dealt frankly with us, as the Senator from New Hampshire says:

If they had come to us in a manly and frank way two months ago and told us they had a new invention and showed us their hand, we would have dealt squarely with them, and if they had had a good thing, we would have paid them a good price for it. The best proof that they did not have it is that they have not dealt squarely with us. I do not believe they have it. I put into the RECORD yesterday the specifications of the two processes, and if they prove anything, they prove that the Harvey armor is superior and also that it will cost more than the Krupp armor. We want a big navy and want the best armor, but we do not want to be robbed and trifled with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LOVE.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to my late colleague in the House of Representatives, Mr. LOVE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 25, 1899.

Whereas the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. W. F. LOVE, late a Representative from the State of Mississippi: Therefore, be it Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of the late Representative W. F. LOVE, and as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the late Representative LOVE, and in recognition of his eminent abilities and distinguished public services, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the late Representative LOVE; and

That the Clerk be ordered to communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM F. LOVE, late a Representative from the State of Mississippi.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, in the last few weeks almost daily memorial services have been held in this Capitol in honor of the dead of this Congress. We have become familiarized with eulogies, and only when the stroke comes home and one is called upon to speak the sentiments of affection and respect is our loss fully realized. It is, perhaps, a wise provision that the poignancy of sorrow is mitigated and shortened by the constant diversion made by the calls of our official business.

We bury our dead, we lay our offerings of flowers upon the tomb, we moralize, we speak of the certainty of death, we think with softened hearts of our friend who has gone down into his narrow house, and, turning to the world, resume our work and give our minds seriously to other things, yet taking occasionally retrospective glimpses of the departed friend, and in the struggle and unrest of our labors we sigh "for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still."

In the press of business—business that must be done in the closing hours of the session—we have put aside the usual order to attest by our tributes the virtues and excellencies of WILLIAM FRANKLIN LOVE, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Mississippi. He was born in Amite County, Miss., April 26, 1832, and died October 16, 1898, at the place of his birth. This part of the State was the earliest settled, and the pioneers were of the best stock of the older States, and the family of Mr. LOVE enjoyed the esteem and respect of all who knew them.

He was heir neither to affluence nor poverty, and toiled upon the farm as much on account of an industrious disposition as of the res angusta domi. He had the advantage of good country schools and completed his education at the University of Mississippi. His farm life gave him moral, physical, and intellectual robustness and health. Entering upon the duties of manhood he took an active interest in all public affairs, and his aptitude for public business gave him an important part in popular movements, especially those concerning the agriculturist.

He served ten years in the house of representatives and eight years in the senate of his State legislature, and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1890, in which he was a most intelligent and efficient worker, and by his familiarity with legislative business, his sound, good sense, and his knowledge of the necessities of the situation, contributed largely to the success of that great work.

He was elected a member of this Congress, and was unanimously nominated by his party to succeed himself, and had begun his canvass when seized by the fever which terminated his honorable and useful life.

Mr. LOVE had a gentle and amiable disposition, a high sense of duty, delicate moral perceptions, and strong religious convictions which governed absolutely all his conduct. One of his strongest characteristics was his trustworthiness. No one ever relied upon him in vain. He was kind-hearted and sympathetic with the poor, the weak, and the afflicted. "He was as open as the day to melting charity." Though amiable, he was firm; and though conciliatory, he was resolute. No fear of public or private displeasure or opposition ever swerved him a hair's breadth from the line of duty laid down for him by a discriminating judgment and a tender conscience.

He was ambitious, not for the mere selfish enjoyment of honors, but to win the applause of the good; to gratify his family and friends; to be useful in his day and generation. "His ambition never stooped its wing to any lower flight than this." He was a member of the Baptist Church, adhering strictly to the doctrines of that great evangelical denomination. He believed fully the inspirations of the holy Scriptures, never was harassed by any doubts, declined all controversy, and steadily pursued a consistent Christian life, leaving polemics to other minds.

He was very happy in his domestic relations, and was a tender and devoted husband to a lovely and accomplished wife, an indulgent and considerate father to a beautiful daughter, and what he gave of love to them they repaid him in kind from the exhaustless fertility of the female heart. He was an excellent husband and father, neighbor and friend, citizen and public official, and went his way performing his duty as he conceived it in all these relations with a singleness of heart, a steadiness of purpose, a fidelity and conscientiousness, that justified the compliments and admiration of all who came within the sphere of his acquaintance.

To a man of the world it seems hard that Mr. LOVE should have died in the vigor of a life whose promise was still crescent, when he had achieved the object of his ambition, and with increasing zeal was laboring for distinction by good works, when a long career seemed open before him. Of what avail the study, the struggle, the triumph? But to the Christian such as he was, how willingly he resigned earthly honors for the joyous assurances of a future life.

He had walked uprightly before God and man, and he knew it. His reward was certain, and he knew it; and save the pang of separation from his beloved, he went into the "valley of the shadow of death" supported by that rod and staff which God had given to comfort him.

This good man was my friend, and I loved him. It is said that every man has his vice. I never found any in him. If faults he had, they were not grave enough to sully his honor or dim his purity. In that pleasant land where he was born, reared, and died, under the pines which hold solemn whispers with the soft Gulf wind over his tomb, he sleeps, awaiting the last summons.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I met Mr. LOVE for the first time in the early days of the first session of the present Congress. I became acquainted with him because General Walthall, with whom I was very intimately associated, knew Mr. LOVE well and liked him much, and he desired that I should know him.

Mr. LOVE was deeply interested, at the time when I knew him, in certain acts and contemplated laws with reference to the health of the country. He was deeply anxious that some law should be passed which would adjust the differences and difficulties and aid in some way to keep off that greatest of all scourges, yellow fever, from the southern portion of our Republic. In consequence of this I had frequent interviews with General Walthall and Mr. LOVE.

He impressed me as a quiet, modest, and unobtrusive gentleman, yet a very earnest and energetic Representative, anxious to serve the people of the State of Mississippi, more anxious to accomplish something than to parade himself before the country. He was not a man who sought notoriety by newspaper advertisement. He cared more to perform acts for the people who had trusted him and to comply, as far as it was proper to do, with all their requests rather than to seek to make a national reputation.

I met him at the Departments and I met him here, and he was always earnest and active in trying to serve the people of Mississippi. As I said, he was a modest, unobtrusive gentleman. He was a man who impressed me as one who would never willingly wound the feelings of any human being, yet withal a man who would suffer no indignity and would permit no injustice to himself or the people he represented.

He went from here in July last. He was afterwards unanimously renominated by the people of his district to a seat in the next Congress. He had served his State in the legislature for a period of eighteen years, which showed how fondly they were attached to him and what great confidence they had in his integrity and ability. He had been ambitious to come to Congress, and that ambition had been gratified.

He made acquaintances and friends here, and he learned the manner of doing business. He went home and was full of hope that during the next session he would be able to accomplish the great purpose which would contribute to the health and happiness of the people he represented. He went from here full of life, full of hope, and full of health, and to-day, Mr. President, he sleeps beneath the magnolias of southern Mississippi, that beautiful land where summer is almost perpetual and the flowers scarcely ever cease to bloom.

And while it may be that here in the activity and rush of life his memory will soon pass away, yet with those—his neighbors and friends—who knew him best, with the wife and the daughter, who loved him most, the memory of the genial and courteous and kindly gentleman, the tender husband, the indulgent father, will be cherished for many years to come.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, less than two weeks ago the ordinary business of the Senate was laid aside to pay tributes of respect to the memory of a distinguished Representative, who was born and lived in an atmosphere of comfort and luxury, with all the surroundings that wealth and culture can afford. After obtaining a liberal education at a famous seat of learning, instead of a life of ease and mere enjoyment, he devoted himself to the public service, entered the arena of political life, and after an apprenticeship among his home people in his town and county and an experience in the two houses of his State legislature, the citizens of his district rewarded him with the distinction, which is the dream of every ambitious young American, of a seat in the National Congress. Here he discharged his duties with zeal and fidelity, and maintained an honorable rank among his associates; but while life was still full of promise and the future apparently had much in store for him, the end came and he was cut off in the midst of his usefulness.

To-day we are here to honor the memory of another Representative who reached the same goal of ambition, but under greater difficulties and with more toilsome steps. WILLIAM FRANKLIN LOVE was born and brought up on a farm in Mississippi, was early taught to labor, followed the plow, and accustomed himself to all the details of plantation life during his minority. But he had an eager desire for knowledge and an aspiration for a life of usefulness and honor. He attended the sessions of the schools in his neighborhood when they were open to him, and with diligent effort, as opportunities were presented, pursued the studies necessary for admission to the University of Mississippi, where he enjoyed the educational advantages which fitted him for his future career.

Upon the completion of his course he stood at the threshold of active life, and it may be profitable to consider his situation and compare it with that of his former associate to whom I have already referred. Their lives had been far apart in their early youth; their surroundings had greatly differed; narrow circumstances and hard conditions had not discouraged the one, wealth and abundance had not enervated the other. Each was a type of our American citizenship and was endowed with his special traits and characteristics.

They followed like careers, and, notwithstanding the different routes by which they had reached manhood, they traveled for many years on parallel lines along the journey of life, as the subsequent history of Mr. LOVE will show when compared with the other life which I have briefly outlined.

He had scarce reached his majority when he was chosen as a representative of his county in the legislature of his State, and he rendered such faithful and satisfactory service that he was continued there for ten years, and was then elected and reelected until he had served eight years longer in the State senate.

In 1890 the people of Mississippi held a convention to revise their State constitution. A hard and bitter experience had taught them the evils of misgovernment, and after mature deliberation they had determined to follow the example of other States in other sections and eliminate the ignorant and vicious from the voting citizenship. Our late and honored associate, Senator J. Z. George, devoted his efforts and great learning to this important work.

So important did he regard it that he consented to become a member of this convention, and I remember well when he asked for a leave of absence from his senatorial work so that he might assist in working out the great problem his people desired to solve. The different constituencies sought out their ablest and most trusted men to send to this body, and Amite County, that had so long honored and trusted Mr. LOVE, chose him as one of her delegates. His great ability and ripe experience were valuable to the convention, and he took an influential part in its deliberations and work, which were brought to a satisfactory and successful conclusion.

He was again in the State senate, at the head of one of its most important committees, when he was elected to the House of Representatives, and took his seat at the opening of the Fifty-fifth Congress. As we all know, our line of work here is largely determined by our committee assignments. Mr. LOVE was appointed upon the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and he devoted himself most industriously to all the details of this great subject, and was ready at all times to discuss them clearly and intelligently when they came before the House. His associates in the committee and upon the floor bear testimony to his industry, his accuracy, his reliability, his usefulness.

It was my good fortune to be brought into intimate and friendly relations with him and his family early in his Congressional life. We met daily under the same roof during all the time he was in attendance upon the House. I soon learned to regard and esteem him, to enjoy his conversation, to value his opinions, to take pleasure in his society. He had a kind word for all with whom he came in contact, and no one could know him long without being impressed with his sincerity.

We parted at the close of the long session in July last, and he returned to his people. He had made a good beginning of his Congressional work, had secured the confidence and respect of his associates, and it was evident to his colleagues that if continued in the public service he would continue to grow in influence and strength, and that his integrity, his industry, his methods of careful investigation, his readiness in debate would secure him a high position in the membership of the House.

Physically he appeared to be vigorous and strong, with a fair prospect of long life. The future looked bright, and there were no clouds visible in the horizon. His constituents welcomed him home and expressed their appreciation of his services by a unanimous renomination, the highest and most gratifying tribute that can be paid to a public servant. Soon after he was stricken with a mortal disease, and his promising career was brought to a sudden close about three weeks before the day to which he had looked hopefully forward when he had good reason to expect a reelection by an almost unanimous vote.

His sudden removal was a serious blow to the State of Mississippi, but especially to the people of the district which he represented and to the large circle of friends and admirers who had for so many years given him a loyal and cordial support. It is proper that I should refer also to the loss sustained by his family. He was their stay and comfort, a considerate and affectionate husband, a kind and indulgent father. His home life was full of contentment and happiness and quiet enjoyment, and the dear ones who shared it with him suffered in his death a loss that is irreparable.

In paying this last tribute of respect to our departed friend, it is pleasant to reflect that he left behind him the record of a well-spent life, full of good deeds, of noble thoughts, of lofty aspirations. But these aspirations were not all limited to the present life. He looked forward to a higher and better life beyond the grave, and we may indulge the hope and belief that, if his earthly plans and expectations were not all realized, he has entered upon a realization of the higher hopes and aspirations to which he looked forward in the great hereafter.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, I never had the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. LOVE, but I have passed my whole life within a short distance of the State of Mississippi, and the relations between the people of that State and the citizens among whom I have lived have been extremely close and cordial, and in this way, through mutual friends, I learned of Mr. LOVE before I ever came to the Senate.

But, Mr. President, if I had never heard of Mr. LOVE until to-night, and I were then told as I am to-night that he served the people of Mississippi in public office for more than twenty years, that he won their confidence and was called by them into public position when he was but little beyond 21 years of age, I would have known that he was a man far beyond the common, of sterling qualities and of capacity. I say this, Mr. President, because I know so well the people of Mississippi. That State was settled by the best blood of Virginia and the older States, gallant, adventurous, high-minded men, and the community those people built up has been equally gallant and high minded.

Mississippi has always been represented by men of high capacity. No man has attained to public office and retained it for any number of years in that State unless he was a man of marked capacity. It has had one of the best supreme courts in this Union, a court which has had honor shed upon it by such names as Sharkey, Yerger, Handy, Ellett, and others. It has always been represented in Congress, where the Representatives have continued to hold office for any length of time, by men of the highest character.

It has furnished to Congress probably the greatest orator this country has ever known—the famous Prentiss—and the members of this body who have represented it have shed glory and luster not only over their own State, but also over the whole country. When I mention such names as Davis and Lamar and George and the lamented Walthall, whom we all loved so well and mourn so deeply, the class of men who have for years occupied public positions as the representatives of Mississippi becomes obvious.

Hence when I turn to the facts, and see that Mr. LOVE had been honored by a people like those of Mississippi for so long a time in public position, had served them so long in their State legislature, and so faithfully in the State constitutional convention, and then was elevated to Congress, I know from that he was everything that his friends depict him—a truthful, honest, gallant, capable gentleman, a good citizen, and a faithful public servant. If his years had been prolonged, I am sure he would have shed honor on his State and his services would have been valuable both to his own State and to the Union. In his death his State not only sustains a great loss, but our country sustains equally a great loss.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, we meet to-day to pay the last tribute to him who in the midst of a useful and busy life has heard the whisper, "Come with me." For the moment we stand amazed at the suddenness of his taking off, aghast at its remarkableness! Yet the ancient visitor, Time, with his bony fingers and his unrelenting scythe, beckons, Come! This strange, sad scene is often enacted, and still I feel that I would throw wide the windows, sing the sweetest song, bring the brightest flowers—flowers, not crapes; hosannas, not dirges, should greet us to-day.

If a pure life is a perfect title to mansions in the sky—where the heartsick, the weary may find rest; where this fretful fever ceases and the roseate light of morning never dies, and death alone gives us this possession—God quicken its coming, and bless its eternal stay!

I do not share the view of those who feel that death is always a thing to be dreaded. I do not feel that it is the greatest calamity that can befall us. Life is but a poor boon at best, with its sorrows, its heartaches, its discouragements and disappointments. Tell me, ye philosophers, who shall drop a plummet to the bottom of a sigh? Who shall analyze a single tear? And still these shadows soften and give rich and sweet chance to do some kindly act for our fellow-man; that which is right, high and noble—to lift the humble, to help the poor, to heal the wounds, to minister to the afflicted. Sweet, sacred privileges!

While we meditate upon his life, peaceful, serene, manly, and true, we recall that he was so well poised mentally and so strong morally that he was not disturbed by the clamor of factions, the appeals of zealots, nor intimidated by those who hold sway. Strong in the power that comes from a conscience clear and unstained, he dared, at all times, to do his duty, let the consequences be what they may.

And so it was that his people, the people of his childhood, of his youth, of his manhood, watching all the while, and better still, approving, applauding, raised him higher, and still yet higher, to the place from which death alone dethroned him.

He is indeed gone. The kind-hearted neighbor and friend, the prudent legislator, the wise and ever watchful statesman has passed from the light of this life to the mysteries of the unseen world, of which we know so little! Blessed be the peace that bides him.

From the heart that may ache, yet can not break, I wish him God's best welcome, for surely he is worthy.

From the fireside and out of the home life the friend, the father, the husband has taken his eternal leave.

Yet it is our sweet privilege to know that he was one of those who so lived that when the final summons came "he wrapped the drapery of his couch around him and laid down to pleasant dreams."

His influence and the impress of his life, labor, and character will live when those of us gathered here to pay the last tribute to his memory shall have folded our arms in the last long sleep.

As a pebble dropped in the placid bosom of the sleeping lake awakens the waves that widen, and yet grow wider still, till they reach the farthest shore, so his gentle, earnest, manly, Christian life shall live and speak to the coming sons of men and find echo in their better lives.

There be those who, in the perplexity of the hard lives in which their lines have fallen in this tempestuous life, fret, fume, and even doubt "the divinity that shapes our ends," and question whether, after the evening shadows come, there be sunlight beyond; the trial is too severe, the attenuated thread breaks, and life is, with its golden fruitage, lost. The life of WILLIAM F. LOVE was a triumph over this desperation, and shone like a beacon light to the mariner upon the storm-beaten shore.

His life and example only illustrates the thought so beautifully expressed by another—

It can not be that earth is man's only abiding place. It can not be that our life is a bubble, cast up by the ocean of eternity, to float another moment upon its surface, and then sink into nothingness and darkness forever. Else why is it that the high and glorious aspirations, which leap like angels from the temples of our hearts, are forever wandering abroad satisfied?

Why is it that the rainbow and the cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off and leave us to muse on their faded loveliness?

Why is it that the stars, which hold their festival around the midnight throne, are set above the grasp of our limited faculties and are forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? Finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to the view and then taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of the affections to flow back in an Alpine torrent upon our hearts?

We are born of a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars will be spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings that here pass before us like visions will stay in our presence forever.

Riches were not among his possessions; nor did he court the favor of the great. He simply and modestly walked the paths of virtue and of duty as his God gave him light to see that duty, trusting that the final end could bring to him no harm.

His work as a member of the State legislature of Mississippi for ten years, and of the State senate for eight years, and of Congress for nearly two years, attests the real merit of the man and the high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him best.

No language can describe the nearer and tender relations of husband and father. Here the scene deepens; the curtain is drawn, and we would not if we could invade these sacred precincts of the heart, for this is hallowed ground.

Generous, earnest, honest, and true in every relation of life, "he added to the sum of human joy, and were everyone for whom he did some loving service to bring a blossom to his grave he to-night would sleep beneath a wilderness of flowers."

WILLIAM FRANKLIN LOVE, honored son of Mississippi, whose heart was attuned to the sweet zephyrs of her sunny land, farewell! farewell!!

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I move that the Senate, in further token of respect to our deceased brother, adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and the Senate (at 10 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 3, 1899, at 11 o'clock a. m.

DONATING LIFE-SAVING BEACH APPARATUS TO IMPERIAL JAPANESE SOCIETY.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5144) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to donate one set of life-saving beach apparatus to the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck, organized in 1890, of which Count Kozo Yoshii is president, one Lyle gun and a complete set of beach apparatus used in connection with it by the United States Life-Saving Service in rescuing persons from shipwrecks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee, which is only a page long, be printed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. STEWART of New Jersey) is as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5144) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to donate one set of life-saving beach apparatus to the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass:

This is a bill enacting that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to donate to the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck, organized in 1890, of which Count Kozo Yoshii is president, one Lyle gun and a complete set of beach apparatus used in connection with it by the United States Life-Saving Service in rescuing persons from shipwreck.

This bill passed the Senate January 25, 1899, and was duly reported to the House of Representatives, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The bill was, by direction of the committee, referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, whose reply, accompanied by a report from the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, recommending the passage of the bill, is hereto attached, also letter of Count Kozo Yoshii, and made a part of this report.

Your committee therefore report the bill back to the House with favorable recommendation.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1899.

SIR: In response to the request of your committee for information touching the merits and the propriety of the bill (S. 5144) entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to donate one set of life-saving beach apparatus to the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck," I transmit herewith a report upon the matter from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, with my approval.

Respectfully, yours,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT LIFE-SAVING SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1899.

SIR: In response to the request of the Committee of the House on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of February 3, 1899, inclosing bill (S. 5144) entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to donate one set of life-saving beach apparatus to the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck," and requesting information touching the merits of the act and the propriety of its passage, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter addressed to this office by Count Yoshii, president of the Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwreck, setting forth the origin of the society and its operations and results up to the present time, and stating its need of the apparatus named in the bill, and asking the assistance of this Department in obtaining it. This account shows that the society is partly supported by the Japanese Government, has been ably conducted, and has already achieved remarkable results.

A portion of the apparatus desired—the Lyle gun and its accessories—is manufactured only in this country, being the invention of Capt. D. A. Lyle, of the Ordnance Department of the Army, while detailed to the Life-Saving Service, with a view of increasing the effectiveness of life-saving apparatus, and is furnished to this service by the War Department. The cost of the gun and the rest of the beach apparatus, complete, as contemplated in the bill, will be about $360.

As the Japanese society has appealed to this service on account of its pre-eminence among institutions of the kind and the effectiveness of its apparatus—the Lyle gun in particular—it seems to me it would be a gracious act on the part of this Government to express its commendation of the Japanese society by presenting this small contribution to its equipment.

I would therefore recommend the passage of the act.

Respectfully, yours,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

59 MINAMI CHO, TAKANAWA, TOKYO, JAPAN.

DEAR SIR: Although I have not yet the honor of knowing you personally, I have known you by your admirable work in organizing and developing the Life-Saving Service in the United States, the results of which I have always read with the greatest pleasure in the reports of your service sent to us by our successive ministers at Washington.

I am in charge of a society with the object of saving life from shipwrecks on the coasts of Japan. It is called "Dai Nippon Tei Koku Sulman Kinsai Kwai," organized in 1890, and supported by voluntary contributions only until May last year, but since partially supported by the Government. I have now 12 stations established and doing good work on the coasts. Four new stations are in course of construction, and over 100 in project.

Our lifeboats are not perfect, the model taken being local fishing boats, modified partially to increase its sea qualities and stronger built. We have as yet no guns or rockets in use. But with all these imperfections, we saved, from November, 1890, to September, 1898, 356 vessels, large and small, and 1,651 persons. To get better results I must have guns or rockets, and it is on this subject that I request your kind assistance. Will you kindly take the trouble to give an order to the qualified maker of life-saving apparatus in behalf of our society, for a life gun and breeches-buoy apparatus, with all the necessary articles for the proper working of them, and send them out to me? I want them as specimens, and to see if any part of them can be made here. I shall be very glad if you will kindly tell the maker whom you have chosen to send me an estimate at once, that I may know the probable amount of cost as soon as possible.

Hoping, sir, you will kindly comply with my request,

I remain, your obedient servant,

COUNT KOZO YOSHII.

Commander, I. J. N., Retired, Member of the House of Nobles, President Imperial Japanese Society for Saving Life from Shipwrecks.

S. I. KIMBALL, Esq.,
General Superintendent United States Life-Saving Service.

T. R. MASON.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2413) for the relief of T. R. Mason, of Adairville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to T. R. Mason the sum of $482, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, it being the amount due said Mason as contractor for carrying the United States mails on route No. 9083 and on route No. 10003, the former being between Springfield, Tenn., and Hopkinsville, Ky., and the latter between Springfield, Tenn., and Russellville, Ky., in the year 1891.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "$482" and insert "$169.45."

After line 9 strike out the following words: "and on route No. 10003, the former being."

Lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "and the latter between Springfield, Tenn., and Russellville, Ky."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

C. R. DOBBINS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6130, and I would like to make a request for consideration covering a little more. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] has been called home by the illness of a member of his family, and left bills of which he was in charge—eight or ten—that are alike, that are here; and I ask consideration of the first one, but I would be glad to have the House consider them all. They are all of them for watches or medals or decorations given by foreign governments to our officers for various acts and international courtesy.

Mr. BAILEY. With the statement that they are all that, and only that, I think there will be no danger in getting unanimous consent; but I think it is dangerous, and I hope the gentleman will take up one at a time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think I can save a little about this—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of measures which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6130) to authorize C. R. Dobbins, keeper of the Moose Peak (Maine) light station, to accept a gold watch from the government of the Dominion of Canada.

Be it enacted, etc., That C. R. Dobbins, keeper of the Moose Peak (Maine) light station, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the government of the Dominion of Canada a gold watch, in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOSEPH J. KINYOUN.

Mr. HITT. If the Chair will indulge the endeavor to obtain unanimous consent, I will try a similar one. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 240.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 240) to authorize Joseph J. Kinyoun, passed assistant surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service, to accept a medal from the President of the Republic of Venezuela.

Be it enacted, etc., That Joseph J. Kinyoun, passed assistant surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the President of the Republic of Venezuela a gold medal of the fourth class of the Order of the Liberator, awarded in recognition of scientific services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

B. H. BUCKINGHAM.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill H. R. 4831.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4831) to authorize B. H. Buckingham, lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, to accept certain books from the Government of Mexico.

Be it enacted, etc., That B. H. Buckingham, lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Mexico a copy of the works of Lord Brassey, in 11 volumes, entitled "The Naval Annual," in recognition of scientific services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADMIRAL T. O. SELFIDGE AND OTHERS.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2384.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2384) to authorize Admiral T. O. Selfridge, United States Navy, Capt. G. H. Wadleigh, United States Navy, Lieut. Commander E. H. Gheen, United States Navy, Lieut. Commander Raymond P. Rodgers, United States Navy, Paymaster J. B. Redfield, United States Navy, Lieut. J. J. Hunker, United States Navy, Surg. D. N. Bertolotto, United States Navy, and Ensign R. L. Russell, United States Navy, to accept medals presented to them by the Russian Government.

Be it enacted, etc., That Admiral T. O. Selfridge, United States Navy, Capt. G. H. Wadleigh, United States Navy, Lieut. Commander E. H. Gheen, United States Navy, Lieut. Commander Raymond P. Rodgers, United States Navy, Paymaster J. B. Redfield, United States Navy, Lieut. J. J. Hunker, United States Navy, Surg. D. N. Bertolotto, United States Navy, and Ensign R. L. Russell, United States Navy, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept medals presented to them by the Russian Government on the occasion of the coronation of the Czar Nicholas II, in May, 1896.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HAMILTON M. SAILORS.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, allow me to break the monotony of these proceedings by asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7090) for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors.

The SPEAKER. The monotony seems to be about the same to the Chair, but the gentleman from Indiana is recognized. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Hamilton M. Sailors, Company K, One hundred and first Indiana Volunteers, the difference in pay between that of a private and a second lieutenant from May 26, 1863, to October 10, 1863, he having performed the duties of the office under proper appointment and assignment.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman will accept an explanation instead, the act of March 3, 1863, provided that under the direction of the Secretary of War regiments should be deprived of a colonel when below the minimum, and companies should be deprived of second lieutenants when below the minimum. This man, a sergeant, was ordered on duty, being properly selected, as a second lieutenant. He performed the duty faithfully up to the time stated in the bill, covering a period of about five months. He was on active duty and not accessible to the mails, and his commission was not received until after the order of the Secretary of War prohibiting the muster in of second lieutenants in companies. The most of these cases have been cured. I do not know of another one, except this one, that has not been cured by legislation.

Mr. LOUD. Was this officer commissioned at the time?

Mr. STEELE. Everything was done, except that he was not accessible to the mails, and did not receive his commission until after the order prohibiting his muster, because the company was below the minimum. This law virtually said that companies should go into battle, and if their ranks are decimated to below the minimum, and then there should be no promotion, in case of a vacancy of second lieutenant, instead of saying to them to go in and fight, if the last man shall earn a commission he shall have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to this, unless we can have the other bills considered allowing persons to accept decorations.

Mr. STEELE. I do not object to that.

Mr. LOUD. This bill is similar, while not so extreme a case, to the bill that was up the other day, to which I objected. The gentleman must understand the danger of establishing a precedent of paying a man before he was a commissioned officer, because there were hundreds and thousands of them.

Mr. STEELE. This man was in the campaign at Chattanooga, of which my friend from Illinois was aware, and he was inaccessible to the mails and thereby lost his chance. Active service ought not to be a bar to promotion.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman know that dozens of men were away from the regular United States mail for weeks at a time during the war? There are thousands of cases similar to this.

Mr. STEELE. I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I will object.

CLIFTON R. BRECKINRIDGE.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I will call up the bill (H. R. 10891) to authorize Clifton R. Breckinridge to accept a medal presented to him by the Russian Government.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Clifton R. Breckinridge be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a medal presented to him by the Russian Government on the occasion of the coronation of the Czar, Nicholas II, in May, 1896.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and accordingly it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HICKS rose.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will wait, I will be through in a moment.

Mr. BARRETT. I would like to get in now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] having occupied the attention of the House for some time, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS].

EXTENSION OF LETTERS PATENT.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10890) granting an extension of letters patent No. 244898.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I hope bills of that kind will not be considered at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, 1901.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move a suspension of the rules to pass the bill (H. R. 12064) to encourage the holding of a Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to encourage the holding of a pan-American exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901, to fittingly illustrate the marvelous development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century, by a display of the arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil, mines, and sea; and

Whereas the proposed pan-American exposition, being confined to the Western Hemisphere, and being held in the near vicinity of the great Niagara cataract, within a day's journey of which reside 40,000,000 people, would unquestionably be of vast benefit to the commercial interests not only of this country but of the entire hemisphere, and should therefore have the sanction of the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas satisfactory assurances have already been given by the diplomatic representatives of Canada, Mexico, the Central and South American republics, and most of the States of the United States that these countries and States will make unique, interesting, and instructive exhibits peculiarly illustrative of their material progress during the century about to close; and

Whereas no exposition of a similar character as that proposed has ever been held in the great State of New York; and

Whereas the Pan-American Exposition Company has undertaken to hold such exposition, beginning on the 1st day of May, 1901, and closing on the 1st day of November, 1901: Therefore

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulation as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for or actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings, or on the grounds, subject to such regulation for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation, and all penalties prescribed by law shall be applied and enforced against the persons who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal: And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this section, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the Pan-American Exposition Company, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That there shall be exhibited at said exposition by the Government of the United States, from its Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of the American Republics, such articles and material as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace, and its resources as a war power, and its relations to other American Republics, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaption to the wants of the people. And to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit, a board of management shall be created, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as the heads of the several Departments and the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the Commissioner of Labor, and the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics may respectively decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit.

The President may also designate additional articles for exhibition. Such board shall be composed of one person to be named by the head of each Executive Department, one by the head of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, one by the head of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, one by the Commissioner of Labor, and one by the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics. The President shall name one of said persons so detailed as chairman, and the board itself shall appoint its secretary, disbursing officer, and such other officers as it may deem necessary. The members of said board of management, with other officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed to assist them, including officers of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but they shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, while necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board.

Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive this allowance in lieu of the transportation and mileage now allowed by law. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with the Pan-American Exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine. The disbursing officer shall give bond in the sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation for the Government exhibit, not exceeding at any one time three-fourths of the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of said exhibit as authorized by the board of management herein created.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building or buildings to be erected on the site selected for the Pan-American Exposition for the Government exhibits, from plans to be approved by the board, and he is hereby authorized and directed to contract therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States; but the contract for said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $200,000, said sum being hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of such building or buildings, or the material composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the city of Buffalo or to the said Pan-American Exposition Company to purchase the same at an appraised value, to be ascertained in such manner as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That the United States shall not be liable on account of said exposition for any expense incident to or growing out of same, except for the construction of the building or buildings hereinbefore provided for, and for the purpose of paying the expense of selection, preparation, purchase, installation, transportation, care, custody, and safe return of exhibits by the Government, for the employment of proper persons as officers and assistants by the board of management created by this act and for their expenses, and for the maintenance of the said building or buildings and other contingent expenses, to be approved by the chairman of the board of management, or in the event of his absence or disability, by such other officer as the board may designate and the Secretary of the Treasury upon itemized accounts and vouchers; and the total cost of said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $200,000; nor shall the expenses of said Government exhibit for each and every purpose connected therewith, including transportation, exceed the sum of $300,000, amounting in all to not exceeding the sum of $500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the board of management hereinbefore created, of which not exceeding the sum of $10,000 shall be expended for clerical services: Provided, That no liability against the Government shall be incurred, and no expenditure of money under this act shall be made, until the officers of said exposition shall have furnished the Secretary of the Treasury proofs to his satisfaction that there has been obtained by said exposition corporation subscriptions of stock in good faith, contributions, donations, or appropriations from all sources for the purposes of said exposition a sum aggregating not less than $500,000.

SEC. 5. That medals, with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said pan-American exposition, and of the awards to be made to the exhibitors thereat, shall be prepared at some mint of the United States for the board of directors thereof, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1893, upon the payment of a sum not less than the cost thereof; and all the provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act against the counterfeiting or imitation of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals struck and issued under this act.

SEC. 6. That the United States shall not in any manner nor under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, proceedings, or representations of said Pan-American Exposition Association, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for any subscriptions to the capital stock, or for any certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued by said corporation, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses of any kind whatever attending such corporation, or accruing by reason of the same.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred, nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said commission in excess of appropriations made by Congress therefor.

SEC. 8. That the appropriation herein made of $500,000 in all shall take effect and become available immediately upon the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COX. I demand a second.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. COX, will take their places as tellers.

The question was taken; and Mr. PAYNE reported 97 in the affirmative.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn; 97 votes in the affirmative and none in the negative. A second is ordered, and twenty minutes will be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and twenty minutes by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, with the remark that this bill has in its favor the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means, I yield to my colleague [Mr. ALEXANDER], who introduced the bill, such time as he may desire.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, it is proposed by the people of Buffalo and western New York to hold a pan-American exposition in 1901. It is to be international in its character, but confined to the countries of North, South, and Central America. At the last session of Congress Senate concurrent resolution No. 141, approved by the President on July 8, 1898, gave encouragement to this enterprise; and based upon that encouragement and recognition by Congress the people of Buffalo and of western New York took up the matter with great energy.

They have practically secured recognition from at least three countries of Central and South America; they have received assurances from a large number of exhibitors from Central and South America that their exhibits will be transferred after the close of the Paris exposition to the pan-American exposition at Buffalo; they have received substantial assurances that State exhibits of a most generous character will be made by Mexico and Brazil; they have received satisfactory assurances that Canada will come in force, making an exhibit representative of the wonderful resources of the large domain which lies upon the north. Upon these assurances our people have taken up the matter with so much energy that within thirty days the sum of a million and a half of dollars was raised to carry it on, a sum to be supplemented by one million more. The general assembly of the State of New York, with the approval of Governor Roosevelt, has added three hundred thousand more, so that there is to-day the equivalent of $1,800,000 ready to be devoted to the purposes of this exposition.

And now, Mr. Speaker, we come here not asking Congress for one dollar for an appropriation to carry on or to pay the expenses of this exposition. We propose to pay for that ourselves. We simply want Congress to make it possible for the United States to put up an exhibit of its own, as Brazil and Mexico have practically promised to do. We ask only that Congress shall treat us as she treated Chicago, Atlanta, New Orleans, Nashville, Omaha, and other cities in which expositions have been held; that the Government may send us a splendid exhibit, showing the magnificent growth and progress of the world's great Republic during the nineteenth century.

Mr. Speaker, the idea of this exposition had its inception when the great cataract of Niagara was successfully harnessed so that its tremendous water power could be converted into electric power. Our purpose is to demonstrate to the world, and especially to the Western Hemisphere, that Niagara Falls is not only capable of, but now is developing, a power greater than is known elsewhere in the whole world, and we desire to make this exposition a celebration of that event, surely one of the greatest that has happened in the history of world. In such an endeavor Congress ought cheerfully and gladly to have this country participate, and by a generous appropriation to aid us in fittingly illustrating the marvelous development of the Western Hemisphere during the present century by a complete and satisfactory display of the arts, industries, and manufactures and the products of the soil, of the mines, and of the sea. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SIMS]. [A pause.] As I do not see the gentleman in his seat, I will yield twelve minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I am opposed to this measure; indeed, from what I know of it, I think I am in favor of it. But for a few minutes I want to speak upon another question; and with the indulgence of the House I will take this opportunity to submit a few facts given me by Mr. Thomas G. Shearman, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

On last Saturday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in a speech on this floor quoted from the celebrated speech of Hon. Thomas Corwin, of the State of Ohio, in which that gentleman said:

Were I a Mexican, as I am an American, I would welcome your soldiers with bloody hands to hospitable graves.

The gentleman from Ohio followed that quotation by saying:

For that utterance he (Mr. Corwin) died a broken-hearted man—absolutely repudiated by the men of his own party—and went down to his grave with regret upon his lips that he had ever made that utterance.

Mr. Speaker, the quotation made by the gentleman from Ohio from Mr. Corwin's speech is absolutely correct; but his statement which follows it is absolutely false, and I propose to give the country the facts. I know the gentleman from Ohio is looked upon as the historian and statistician of the present Administration. We here in the House know how he is in the habit of picking up blank pieces of paper and reading therefrom history! [Laughter.] To us his statements would make very little difference; but the country at large has a great deal of confidence in his statements, and therefore the incorrect statement which I have just read ought to be corrected.

I do not want it to go to the country that the statement was correct. For I believe it was made in the House and before the country to influence men in their support of the Administration with reference to its policy in the far-off Philippine Islands. In fact, Mr. Speaker, some statesmen on this side of the House did "wabble" a little, and evinced something of a desire to commend that policy, showing that the statement of the gentleman at least had some effect even in this body.

Now, as to the facts in the matter. Of course Senator Corwin was violently abused by the Democrats of that day, who were then the war party; but that speech made him popular all over the North, and not unpopular even in the South. He made that speech in the summer of 1846. Horace Greeley republished it in full in the Tribune Almanac for 1848, which was issued in December, 1847; thus showing that the leaders of the Whig party were proud of the speech even after the lapse of eighteen months.

In the autumn of 1846 the Whigs at the then pending election swept the country on the platform of their opposition to the Mexican war; and Corwin's own State of Ohio doubled the Whig majority of 1844, and his own county gave a larger Whig majority in this year on a smaller popular vote than it had theretofore given.

Corwin's term as Senator did not expire until March, 1851, so that he could not be a candidate for anything. Long before his term expired President Fillmore appointed Corwin Secretary of the Treasury, which was then, as now, really the most honorable post in the Government. This office he held until March, 1853, when Fillmore's term came to an end, and of course a new Cabinet was appointed. Meanwhile, Benjamin F. Wade had been elected to succeed Corwin in the Senate, and Wade was an even more bitter opponent of the Mexican war than Corwin, while he was also an Abolitionist, which Corwin was not.

Corwin did not return to public life until 1858, for the simple reason that he was too conservative to join the Republican party until then. His Mexican war speech had given him a reputation at home, which he seriously damaged by advising Fillmore to sign the fugitive-slave law in 1850. When, however, he made up his mind to join the Republican party, he was elected to Congress in 1858 and reelected in 1860. He resigned early in his second term, simply because he was appointed by President Lincoln minister to Mexico. The very fact of his appointment to Mexico was a most significant mark of approval of his famous Mexican war speech. He might have held this office indefinitely, but resigned in 1864, on account of his health, and, I believe, died in 1865, when he was over seventy years old.

Now, you see that instead of Mr. Corwin dying broken hearted, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, after the Mexican war speech, he lived many years afterwards; lived to an old age and was the idol of his party, and was more popular than ever on account of that speech, as is evidenced by the marks of approval of his party on many occasions.

I only took this occasion, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to set right a misstatement of history made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am a little solicitous now about the time of this debate, and would like gentlemen on the other side to consume a portion of their time.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman does not desire to speak, I will ask a vote upon the question.

Mr. COX. I will yield a part of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 5260. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10403. An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States. The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 164. An act to provide for the construction of a public building at Butte City, Mont.;

S. 346. An act providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle in the State of Washington;

S. 706. An act to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a public building at Oakland in the State of California;

S. 926. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Beaumont, Tex.;

S. 1896. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Salt Lake City, capital of Utah;

S. 1271. An act for a public building at the city of Wilkesbarre, Pa., and appropriating money therefor;

S. 98. An act to provide for the purchase of sites for public buildings in the cities of Hastings and Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska;

S. 2048. An act for the erection of a public building at Fergus Falls, Minn.;

S. 244. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Joplin, in the State of Missouri;

S. 109. An act for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak.; and

S. 927. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Abilene, Tex.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11916. An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11879. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the War Department, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed of the Report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies for the use of the Home.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, 1901.

The House resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 12064) to encourage the holding of a Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, when an attempt was made recently to pass this bill under a motion to suspend the rules I objected to its passage and raised the point of no quorum. I did so for these reasons: When the bill was originally introduced, something like a year ago, I received the impression that this exposition was to be purely local, purely in the interest of the city of Buffalo alone, and that it was not to be an exposition of national importance.

I also received the impression at that time that no appropriations from the National Treasury to assist this exposition would be asked for in the future, and without making any further inquiry, and without receiving any further or additional light upon the subject, I interposed my objection when the bill came up the other day. But I have investigated the matter, and I find that this exposition at Buffalo is not to be local to that city or to that region, but is to be what the name implies, a pan-American "national" exposition.

Now, the city of Atlanta, the city of New Orleans, and the city of Omaha, having received this national recognition and assistance, I certainly would be the last man in the world to draw the line as against the city of Buffalo, this exposition being, in my judgment and according to my information, along the lines of national importance. For that reason I shall give it my support.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill, and that the amendments be consecutively numbered and the bill printed, and that the House agree to a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take up the naval appropriation bill, nonconcur in the Senate amendments, have the amendments printed and numbered in proper order, and agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Pending the question of unanimous consent, I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD]—I understand that the Senate has amended that portion of the bill in reference to armor plate.

Mr. SOUTHARD. So I understand.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask him if his committee are willing to allow the House to have a separate vote on that proposition?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I do not know that I have anything to say about that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that if the bill goes to the committee and is reported back to the House, then, as a matter of right, it can be called up for a vote on that question.

The SPEAKER. If the conference committee should agree, the conference report would have to be accepted as a whole or rejected as a whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand it, then, there will be no opportunity to demand a separate vote on that question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not unless the conference report is voted down.

The SPEAKER. There would be no opportunity as of right. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I would have objected if I could have forced a separate vote on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Am I entitled to a separate vote on that proposition now, if I demand it?

The SPEAKER. Not now, because if objection is made the bill will go to the committee, and when it comes out of the committee will go to the Committee of the Whole, on the new Senate proposition. Then, when it is in Committee of the Whole, there will be a vote on that, if the amendment is what the gentleman states. That would be the practical disposition of the case. Perhaps the matter had better be laid aside until the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs comes in, and he may be able to arrange with the gentleman from Alabama satisfactorily. Without objection, the bill will be printed and the amendments numbered, and the bill will remain on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, 1901.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12064) to encourage the holding of a Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901.

Mr. PAYNE. Unless gentlemen on the other side desire to occupy time, I ask for a vote.

Mr. COX. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fifteen minutes.

Mr. COX. I yield five minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am not up here to make a political speech, but I expect to vote on this bill, and perhaps many others like it if I am here long. I have no criticism to make of the gentlemen, members of the House from New York, who favor this bill, and I know that Atlanta, Ga.; Nashville, Tenn.; Omaha, Nebr., and perhaps other places have received similar help, and I know others are coming to ask in the future for the same kind of help in almost arithmetical progression ratio. Now, we believe, or at least I do, and I hope we all do, in taxation for Government and for public purposes only. We believe in a tariff for revenue only, for taxation for revenue only, and we believe, at least I do, that the revenue when collected should be expended for Government purposes only.

Now, I want to know what Government purpose there is in any of these expositions? Does it materially help those exhibits in the Smithsonian Institution and the National Museum to be junketed around over the country at public expense when they have expensive buildings in the city of Washington in which to keep them, with employees paid out of the Government Treasury to take care of them? Does it do them any good to send them to Nashville, Buffalo, or anywhere else to be exhibited?

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a precedent. Others have been set, and it is time we had a stop put to it. We have got to draw the line somewhere, and I think this is as good a time to make it as anywhere else.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. As a citizen of the State of Tennessee, when the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] voted against that appropriation for an exhibition there, I think that he did right. I would not lay down principle for locality and local convenience. Now, my friends, so long as Government bonds are in existence, and the interest to be paid, and that interest to be collected by taxation, I am going to vote against all such schemes as this, and I know I am conscientious in doing so and think I am right. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was just about to ask the gentleman if he would have objected if the line had been drawn on Tennessee?

Mr. SIMS. I said the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] did right, and I was then a citizen of Tennessee. I think this answers your question. Now I yield to the gentleman from New York for a question.

Mr. SULZER. I want to ask the gentleman if an exhibit of the Government of the United States and the whole people was a benefit?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; but would it be right, and what good would it do to the people of Oregon, who have paid part of that appropriation? It is said that these things are necessary that the Government may exhibit. Is the Government in the exhibiting business? Does the Government want to make a show, when it has the National Museum, the Smithsonian Institution, and other places where such things are kept? Are all people interested in junketing them all over the country in order that they may make a show instructive?

Mr. SULZER. Do you know that this pan-American exposition will benefit the people of the whole country?

Mr. SIMS. Why, Mr. Speaker, every little show that is got up has some sort of a "pan" name to it or some string, in order to get a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Tennessee show had.

Mr. SIMS. It had something to popularize it, and I do not criticize gentlemen who voted for the Tennessee appropriation; but I am not estopped by it; and this thing is going on and increasing each year. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that whenever the surplus of the Treasury is reduced below $100,000,000 you will see a bond issue to supply the gold reserve. We are simply aiding in that very thing in voting for any such measure as this.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I think I have three minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. COX. I am glad to hear it. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] and reserve the other five for myself.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to warn my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia desires that the House should be in order, and the gentleman from Georgia has the right to have the House be in order. The Chair will be obliged to mention members by name if they do not take their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to have order, and gentlemen ought to listen to me, especially while I warn my friend from Tennessee to get off the track. I supposed he was here on yesterday and saw me get onto it. If he was, he found what they did for me. [Laughter.] Now, I want to inform him. This business is one I know is progressive. My experience here is this, and this is the idea I want to suggest. I have heard men in Congress, about the Fifty-third Congress—a number of you over there—and in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and now comes my friend in the Fifty-fifth Congress, making speeches against these exhibits; that is, the Government aiding in these expositions.

I have observed these same men in the Fifty-third Congress who made constitutional speeches against them and said they were not authorized by the Constitution came back in the Fifty-fourth Congress and asked for an appropriation themselves. Now, be careful. [Laughter.] I might go farther back than the Fifty-third Congress. Some of you remember that our distinguished friends in the Fifty-second Congress made some very strong constitutional arguments against appropriations for Chicago and in the Fifty-third Congress came back here and asked for a similar appropriation. Somehow or other they had been enlightened on this subject. It seems that we are progressing all the time in these methods of making appropriations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might say something about the Treasury, but my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has exhausted that question. I suppose he has, for I have not heard from him on this bill. [Laughter.] I might say that it was inopportune now to make this appropriation, that the Treasury was loaded down far beyond its capacity, but what good does that do? No man dare stand here and oppose these appropriations. I know he dare not do it, for I have received the effects of trying to stop a thing of that sort. [Laughter.] Now, I want to call the attention of my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to this fact: Has he not any sympathy for that old Smithsonian exhibit? Are you never going to let up on it? Do have it varnished up a little and repaired before you carry it to Buffalo. [Laughter.] Give us a creditable show.

Mr. MAHANY. We will "put it off at Buffalo." [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDOX. Well, put it off at Buffalo; but I hope you will first put it in better condition than when I last saw it. Go down and look at it and have it fixed up a little before you take it to New York. Do not let them destroy it, but put it in a good condition, preserve it, because we are going to need it at St. Louis. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. We will all be with you.

Mr. MADDOX. And probably we shall need it somewhere else.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was not the last time that the gentleman saw the exhibit at Atlanta, Ga.? [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDOX. No; it has been at several places since then; at Nashville and at Omaha. I told you that the thing was progressing, and it is going so fast that the gentleman from Missouri can not keep up with it. Of course this exhibit was at Atlanta, and if we have had one in Georgia, of course we must vote for every one that is to be had for all time. That is the method of legislation that I was talking about the other day. There is no end to this sort of business.

Mr. MAHANY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can imagine anything much more conducive to the industrial progress and commercial prosperity of the United States than these expositions carried on in different States of the Union?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. MAHANY. What?

Mr. MADDOX. Reduce the tariff. [Laughter.] Restore silver to its proper place, and your expositions would not be a mite as compared to a mountain. Anything else? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, I regard the tariff as a settled question.

Mr. MADDOX. I believe myself it is a settled question so far as your side is concerned. We will have to direct our attention to a direct tax to aid the Dingley tariff bill. That is what we will have to do. I do not care to say anything more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words in favor of this bill. In my judgment it ought to pass without a dissenting vote. It is a good bill in every respect—in every sense of the word. There should be no opposition to it from any fair-minded man.

We have been talking and legislating for years and years about pan-American unity, fraternity, and closer commercial relations and intercourse. If this bill becomes a law and the Pan-American Exposition is held at Buffalo in 1901, it will do more, in my judgment, to bring those desirable objects about than everything else that has ever been done.

I am in sympathy with the objects of this exposition, and I believe it will do more for American trade, business, and commerce than we can possibly conceive of at the present time. It is sure to aid and help every portion of the Union. If this bill passes, it will be one of the best, one of the most unique, and one of the grandest expositions ever held on this continent. It is sure to be a great success in every way. It will be a grand object lesson to every citizen of the Republic and to the people of the South and Central American States. It will be a liberal education to many. It will bring us in closer contact with our neighbors in South and Central America.

It will give us a clearer and a better knowledge of the products of the field, the farm, the forests, the mines, and the seas from Baffin Bay to Cape Horn, and it will all be done by ocular demonstration. I am in favor of these expositions, and I believe the Government should lend its aid by being represented as an exhibitor. Money spent in this way is well spent.

All honor and all success, I say, to the farsighted and enterprising citizens of Buffalo who have undertaken this magnificent and commendable project. May prosperity attend their worthy efforts. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to be a member of the committee which reported this bill favorably to the House. Of course I can not in two minutes undertake to present fully the considerations which induced me to agree to a favorable report and which will lead me to support the measure in the House.

Mr. Speaker, we are singular human beings anyhow. A few years ago Illinois wanted an exposition at Chicago, and every Illinois member voted for it, while some members from Georgia and Tennessee voted against it. A few years later Georgia wanted an exposition at Atlanta, and every member from Georgia voted for that exposition, while a few members from Tennessee and Illinois voted against it.

A few years later Tennessee wanted an exposition, and every member of the House from Tennessee earnestly supported that measure, while a few from Illinois and Georgia voted against it. A few years later Nebraska wanted an exposition, and a similar division of sentiment on this floor was developed. Now New York wants an exposition, and all of the New York members are in favor of it, while some of us from Tennessee and some from Nebraska and some from Illinois, who favored expositions in their own States, are opposed to this.

For myself, having voted for the exposition at Atlanta and for the exposition at Nashville, I can not, consistently with my own feelings, vote against this proposition, which I think is highly meritorious. I shall therefore vote for this exposition at Buffalo.

Mr. COX. Will my colleague allow me a single suggestion?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, as I understand, is casting his vote against his own judgment for the sake of maintaining his character for consistency.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, I am not; because if another exposition were proposed next year at Nashville and there were sufficient reasons for it, I should again vote in favor of the proposition. I am unlike my colleague [Mr. Cox], who says that he would not do so. After the lapse of another hundred years—and I hope my colleague will live until that time—we may have another centennial celebration in Tennessee. I hope my colleague will be in Congress at that time and will vote for that celebration. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Oh, I shall be here as long as you are. [Laughter.] The gentleman need not trouble himself about that.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. The gentleman from Tennessee will allow me to say that I do not think any member of the Nebraska delegation is opposed to this proposition.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have witnessed and I have regretted the very state of affairs which has been recited, first by the gentleman from Georgia, and later by the gentleman from Tennessee who has immediately preceded me. For eight years, as a member of this House, I have steadfastly resisted every appropriation of this kind, but I have never succeeded in defeating a single one. In the progress of events gentlemen have reached a point where they are not content to take a mere appropriation; they have now gone much further than ever before, and when this bill was presented to the Committee on Ways and Means it was entitled "A bill to authorize and encourage" the holding of this exposition.

The first section of the bill provided that there should be held at or near the city of Buffalo, etc., an exposition, thus asserting the power of Congress to go into the several States of this Union and authorize the holding of expositions. To me this was a grave objection, because it asserted a power in the General Government which I know does not exist, and this phase of the question seemed to me vastly more important than the mere expenditure of the money. I therefore said to gentlemen in charge of that bill that if they would cut that section out altogether, and amend the title so as to remove that objectionable feature, which asserted the power of the Federal Government to authorize the holding of an exposition in any State of the Union, and leave it a mere naked proposition to appropriate money for the Government's own exhibit, I would agree that they might have the appropriation. In other words, Mr. Speaker, I promised them if they would refrain from asserting what I considered a dangerous principle I should not object to the appropriation of the amount proposed.

They have kept their part of that compromise, and I intend to keep mine. [Applause.] I intend to vote for this bill, not because I believe that this or any similar bill should pass the House, but simply because I know it will be impossible to defeat it and I want this provision out of it. This kind of favor has been extended to so many other communities, and I am sure no discrimination will be made against the people of Buffalo.

This proposition does not commit the Government to anything except to pay its own expenses for its own exhibit there, and it is as unobjectionable as such a bill can possibly be made. No such bill can be satisfactory to me, and this one would not command my vote if it were a naked question of the appropriation of this amount of money for the purpose contemplated; but under the circumstance I think I am doing the best that can be done; but I desire now to emphasize my protest against all such legislation in the future.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow an interruption just there?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman if any Government purpose in which the people of this country are interested is to be subverted by this appropriation?

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the gentleman frankly, in my judgment, no. I think it is the function of the Government to govern and not to hold expositions for the benefit of any State or of any city or of the people in any part of the country. But, on the other hand, it may be said that the expenditure of money to make a Government exhibit involves no such objection as would necessarily be involved in the provision authorizing the holding of an exposition of any kind in a sovereign State of the Union.

Mr. SIMS. But making a Government exhibit at all places the Government in a false position in connection with these matters, and is it not merely a subterfuge to get Government aid?

Mr. BAILEY. I quite agree with the gentleman from Tennessee. But if the Government has objects of curiosity and objects of interest to the people of the country at large, it is the right of the Government to carry them where it pleases and allow the people the opportunity to examine them. That is the only question here, and this bill in its present shape involves only an appropriation for that purpose, while the proposition as it came before the committee involved the exercise of what I conceive to be a dangerous and a doubtful power. I made the compromise on this bill believing that it was better than to establish a precedent which I regarded not only as dangerous but as unconstitutional.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Sims) there were—ayes 141, noes 16.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

OHIO CENTENNIAL AND NORTHWEST TERRITORY EXPOSITION AT TOLEDO, OHIO.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 12103) to encourage the holding of the Ohio Centennial and Northwest Territory Exposition at the city of Toledo, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it is desirable to encourage the holding of the Ohio Centennial and Northwest Territory Exposition at the city of Toledo, in the State of Ohio, in the year 1902 or 1903, as the Ohio general assembly may hereafter determine, for the exhibition of the resources of the United States of America, Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, and the progress and civilization of the American countries, and for a display of the arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil, mine, and sea; and

Whereas it is desirable to commemorate by an appropriate naval display the important victory of Commodore Perry in the western waters of Lake Erie, beside which waters said exposition is located; and

Whereas it is desirable for its historical and educational effect that there be given an exhibition of the Indians of North America, and especially the tribes of the old Northwest Territory; and

Whereas it is desirable that an exhibition shall be made of the great staples of the original Northwest Territory and Ohio Valley region, which contribute so largely to domestic and international commerce; and

Whereas encouragement should be given to an exhibit of the arts, industries, manufactures, and products illustrative of the progress and development of that and other sections of the country; and

Whereas such exhibition should be international as well as national in its character, in which the people of this country, of Mexico, the Central and South American governments, and other states of the world should participate, and should, therefore, have the sanction of the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas it is desirable and will be highly beneficial to bring together at such an exposition the people of the United States and other states of this continent; and

Whereas the Ohio Centennial Company, a corporation, has undertaken to hold such exposition, beginning on the 1st day of May, 1902 or 1903, and closing on the 1st day of November, 1902 or 1903: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be exhibited by the Government of the United States at said Ohio Centennial and Northwest Territory Exposition from the Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of American Republics such articles and materials as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government, its resources as a war power, and its relations to other American republics, and to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of said Government exhibit a board of management shall be created, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as the heads of said Departments and institutions of the Government may respectively decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit.

The President may also designate additional articles for exhibition. Such board shall be composed of one member to be detailed by the head of each Executive Department, one by the head of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, one by the head of the United States Fish Commission, one by the Commissioner of Labor, and one by the Director of the Bureau of American Republics. The President shall name one of said persons so detailed as chairman, and the board itself shall appoint its secretary, disbursing officer, and such other officers as it may deem necessary. The members of said board of management, with other officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed to assist them, including officers of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but they shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, while necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board.

Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive this allowance in lieu of the transportation and mileage now allowed by law. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with the Ohio centennial and Northwest Territory exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine. The disbursing officer shall give bond in the sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation for the Government exhibit, not exceeding at any one time three-fourths of the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of said exhibit as authorized by the board of management herein created.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building or buildings, from plans to be approved by the board of management, to be erected on the site selected at the Ohio centennial and Northwest Territory exposition for the Government exhibit; and he is hereby authorized and directed to contract therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States; but the contract for said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $200,000, said sum being hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The Secretary of the Treasury shall dispose of such building or buildings or the material composing the same after the close of the exposition, giving preference to the city of Toledo or the Ohio Centennial Company to purchase the same at an appraised value, to be ascertained in such manner as the President and Secretary of the Treasury may determine; and whatever sum may be so realized shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of paying the expenses of the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, installation, care, and return of said Government exhibit, and for the employment of proper persons as officers and assistants by the board of management created by this act and for their expenses, and for the maintenance of the building hereinbefore provided for, and for other contingent expenses incidental to the Government exhibit, to be approved by the chairman of the board of management, or in the event of his absence or disability by such other officer as the board may designate, upon itemized accounts and vouchers, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the board of management hereinbefore created, of which not exceeding the sum of $10,000 shall be expended for clerical service: Provided, That no liability against the Government shall be incurred and no expenditure of money under this act shall be made until the officers of said exposition shall have furnished the Secretary of the Treasury proofs to his satisfaction that there has been obtained by said exposition corporation subscriptions of stock in good faith, contributions, donations, or appropriations from all sources for the purpose of said exposition, a sum aggregating not less than $500,000, nor until the State of Ohio shall by legislative enactment have appropriated a sum of money equal to that herein appropriated.

SEC. 4. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exhibition to sell, for delivery at the close of the exposition, any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on its grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation, and all penalties prescribed by law shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal: And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this section, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the Ohio Centennial Company, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 5. That medals, with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said Ohio centennial and Northwest Territory exposition and of the awards to be made to exhibitors thereat, be prepared at some mint in the United States for the board of directors thereof, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1893, upon the payment by the Ohio Centennial Company of a sum not less than the cost thereof; and all the provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act against the counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals struck and issued under this act.

SEC. 6. That the United States shall in no manner and under no circumstances be liable for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of any kind whatever of the said Ohio Centennial Company, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of said exposition, nor for any amount whatever in excess of the $500,000 herein authorized; and the heads of the Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of American Republics, and the board of management herein authorized, their officers, agents, servants, or employees, shall in no manner and under no circumstances expend or create any liability of any kind for any sum in excess of the appropriations herein made or create any deficiency.

SEC. 7. That at the close of the Ohio centennial and Northwest Territory exposition the exhibits of the United States Government shall be returned to the several departments or bureaus from which they were received; and such collections as may be acquired by the board by purchase, preparation, gift, or otherwise, illustrating the natural resources, industries, customs, and commerce of the other American republics, shall be placed for permanent preservation in the United States National Museum.

SEC. 8. That the appropriation herein made, of $500,000 in all, shall take effect and become available immediately upon the proof being made to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the conditions prescribed in section 3 of this act have been complied with.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LACEY. How many more of these bills are there?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, but a mathematical one. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Tennessee are recognized to control the time. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. I just want to know how much you are going to take?

Mr. SOUTHARD. We ask for the same as that asked for in the Buffalo bill.

Mr. SIMS. Five hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes. This bill is similar in its wording to the Buffalo bill, and asks for the same appropriation for a similar purpose.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Do you know how many other bills there are here to put up public shows at the expense of the Government?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I think there are none. I do not know of any.

Mr. COX. This is the last, then?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I think I have answered the gentleman's question.

Mr. COX. One more word and I am done.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. COX. When is this show business to stop?

Mr. LOUD. Never!

Mr. SOUTHARD. It ought not to stop until after this exposition has been held. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. That is a right good reply; but I wondered how many more men would have similar bills here.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, the idea of holding an Ohio centennial and Northwest exposition did not originate in the city of Toledo, and I do not know that it originated in the State of Ohio. For a good many years the people of the State of Ohio have been talking about some appropriate celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of its admission into the Union as a State.

In 1803 Ohio was admitted as a State. It was the first State to be carved out of what was known as the old Northwest, or the Northwest Territory, which was, in a sense, the first public domain of the United States. When Ohio was admitted into the Union as a State she had 48,000 inhabitants. One hundred years later she will have a population one hundred times as great.

That which may be said of the growth and development of Ohio as a State—and we all agree that a good deal may be said—can be said of each one of the other States carved out of this Northwest Territory. There are five of them, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and a part of the State of Minnesota was originally included in this Northwest Territory.

As I say, the people of Ohio have been talking about this for a good many years, and last winter the project took shape in an act of the legislature providing for the holding of an Ohio centennial and Northwest Territory exposition in the year 1902. The legislature determined the place at which it should be held. They selected Toledo for a number of good reasons. One is that it is located most conveniently for the people of the old Northwest. Another is that it is located upon the lakes, and has the best possible site for the holding of a great national exposition.

The city of Toledo has already appropriated $150,000 for the preparation of the grounds, and will be obliged to appropriate $150,000 more, making $300,000 for the fitting up of the grounds on which to hold this centennial exposition.

Some of the other States, following the initiative taken by Ohio, have appointed commissions similar to that which was appointed in the State of Ohio. Indiana and, I understand, Michigan have appointed commissions similar to that appointed in Ohio, who are charged with the duty of promoting the Northwest Territory exposition on the part of those States.

A company known as the Ohio Centennial Company has been organized, with a capital of $500,000, for the purpose of promoting this project. Within a very few days after this company was organized, a few persons desired and offered to take all the stock. I am informed a large part of this stock has already been subscribed in small amounts, for it was thought desirable to have this stock subscribed for in small amounts rather than in large amounts, because of the greater interest which would thereby be created in the centennial. This is the course which will be pursued with reference to the stock which remains unsubscribed, as well as to any increase of the capital stock which may be made hereafter. Invitations already have been extended to all States of the Union to take part in this exposition, and many of them have responded in such a way as to lead to the belief that there is not a State in the Union that will not give some active support to this project.

It is proposed to make this exposition international in its character and not confine it to the United States. It will be international as well as national. It is one of the most meritorious projects which have ever been started. It will be one of the greatest expositions ever given in this country, not excepting that at Chicago, as I verily believe. The amount asked for is a very modest one, the same as that asked for in the Buffalo bill. The Committee on Ways and Means have favorably reported this bill. A report has been prepared which sets forth in detail all that has been done in the way of preparation of this exhibition. Doubtless many of you have read it; if so, you have undoubtedly become prepared to vote for it at this time.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, of course it is evident to everyone who witnessed the performance a few minutes ago that it is futile to say anything against this bill. But some gentleman said a while ago something about being consistent, and I was lectured that I ought to be consistent, and in order to show that I am consistent I should oppose this. But I do not put my opposition on that ground. I am no more in favor of a show in Ohio than in New York. I have no objection to a show in Ohio or any other State of the Union, provided that they do not call upon the national taxpayer for the money with which to run those shows. Now, it does seem to me, waiving the question of principle and looking at the expediency, that there is some difference in the time and the condition of the Treasury when Nashville and Atlanta were provided for and now.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see how any gentleman who voted for the other bill can vote against this; but I see that a great many have gone out of the Chamber. I suppose they are paired. I said that this thing was on the increase. I did not know then that there was another bill right on hand.

Now, what national purpose is to be served by holding a show in the Northwest Territory? No more than in one of the New England States, or one of the Southern States, Texas, or anywhere else. There is absolutely no Government purpose, no national purpose; but there is a community of interests to support these measures, right or wrong, it seems.

Now, as I said, waiving any objection to these expositions, I think they do good. But are we going to bleed the National Treasury for everything that may aid something somewhere and do some good to somebody or some locality? Is that an object of national taxation? Is that an object of your revenue laws, under which you are forcing by the power of the Government revenues from the people, whether they are able to pay them or not, and expend them to promote a locality? Whatever the Government may have done at the time the appropriations were made for Atlanta, Nashville, Omaha, or New Orleans, the conditions are different.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you not think that when old Virginia granted the Northwestern Territory to the Government it was the most generous act performed by any State in the history of mankind, and is it not worthy of celebration?

Mr. SIMS. It was certainly a generous act; but I am willing to let it rest at that and not tax the people at this time.

Now, I can see, waiving the question of principle, the different conditions that existed when the appropriations were made for Atlanta, Nashville, and Omaha, which are urged as precedents for this bill. We did not have a war on our hands at that time and the burdens of expense which have come on us since we were forced to war in the cause of humanity. We have had a bond issue made since that time. Then the burdens of an increased Army and Navy and war necessities have come upon us; and now you come and want us to make an appropriation for these shows. Do you ask for $200,000?—I believe that was what Atlanta got—or $130,000?—I believe that is what Nashville got. No! Five hundred thousand dollars in each case! Now, you gentlemen who voted for these other expositions, you see how you are doing. Instead of $330,000 for Nashville and Atlanta combined, you are here called upon for $1,000,000 for two shows. Now, what kind of justice is that? Are we estopped—

Mr. LENTZ. Did not the gentleman vote for the appropriation for the Nashville exposition?

Mr. SIMS. I was not here.

Mr. LENTZ. I am glad to hear your excuse for not voting.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I do not know what influence was brought to bear on gentlemen. I do not know what I would have done, but I do know that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who voted against that proposition, was severely criticised in Tennessee for doing so, and I know that as a citizen I defended him.

But I can not go back and do so much of it just now since his vote this morning for the Buffalo bill; but he is a man of great ability and great patriotism, and I do not question his motives. But then when the gentleman voted against the Nashville exposition I was a citizen of Tennessee. But then we had no war on hand, we had plenty of money, and we had been paying bonds out of the surplus at a premium. Now you are issuing bonds. Every dollar that goes out of the Treasury leaves that much less with which to pay Government obligations. Bond issues must follow; and I want to ask my friends on both sides of the House, when these bond issues follow, how are you going to answer your constituents when they say that you voted $1,000,000 for two shows? How are you going to answer them? Is it a national necessity? Is this a war emergency? Why, it is just that community of self-interest, I call it—I was going to use the word "plunder," but I would not say that.

How are the gentlemen who voted for these two shows going to vote against the St. Louis, or, to give it the national name, the Louisiana Purchase exhibition? This is called the Northwest Territory, but my friend from Ohio says it is the purpose to make it national. They all have the same purpose. National? How far? To the extent of an appropriation out of the National Treasury and no further. Of course, they are all national when they are a burden on the National Treasury, and that is all there is national about any of them; and I never intend to vote for a single one of them, for Tennessee or anywhere else. At a time when we are passing deficiency bills and everything of that sort, here you are voting $1,000,000 for two shows in eighty minutes, for it will take about that time when we get through with this.

I say they are going to be passed, because some gentlemen who helped you get a penny, so to speak, are going to help other gentlemen to get a dollar. Here it comes; and I want the people of the country to know where I stand on this matter, although it does not amount to much. Why, you can not get the yeas and nays. I asked for the yeas and nays, and two gentlemen got up with me. On this I do not suppose I will get a single one. If gentlemen have other things of this sort ready, why not bring them on now when we are in the temper to spend everything and issue bonds to increase the taxes? Some of the gentlemen yesterday railed against the French spoliation claims, perhaps justly, but they had a court's finding behind them. What has this got behind it? A purpose to make it national, and that is all there is to give it a national support. The only thing national about these shows is the national burden that they inflict upon the Treasury. Now I wish to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, my experience and observation on the floor of this House have demonstrated to my mind one fact, that whenever these appropriation bills come up, when the members from a certain locality want money from the Government to defray the expenses of these exhibitions, they are going to get it, and no amount of opposition on the part of the minority or anyone else is going to defeat these measures. But I want again to call the attention of the House to the unjust and unfair discrimination that has been made on the floor of this House during the present Congress, and at the hands of the present House, toward bills where the localities sought to be benefited are in one direction and others sought to be benefited are in another direction.

The gentleman from Ohio speaks of the people of his town having raised $500,000 to carry on this exhibition. The people of my town had raised $1,000,000 to carry on an exhibition, and I came before this House last spring and asked for the poor privilege of having goods carried across the Rio Grande border free of duty for the purpose of exhibiting at that fair, and it met with the most violent and strenuous opposition by the membership from a good many States on the floor of this House and of many members from the State of Ohio. I think, Mr. Speaker, such unfair treatment is wrong.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE. Is it proper to offer an amendment to this bill at this stage of the proceedings?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No amendment will be in order.

Mr. BURKE. If it was, I would offer an amendment appropriating the sum of $100,000 to aid the great Texas State fair and exhibition, and I venture the assertion that if it were offered it would not get five votes on that side of the House.

A MEMBER. Why not offer it?

Mr. BURKE. No, I have no desire to offer an amendment; even if it was competent and proper to do so, I would not do it. I am constitutionally opposed to appropriations of this character. I have never voted for a bill of this character since I have been a member of this House, nor shall I ever vote for one. I have never asked for the appropriation of a single dollar or a single cent for an exhibition in my own State or city, nor do I ever expect to do so.

Mr. Speaker, there might be a bill providing for an international exposition that I would vote for, but so far as my opinion extends and my views go, I believe that it is an improper policy. I believe it is wrong for the Government of the United States to appropriate these vast sums to carry on exhibitions that are purely local in their character. Why, sir, it is only a short time ago when the city of Philadelphia procured from this Congress $350,000 to carry on an exposition purely local in its character. To-day the city of Buffalo has secured half a million dollars to carry on an exposition purely local in its character.

And now the city of Toledo comes forward and asks that a similar favor be extended to her; that an appropriation be made of half a million dollars to carry on an exhibition in that city which is purely local in its character. I do not believe it is in accordance with the best interests of the people of this country that this should be adopted as the policy of the Government, for, Mr. Speaker, just as surely as I stand here, these things will come back to us in the future, and come back to worry, vex, and annoy the membership of this House.

I have nothing more to say; for nothing that I might say could change the predetermined purpose of this House to give this exposition the money it demands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1859. An act to provide for a public building at Winston, N. C.; and

H. R. 11803. An act directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by H. C. Newcomer, captain of engineers, in favor of Stone & Stansell.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4760 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. HANSBROUGH, and Mr. KENNEY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (the House of Representatives concurring): That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3466) entitled "An act granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill H. R. 6359, an act to quiet land titles in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

OHIO CENTENNIAL AND NORTHWEST TERRITORY EXPOSITION AT TOLEDO, OHIO.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, in these five minutes I want to combat the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE] that this is purely a local celebration. Great events in the history of nations are always worthy of celebration. The Declaration of Independence has perpetuated in the United States the Fourth of July as a national holiday. Sir, there has been no event in our national history of more significant importance than the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787—the drawing of the line at the Ohio River by the cession of the mother State of Virginia and the ultimate triumph of the grandeur of free States by the creation of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

The fact that this exposition is designed to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of that event lifts this celebration out of the category of purely local celebrations. This is to celebrate an event which marked an epoch in the history of a mighty nation—a gigantic stride over the mountains and outward and westward, whither the Star of Empire has ever since been taking its way.

The very fact that this celebration is to be located at Toledo, upon the border of the State of Ohio, hard upon the line of Michigan—right upon the Great Lakes—demonstrates that the purpose of its originators was to make it something greater and more comprehensive than a mere local celebration. Toledo, with 26 railroads centering there, with her magnificent facilities of water transportation, is one of the most eligible places for a celebration of this character.

We have gone steadily forward in this work. We have made appropriations of this character over and over again. We have appropriated for four celebrations of the same identical character. I can not conceive that any man who voted for or ever approved of the appropriation for the exposition in Tennessee, as I did, or for the exposition at Atlanta, as I did, or for the exposition at Philadelphia, as I did, or for that at New Orleans, as I did, or for those at Chicago and Omaha, as all of us did, can make any point which will depreciate this celebration as inferior in merit to either of those. I take it, Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives will not draw a discrimination simply upon a statement of the character of that which has been made here. I have entire confidence in the justice and fairness of the House; and I submit to the vote of the House the claims not of Ohio, not of Toledo, but of the mighty Northwest.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, when I saw that an appropriation had been made by Congress for the World's Fair at Chicago I thought it was extravagant, but when I saw the fair itself I felt that the money had been well expended. I look upon these expositions as educational institutions not inferior to any other. Every dollar that was spent for the Trans-Mississippi Fair was well expended. I had the privilege and the pleasure of witnessing that exposition, and I saw there that the exhibit at the World's Fair was repeated, but on a smaller scale. Each of those expositions will remain with me as part of my education—as contributing to my knowledge of the resources of this country and the world.

But, Mr. Speaker, this exposition which is proposed for the Northwest Territory will begin with one important and world-known fact. It will illustrate Perry's great victory on Lake Erie, and will couple with it a memorial of our naval victories of recent date, portraying and comparing the history of the past with the history of the last few months, and will commend itself to the educational needs and patriotism of every man, woman, and child in the whole country.

As a proposition standing alone, I am now in favor of bills of this character. And from the experience of the past few years which we have derived from these great expositions, dignified as they have been by the participation on the part of the Government of the United States, I believe that they are great educators of the people—not unlike our common-school systems and universities—and unless there be some special reason for opposition I shall expect to vote for every one of them in future that stands upon a reasonable basis.

Now, so far as the city of Toledo is concerned, it was selected by the legislature of the State of Ohio as the most accessible place for the fourteen or fifteen millions of population which center around that region—one-fifth of the population of the United States—and the city itself being accessible by no less than twenty-six different lines of railroads.

But, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the commemoration of Perry's victory, let me tell the gentleman from Tennessee, as a further reason in support of this bill, that in 1902—and this, I think, will suggest why he should support the bill—there will be on exhibition in that city a spectacle never before witnessed in the United States—three ex-Presidents enjoying the hospitality of the city of the Maumee, men who have dedicated their official career to the gold standard and have been retired to private life, ex-President Harrison, ex-President Cleveland, and ex-President McKinley [laughter on the Democratic side]; and this as a monument to the failure of a single gold standard ought to bring the whole Tennessee delegation to Toledo in 1902! This is a consideration which should appeal, I take it, not only to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], but to the people from all parts of the country.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, one of the first men I met when I came into the House of Representatives upon entering Congress was the genial, sunny-dispositioned gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. SIMS—nay, there were two, and I see the other on my right here, the honorable and altogether lovely Mr. COX. One of the first propositions presented to me for my consideration was a kind and urgent invitation from these gentlemen to visit the Nashville Exposition.

I was bidden by the genial Mr. SIMS to come to the hearthstone of hospitable Tennessee, as it would broaden my ideas and expand my notions of the greatness of his glorious State. He spoke with pride of the resources of his beloved Tennessee, and with glowing words delineated the grandeur and greatness of his Commonwealth. He said they had the longest rivers, the biggest mountains, the fastest and finest horses, and the prettiest women in all the world. [Laughter.] My good and eloquent friend Mr. COX joined in the chorus, and said, "Yes, yes, come; and when you do come I will show you something that will open your eyes, an 'eye opener' worthy of the world's admiration. I will show you a 'cascade' in Nashville that is something extraordinary, nay, simply marvelous." [Laughter and applause.] "Why, what I speak of is alone worth more than all the appropriation Congress made for us." [Continued laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I visited the Nashville Exposition, I looked upon those mountains and rivers, I admired their horses, I paid involuntary homage to the radiant and surpassing beauty of their women, and last, but not least, I drank deeply from the fountain from whence came the "Cascade." [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. COX. Of course you did.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Certainly. And I now affirm that for truth and veracity there are no greater statesmen than Messrs. COX and SIMS, of Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentlemen to cease their opposition to this bill. In the name of the State of Ohio and the great Northwest Territory, I invite you to support this bill and then come to Toledo.

We can show you the finest body of water—

A MEMBER. They do not want any water. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON of Ohio (continuing). Pardon me. I know the gentleman is not partial to water [laughter], but leave that out. Come to Ohio, the finest and best State in the Union.

Come to the very gateway of the business of the country. Come where we can give back to you the warm and generous hospitality extended to us by your grand and good people.

Come to the great Northwest, to a country and among a people worthy the consideration of a nation like ours—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I want to yield to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. MAXWELL].

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Speaker, in his message to Congress on March 15, 1897, President McKinley suggested the propriety, if not necessity, of changing the time of meeting of Congress to an earlier date. I then thought the suggestion was wise and should be acted upon by Congress, and, therefore, after waiting for some time for some partisan friend of the Administration to introduce such a bill, and no one responded, I introduced a bill changing the time of meeting of each new Congress to the 4th of March next following the election of its members.

This bill was referred to one of the leading committees of the House, but I have been unable to get the committee to report either for or against it. It seems to me there is merit in the bill, and I will briefly state some of the reasons for that belief. The first Monday in December was designated in the Constitution as the time for the meeting of Congress only until changed by statute. There were then but little more than 3,000,000 people in the United States, with but little commerce either inland or foreign; hence but little legislation was necessary in regard to such subjects.

The means of communication from one part of the country to another were exceedingly crude and primitive, and therefore speed in reaching the capital was almost impossible. A journey by land from Georgia, the Carolinas, or Virginia would occupy nearly a month, and upon the admission of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio about the same time would be required. And the prospective removal of the capital to a point on the Potomac River, while it equalized the distance between the Northern and Southern States, did not shorten the average length of the journeys of all the members. Hence it was necessary that a business man, whether a lawyer, merchant, farmer, or other occupation, if elected to Congress, must have sufficient time to arrange his business before leaving home, so that it would not suffer during his absence. Therefore he was given at least thirteen months after the election at which he was elected before he was required to enter upon his duties. All this is changed; almost every member can reach his home in twenty-four hours at the furthest, and in no case need it occupy more than four days.

We have grown from a nation of 3,000,000 to nearly 80,000,000, not counting the Filipinos, and are increasing in numbers rapidly. The next fifteen years will see our nation with more than 100,000,000 population, and wealth will keep pace with our increase in population. It is desirable that a legislative body elected upon a distinct issue should have an opportunity to respond to the issue upon which a majority at least were elected. Otherwise the occasion for the proposed legislation may have passed before any action by the legislative body can be had. Besides, if each new Congress should meet on March 4 after the election of its members, there would be sufficient time to discuss every feature of proposed legislation, which there is not under our present system.

It is a fact well known to every member of this House that when the Dingley tariff bill was reported to this House a time was fixed in advance when a vote would be taken upon it; that we met early each day and held night sessions, and still but little more than half of the bill had been gone over when the time fixed for the vote on the adoption or rejection of the bill was reached. That the Dingley bill, while it possesses many good features, is imperfect I believe its friends will not deny. There is no doubt that a full debate, and desire to make a perfect bill would have resulted in a more acceptable bill as every fair-minded person will, I think, admit. So, with many of the war measures more time in debate would have produced more acceptable measures.

I believe this House might adopt the Senate rules as to debate with profit, and benefit to the whole country. Why not permit debate to go on until all members have expressed their views? This practice of doling out five minutes, or one, two, or three minutes, as the case may be, for a member to express his views and reasons for or against a bill involving the appropriation of millions of dollars it may be, shows on its face the necessity for sufficient time for a careful consideration of the matter. Let us take time enough to do our work well if it takes the whole two years of the term. It seems to me the time has come for a change of the time when Congress assembles.

This House may be, and it should be the ambition of every member to make it, the model legislative body of the world; but in order to be so there must be free debate and each member be able to discuss in his own right all matters before the House for a reasonable time. I am informed there are more than 3,000 pension cases pending in this end of the Capitol, and probably about the same number in the other end. These, so far as my information extends, are largely those of men who fought in the ranks, who marched through sunshine and storm, and slept in the rain or on the wet or frozen ground often without adequate shelter. Yet they faltered not, but cheerfully obeyed all commands and bravely faced death to preserve the nation. Their comrades fell around them; they themselves were often severely wounded; they are now old and infirm and poor and need help. They have but few influential friends to press their claims. Even now, when cases have been considered and a pension agreed upon, the announcement is frequently made that the petitioner is dead, and the bill for his relief laid on the table. Hope deferred is doubly disappointing when there is a just claim for the performance of the duty. There are thousands of cases of destitution among the rank and file of the volunteer soldiers, and relief should be granted them as rapidly as possible by a steady and continuous examination of their claims until all are considered. This is a great, rich nation, and the American people are not only just, but generous, and desire that Congress shall grant relief now, and I earnestly hope that Congress will respond.

I desire to say, in conclusion, that the business of this House is conducted smoothly, in a friendly spirit, and with celerity and dispatch, and if Congress will meet at the time indicated it can dispose of all its business each year without undue haste. I have been treated with the utmost respect and courtesy by every member. The rulings of the Speaker have been fair and courteous, and each and all have my best wishes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the inducement given by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] to vote public money in order that we may see three gold-standard ex-Presidents assembled together all at once might be a good attraction for that show, but I am not willing to tax our 4-cent cotton raisers in the South in order to get them together. Of course, we have in Tennessee the prettiest women, the finest horses, and the finest country in the world.

A MEMBER. And the homeliest men. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. As to the "Cascade" business, I leave that to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON.] I do not take "Cascade" there or anywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. He is better acquainted with that "Cascade" than I am. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHWARD] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMS) there were—ayes 120, noes 19.

Mr. SIMS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 11 members rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN STREETS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 11629) for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue SE. to the District line.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 11629, "An act for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue SE. to the District line," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same amended as follows: On page 1 of the bill, line 14, strike out the words "in rem;" and on page 2 of the bill, in line 7, strike out from the words "And said proceedings" to and including the word "highways" in line 13; and in line 7 of the amendment, after the word "which," insert the words "in the judgment of the jury;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same amended as follows: In each of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the amendments strike out the words "begin suit for the condemnation of the land required" and insert in each instance the words "institute by a petition in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, a proceeding to condemn the land necessary;" and at the end of section 8 of the amendment insert a new section to stand as section 9, as follows:

"Sec. 9. That the proceedings for the condemnation of the lands as provided for in this act shall be under and according to the provisions of chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, which provide for the condemnation of lands in said District for public highways; and to provide the necessary funds for the cost of such condemnation proceedings the sum of $3,500 is hereby appropriated out of the funds of the District of Columbia: Provided, That each juror shall receive a compensation of $5 per day for his services during the time he shall be actually engaged in such services under the provisions of this act: Provided, That no appeal by any interested party from any decision of the supreme court of the District of Columbia confirming said assessment or assessments shall delay or prevent the payment of said awards in respect to the property condemned."

Also, in amendment numbered 4, in line 9, after the words "for the extension," insert "and widening."

Also, in amendment numbered 7 strike out, in line 7, after the word "act," down to and including "highways," in line 12.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 12, 13, 15, and 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Number the sections consecutively, and also amend the title to read: "An act for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue SE., and for other purposes;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, and 18, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 5 of said amendment, after the word "said," strike out "avenue" and insert in lieu thereof "streets or highways;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for the reading of the statement of the House conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Senate amended the House bill by adding to the streets to be opened Staughton street, for one block; Eckington place, for one block; Sherman avenue, from Florida avenue to Whitney avenue; Twentieth street, for a fraction of a block, and Howard avenue, for one block. Of all these extensions the only one of financial importance is Sherman avenue. The other openings are merely through the lands of individuals, all, or nearly all, of whose lands are taken and who receive no benefits.

The damages for the lands taken are to be paid by assessment on the property benefited and from the District revenues.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I understood in the reading of the report that in case of appeal from the decision of the court the right of collection should not be stayed, but that they could go on and collect, notwithstanding the appeal.

Mr. BABCOCK. After the approval of the action of the jury by the court no appeal will stay the proceedings for the opening of the streets, but the rights of all parties will be preserved.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Does it stay the collection?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then the party appealing from the assessment gets no benefit by the appeal, but they can go on and collect the damages against him. It seems to me that is not right.

Mr. BABCOCK. The object of the provision is to prevent a stay of the proceedings in the opening of a street. Under past experience street openings have been delayed in this way.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I can readily see that the project ought not to be stopped, but it does seem to me that if a man appeals from the assessment of benefits against him or in his favor the right to collect ought to be stayed while the appeal is pending. How do you save his rights, unless you do it in that way?

Mr. BABCOCK. The parties likely to appeal would be those who were dissatisfied with the amount of damages awarded to them. It does not affect their rights at all, but simply prevents a stay of proceedings in opening the streets.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the benefits assessed are unjust or the damages not adequate, how can the rights of the person against whom they are assessed be preserved under this provision?

Mr. BABCOCK. They go right on with the appeal. If the gentleman will read the provision he will see.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Gentlemen on the committee may have it in better shape than I understand. As I understand it, I do not think it right, but the committee ought to know whether the rights are properly saved.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF 8 STREET, IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I submit another conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11597) to extend 8 street, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, and 14, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert "institute by a petition in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, a proceeding to condemn the land necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same amended as follows: In section 2 of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out the words "commence suit for the condemnation of the remainder of the land required;" in each section 3 and section 4 strike out "begin suit for the condemnation of the land required" and insert in each instance the words "institute by a petition in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, a proceeding to condemn the land necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the words "two hundred and fifty" insert "two thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same amended as follows: In line 11 strike out "avenue" and insert in lieu thereof "streets or highways;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same amended as follows: In section 8 of the matter proposed to be inserted strike out the words "the Commissioners of the District of Columbia" and insert "said court;" and at the end of said section 8 add the following proviso: "Provided, That each juror shall receive a compensation of $5 per day for his services during the time he shall be actually engaged in such services under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That no appeal by any interested party from any decision of the supreme court of the District of Columbia confirming said assessment or assessments shall delay or prevent the payment of said awards in respect to the property condemned;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BABCOCK (during the reading of the report). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report of the committee of conference be suspended and that the statement of the House conferees be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the statement only be read. Is there objection?

Mr. DOCKERY. And the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears none.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The Senate amended the House bill by providing for the extension also of Sixteenth street, Eleventh street, and New Hampshire avenue. Bills for the extension of both Eleventh street and New Hampshire avenue had passed the House. The Senate urged that the opening of Sixteenth street, which outlines Rock Creek Park on the east, is of first importance in the extension of the streets and avenues of the District of Columbia; that it is the only extension of importance provided for west of Fourteenth street, and that for a considerable portion of the distance the land will be given.

The Senate amendment also provides for the assessment of damages, one-half on the lands benefited, and one-half to the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. You can call up the bill to which I objected temporarily yesterday. I have examined the bill; and if you desire to call it up, I think it is a very proper one.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I will call up the bill the gentleman refers to.

The SPEAKER. Is it a conference report?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; it is not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

RIGHT OF OFFICERS OF THE VOLUNTEER ARMY TO SEATS IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter of privilege, if I can have the attention of the House. I call up the resolutions that passed the House and were sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, to report upon the appointment of members of Congress to military and other offices. I would like to reach an understanding as to the length of debate in this matter.

Mr. LACEY. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa raises the question of consideration. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That JOSEPH WHEELER, a Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States from the Eighth district of the State of Alabama; EDWARD E. ROBBINS, a Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States from the Twenty-first district of the State of Pennsylvania; DAVID G. COLSON, a Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States from the Eleventh district of Kentucky, and JAMES R. CAMPBELL, a Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States from the Twentieth district of the State of Illinois, by accepting commissions in the Army of the United States and being mustered into such service after being sworn in as such Representatives thereby vacated their seats as such Representatives and ceased to be members of this House as of the dates they accepted such military offices, respectively, and are not now members of the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution just reported by the Clerk?

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 83.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 77, nays 164, answered "present" 7, not voting 102; as follows:

Mr. BARRETT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LENTZ. I withdraw my objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the naval appropriation bill from the Speaker's table.

Mr. BAILEY. For what purpose has the gentleman risen?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his purpose.

Mr. HILBORN. I desire to call up the naval appropriation bill and have it sent to conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to see if we can not have some arrangement with the gentleman in charge of the bill before the announcement is made. I would like to have it as a part of the unanimous-consent agreement that when the bill comes back from the conferees, if they do not agree on the question of armor or armor-plate factory, that we should be allowed a separate vote in the House on that proposition. I will ask the gentleman from California if he will not agree to that?

Mr. HILBORN. So far as I am personally concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing that the House should vote upon that separate proposition. Of course I can make no pledge as to what the committee will do, but so far as I can I will use my influence to bring that about.

Mr. DALZELL. What is the parliamentary situation?

Mr. HILBORN. The House bill has come from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to this bill and ask for a conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. HILBORN. I ask that a second may be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is seconded. The gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will each control twenty minutes of debate.

Mr. HILBORN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON].

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it will be necessary for me, as a member of the Naval Committee, to occupy even the five minutes yielded to me. It seems to me, sir, that every member of this House can readily understand the importance of getting this bill, which carries $44,000,000 and involves the maintenance of the Naval Department of this Government, into conference as speedily as possible, especially when I make the statement that a number of important amendments have been added to the bill by the Senate, many of which I think I can say are contrary to the views entertained by the House as manifested by it during the consideration of this measure.

By one amendment the number of ships has been cut down; by another, that in reference to dry docks, the action of the House and the Senate, which is law to-day, has been changed. More than that, the proposition comes at this late hour to virtually stop the armament of our naval vessels by an amendment which cuts down the cost of armor plate to $300 per ton. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to recall to the House the discussions on this subject which occupied us here for so long. It is not necessary for me to call the attention of the House to the fact that it was then stated that $445 per ton for armor plate was less than could secure the best armor plate.

But it is necessary for me to call the attention of the House to the fact that heretofore—I think three years ago—we undertook to place the price of armor at $300 per ton, and it was then ascertained that no one would furnish armor plate at such a price; and then this House, including the gentleman who had made the fight for $300 per ton, yielded almost without a dissenting voice, and the price was fixed at $400 per ton. And the Senate, which now sends us this amendment, agreed to that proposition almost without a dissenting voice.

The whole difficulty about this matter is that the Senate has put upon the armor-plate provision of this bill an additional clause requiring substantially but indirectly that the Government, without any proper consideration of the matter, shall involve itself in the project of building an armor-plate plant. Everybody knows that we can not secure this armor at $300 per ton, and therefore the additional proviso that the Senate has put upon the amendment, that we shall build an armor-plate plant, will have to be carried out by the Secretary of the Navy. The Senate has limited the cost of this plant to $1,500,000, in spite of the fact that all of the estimates show that we can not build it, we can not put the machinery in it, we can not put it in operation, for less than three million seven hundred and odd thousand dollars. This is the report of the very board which considered the question of the erection of an armor-plate plant by the Government.

Now, I have not time nor would it in any event be possible for me to discuss this question, which is sprung upon us here indirectly, in regard to the advisability of the Government building an armor-plate plant. But I want to say to gentlemen here, if you propose to do such a thing—to involve this Government in this expenditure against the recommendation of the experts who have reported upon the subject and from whose report I shall in a moment ask the Clerk to read an extract, showing that the project is utterly impracticable—I shall solemnly insist it is the duty of this House to go down to my State and buy several hundred thousand acres of coal lands, employ miners to mine the coal and then ship it to all these navy-yards. I shall insist that it is the duty of the Government to go out West, buy land and raise corn that will be necessary to furnish the food for the sailors who are to serve on our ships.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask the gentleman from California to give me a minute or two more in order that I may have read at the desk an extract from a report of the board appointed by the Government upon the practicability of this proposition.

Mr. HILBORN. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. DAYTON. One word before that extract is read.

Right here, in the midst of the closing hours of the session, with debate limited to twenty minutes, we are asked to embark upon this project. I urge gentlemen as earnestly as is in my power to do to abide by the unanimous decision of the Committee on Naval Affairs and let this matter at least go to conference, there to be settled and determined. Do not attempt to defeat the action of the Naval Committee and to overturn the former action of the House in this matter.

I ask the Clerk now to read the extract which I have marked. I hope every member will listen, for this is the report of the armor-plate board itself, and it disposes of this question of the Government building an armor-plate plant.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ascertain exactly the parliamentary situation of this question. We have a number of amendments from the Senate—

Mr. DAYTON. If the gentleman will permit me, my motion is to nonconcur in all of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I will state, if I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, that my objection was only to the extent of asking a separate vote on one of the amendments.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this colloquy will not come out of my time. I ask that the paper to which I have already referred shall be read from the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In accordance with your views that the Congress would wish from the board a statement in the rough of the practicability of putting up an armor plant, we respectfully submit the following considerations:

1. An armor factory comprises essentially a collection of special furnaces, heavy machine tools and appliances that are not needed in any other class of work, and a class of labor specially skilled in the business.

2. A Government armor factory not connected with an establishment engaged in other branches of the steel industry would depend for its success and economic administration upon a constant demand for an output nearly approaching its full capacity.

3. If the Government should establish an armor factory, the efficient and economic maintenance or working of that factory would necessarily depend upon a constant yearly appropriation for ships to be provided with armor, because the armor produced at any time must be specially designed for and fitted to those ships. Any failure to appropriate for ships in any one year would require the cessation of work and the laying off, indefinitely, of the skilled experts and laborers that had been trained to this industry. A resumption of work at a later period would require the training, at a considerable expense, of a new set of men. In the meantime the progress of the art would perhaps have been such that difficult and radical changes would be required, which, under continuous working, might have been gradually and easily made.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, the members present who have listened to the reading of this report will see that to embark on this work would be impracticable and useless. We would have to equip a factory. We would have to keep a set of men under pay who would not necessarily be constantly employed, but who would remain idle for a large part of the time; men who are competent, and who understand and have been educated in this business, and who will be compelled to embark in the general steel industry in competition with the steel manufacturing establishments of other countries.

In addition to that the $1,500,000 necessary to build such an establishment would have to be appropriated. The only purpose of the proposition is that we may be able to send abroad to some foreign country and purchase some plants now in existence, and use that for the establishment of an American armor-plate factory.

Now, we do not want the Government to be driven to that position, which will effectually punish our steel workers, involve the expenditure of an enormous sum of money, and be of no special advantage when it is accomplished.

Mr. LOW. In other words, we do not want the Government to become a competitor in our business industries.

Mr. DAYTON. No, sir; no more than in the coal business, to furnish naval vessels with coal, or in any other business which properly belongs to private enterprises; and for Congress to undertake to do that now on this bill is, in my judgment, a great mistake.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad, before the vote is taken on this proposition, to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to know exactly the status of the proposition now pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN] moves to suspend the rules and nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to be heard on that proposition.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is very unwise on the part of the House to suspend the rules so as to deprive the House of an opportunity to express itself on amendments to which reference has been made. We considered this matter very fully in the House when the question was before us. We fixed the price at $445 a ton, after mature deliberation. Now, I am willing to stand by the action of the House in that regard, and if the motion of the gentleman from California is voted down and we are permitted to vote on this separate amendment, I think the action of the House will be ratified, since it expresses more nearly the views of the House rather than the views which have been expressed in the amendment submitted by the Senate.

Mr. DAYTON. But this proposition is only to let the matter go into conference.

Mr. HOPKINS. Of course, I understand that. But there are other matters to which I would like to call attention and have the expression of the House upon.

There is an amendment incorporated by the Senate, involving an expenditure of $250,000 for the use of the Gathmann torpedo guns, built in Chicago, and which it is proposed shall be placed on some of the monitors. I am in favor of that amendment and hope it will be adopted by the House. I do not know whether it has been called to the attention of the House or not, but this gun has been subjected to the most severe tests—

Mr. CANNON. Will my colleague allow me a moment?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have but two or three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to make a single suggestion.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that if there is an assurance on the part of the Naval Committee that they will not agree in conference to strike out the provision until the House has had an opportunity to express its views upon it, perhaps we might proceed more rapidly with the business here and avoid what seems to be an inevitable delay.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Naval Committee will state that, I will withdraw my opposition.

Mr. HILBORN. We are in this unfortunate position. I, for instance, can only speak for myself. Some members of the committee are not present, but so far as I am concerned I have no objection.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman, as a member of the committee, that I think every one of us here present will agree to that. We can not speak for those members of the committee who are absent.

Mr. CANNON. That is the usual course in these matters. At this stage of the session you can not go into the Committee of the Whole to consider these matters. It is fair to the House and fair to the committee. I do not believe there will be any trouble about it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is a matter of vast importance to the members of this House and to the country too, and, with the understanding that we can have a separate vote on that before this bill finally passes the House, I have no objection to suspending the rules and putting the bill into conference at once.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why not ask for a separate vote on that proposition? The House can make that order by unanimous consent.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield the same consent as to the other amendment, if it is desired?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have stated to the gentleman from California that if the House agrees that we shall have a separate vote on the question of an armor-plate factory, then I shall be willing to let the bill go to conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us have that unanimous consent.

Mr. HILBORN. I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, before the bill finally passes the House, the House may have a separate vote upon the amendment that I have mentioned and also upon the armor-plate-factory amendment.

Mr. HILBORN. In case the Senate does not recede.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from California, in charge of the bill, assents—

Mr. CANNON. If I may be allowed, there is no trouble about this matter. The gentleman from Alabama wants an armor-plate factory. The gentleman from Wisconsin wants a certain gun. Now, if the House conferees agree with the Senate upon these matters, they both get what they want. If the House conferees do not agree, a disagreement in whole or in part is to be reported back to the House, and on that report it is in order as to any one of those amendments to move that the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate, so that there is no trouble at all, and you can not manage it in any other way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will we have to vote down the conference report first? I should like the attention of the gentleman from Illinois. I ask him if it is not a fact that if they bring in a conference report here and we want a separate vote on these propositions, we would first have to vote down the conference report?

Mr. HOPKINS. We should, unless unanimous consent is now given.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the ground of my objection.
Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, it would be a bold conference committee that under these conditions would close up a report without letting the House have a chance to vote upon amendments of that kind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then let the House consent to it now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from California announces that he will bring the matter before the House and have a vote upon those two points?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes that assurance, that leaves the committee technically free for a free conference.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am content with that, then, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand that the gentleman from California agrees that when the matter comes back from conference we shall have a separate vote on this armor-plate proposition, this armor-plate proposition?

Mr. HILBORN. That was my proposition, I believe.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You agree to that?

Mr. HILBORN. I agree to that.

Mr. STEELE. I want to state to the gentleman from Alabama that if the armor-plate factory is to be established, it will not be established in Alabama, but at Marion, Ind. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We will consider that question later.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I should like about three minutes.

Mr. HILBORN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, this House passed a bill making an appropriation of $445 a ton for armor plate, hoping thereby to secure the Krupp armor for the new vessels. The bill as it stands to-day has that appropriation reduced from $445 per ton to $300 per ton. It carries a provision that if the armor is not obtained for $300 a ton the Government shall appropriate $1,500,000 to build an armor-plate factory. This reduction to $300 per ton in the face of the action of both Houses of Congress in the last session making the limit $400 per ton has the apparent object of forcing the establishment of a Government armor-plate factory.

It is apparently made with this object alone. The men who placed the amendment there knew that even the harveyized plate can not be secured at $300 per ton. They made that limit in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and the Navy Department was unable to secure any armor whatever. The ships remained upon the stocks two years without armor, and were unavailable in the war with Spain. I have no desire to further trespass on the time of the House. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, so that the House may understand our position on this question. It has only been discussed on the other side of the House. The Senate has amended the bill so as to reduce the price of armor plate, to be paid to these two factories that are now making armor, to $300 per ton; and it is provided that if they do not consent to make armor at this price, that the Government shall itself build its armor-plate factory, and carries an appropriation for the building of that factory. Now, the question that comes to the House is as to whether it is better for the Government to undertake this proposition itself or to continue the appropriation in the hands of some private contractors?

I do not intend to go into a full discussion of this question. It has been fully discussed, and shown that these factories are taking from the Government to-day—and I used the word "taking" advisedly, because they have absolutely held us up in the middle of the road and demanded their price. Mr. Speaker, reverting to the question as to whether the Government had better take charge of this matter itself. Now the arguments that are being made here in opposition to a Government armor-plate factory have been made by the contractors whenever the Government undertook to take into its own hands the building of any machinery for the Government. The same arguments were made here when we established the present Government gun factory here in the city of Washington.

There is not a man who sits on the floor of this House that can contend for one moment that it was not the best day's work the Government ever did, so far as furnishing itself with its supplies, when it established this gun factory. We are making to-day the best and cheapest guns in the world. A mortar that used to cost the Government $17,000 to make when it was made by private contractors is made now, as the Government reports show, for $4,500. The same thing will be the case if you establish a Government armor-plate factory. It is not to be used for any others. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] says that if we adopt this proposition we had better go to mining coal for the Government and raising wheat for the Government. Not at all so. The questions are not at all similar. The Government of the United States is the only person in the United States that uses these guns—great guns—and uses armor.

There is nobody else desiring armor for vessels except the Government of the United States. It comes in competition with no individual citizen; and as we have demonstrated in the past, in the manufacture of these large guns and gun carriages, that we can make a better gun and better carriage, so we will demonstrate in the manufacture of armor plate that we can make our own armor plate and still make the best and the cheapest armor that any government in the world has.

Now, if the gentlemen in charge of this bill are willing to give us an opportunity to express our position on this matter—an opportunity for a separate vote on this proposition—when it comes before the House I am willing to agree to it; but if they insist that they will not agree to that, then I ask the House to vote down the proposition to suspend the rules, so that we can force them to give us what is only our rights here, and that is a right to vote on this proposition.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, since the House prepared the last naval appropriation bill a great advance has been made in armor-plate making. The armor-plate makers are now manufacturing a product which is pronounced by the experts of the world to be 25 per cent better than the best harveyized armor. Now, the advantage of saving 25 per cent in weight is very great. We can only appropriate 23 per cent of the displacement of the vessel for armor plate. The weight of the harveyized armor was so great that when we had protected the machinery and the guns and the water line of the ship the 23 per cent allowed for armor was exhausted. A 12-inch plate of Krupp armor is equivalent to a 15-inch harveyized plate.

Now, with the Krupp armor, after having protected the machinery, the guns, and the water line, we will have 25 per cent to spare, and with that 25 per cent we can protect the men, we can protect the unprotected parts of the ship. All foreign nations that are building ships have adopted this improved armor; and can the United States afford to go on using armor plate that is not as good as that used by foreign nations?

Now, I have no objection to the establishment of an armor-plate factory; all I want is that we shall have the best armor plate. Of course we want to get it as cheap as possible. The objection that I have to the Senate amendment, and I assume that they are in earnest in trying to get an armor-plate establishment, is that they have only provided for the expenditure of one million and a half dollars.

Now, the very best information we have from our own officers who have investigated this question is that an armor-plate establishment sufficient for turning out 6,000 tons a year will cost us $3,747,912. Now, then, it seems to me idle, it seems to me to be trifling to appropriate only $1,500,000, less than one-half the amount that is absolutely necessary. And in this estimate fixing the cost of the armor-plate establishment at $3,747,912 our naval officers have included nothing for the land, nothing for the preparation of the site for the establishment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRUCKER].

Mr. BRUCKER. As I understand the proposition, Mr. Speaker, now before the House, the question is whether or not the House shall have the opportunity to vote upon the independent proposition as to whether or not the Government shall build an armor-plate factory of its own. This bill comes back from the Senate with this proposition tacked on by the way of an amendment. A motion is now made to suspend the rules and throw this bill into conference. As I understand, there are one hundred and odd Senate amendments attached to the bill. If this bill goes into conference now, it will come back here with a conference report, and the members of this House will either have to adopt or reject the conference report as a whole, and there will be no opportunity to vote upon this independent proposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I thought an agreement had been made twenty minutes ago that there should be a separate vote upon these propositions.

Mr. DAYTON. There will be an agreement made as soon as the gentleman has finished.

Mr. BRUCKER. If there is an agreement to allow the House to vote on this independent proposition, I have no further criticisms to make along this line. I simply want to throw out this suggestion: It does strike me that, while the Government has already embarked in the business of manufacturing its guns, including small arms, manufacturing its powder, we ought, as a matter of national importance and national defense, to embark in the business of manufacturing our armor plate. I think it would be a paying investment for this Government to invest at least $1,500,000 for the erection of an armor-plate factory and allow the plant to remain idle, not turning a wheel, if you please, but to hold it there as a menace against this octopus that now has the Government by the throat and is holding us up here year after year, siphoning from the National Treasury extortionate prices, amounting to millions of dollars annually. [Applause.] I want to see the Government build an armor-plate factory and own it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am now ready to make an agreement.

Mr. DAYTON. The agreement, as I understand, is that if the Senate insists upon these amendments to which there is a disagreement the committee shall report it, and the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; a direct vote on the Senate amendments.

The question was then taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the motion to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference was agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HILBORN, and Mr. CUMMINGS.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I see by a statement in the Post this morning that—

Representative JOSEPH H. WALKER, of Massachusetts, had a tussle all of yesterday trying to get time to deliver a speech. He stated on the floor that he wanted an hour to discuss the subject of banking and currency.

The rumor had gone the rounds that Mr. WALKER had some very tart things to say about certain of his colleagues on the Banking and Currency Committee and about two or three other gentlemen not members of the House, but who have figured considerably in the efforts to secure legislation. Accordingly there was no small interest in the galleries to hear the Bay State financier.

Now, as a part of my explanation, I want to read a word or two from another paper. The New York Sun, in an article on Lord Herschell, says:

His first judgment was rendered as a member of the judicial committee of the privy council, reviewing a decision of the supreme court of the colony of Natal in a newspaper libel suit; and this passage from his opinion has been much commended:

"There is no doubt that the public acts of a public man may lawfully be made the subject of fair comment or criticism, not only by the press but by all members of the public. But the distinction can not be too clearly borne in mind between comment or criticism and allegations of fact, such as that disgraceful acts have been committed or disgraceful language has been used. It is one thing to comment upon or criticize, even with severity, the acknowledged or proved acts of a public man, and quite another to assert that he has been guilty of particular acts of misconduct."

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that my offense is that I did propose to allude pleasantly to several gentlemen on the floor of this House, and then only as to matters of public record. I said to every one of those gentlemen that I proposed to do so, in order that they might be here to reply if they chose. This I did in my sensitiveness lest I should do any man injustice; and that caution is my offense. I did not propose to comment upon those gentlemen in any way out of their record. I will add that unless I can have the same privilege accorded to me in my speaking that is accorded to other men, I do not care to speak at all. And furthermore, I shall not obstruct the public business even to do myself justice. [Applause.]

The Senate, by its amendments, added $896,955 to the bill. Of this sum, it is agreed by the conferees that the Senate recede from $333,050 and that the House agree to amendments involving $446,945, leaving involved in the amendments upon which an agreement has not been reached the sum of $116,960.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
A. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, there are three subjects concerning which the conference committee have not yet agreed. One is the subject of electric lights, involving two amendments; another relates to the increase of the police force of the District; and the third to charities.

As showing the general outcome of the conference, I will state that the Senate amendments added to the amount of the bill as passed by the House $896,955, in all of which we nonconcur.

In this report the Senate has receded to the amount of $333,050, and the House has agreed to amendments involving $446,945, leaving in amendments upon which an agreement has not been reached the sum of $116,960 still in dispute. The principal part—indeed, almost the whole—of the amount of money involved in the disagreement relates to the increase of the police force, there being only $12,000 involved in the charity schedule and some $3,000 in the amendment relating to electric lights.

Mr. HENDERSON. What increase did the Senate amendment make in the police force?

Mr. GROUT. They ask for 100 privates—50 of the first class, 50 of the second class—1 lieutenant, and 1 sergeant.

Mr. HENDERSON. Under our rules, we can not increase the police force in the House on an appropriation bill, can we? We have never been able, I believe, under our rules, to increase the police force.

Mr. GROUT. I suppose it would violate the rules to bring in a proposition for the increase of the police force on an appropriation bill. But it was the opinion of the committee that the District did not require this increase.

Mr. HENDERSON. Heretofore I know it was held that there was a statute fixing the number of the police; so that we had to depend altogether upon the Senate for any increase.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is right about there being an old statute fixing the number of police; but the House has frequently heretofore increased the number. In fact, we have from year to year added a little to it constantly until last year, when we came to the conclusion that the police force was large enough.

Mr. HENDERSON. During the last four years—I do not know how it was before—we had to rely for increases on the Senate, because we had not the right, under the rules, to provide for such an increase on the appropriation bill.

Mr. GROUT. We have brought in provisions for increase before, I think, in the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think not. It has always been done in the Senate.

Does not my friend think the police force is at present inadequate to the necessities of the city?

Mr. GROUT. We have not so thought; and we have been governed somewhat in our views by comparison of the number of policemen in this city, in proportion to the population, as with the number in other cities. We find that the proportion here is already larger than in most other large cities.

But not only that, Mr. Speaker, we have several independent police forces in the District, as gentlemen are of course aware. There is the police force about the Capitol, the exact number of which I do not now remember; there is also a police force about each of the Departments—the Treasury and the other Departments—independent of the Metropolitan police.

And they all have the power of arresting, and are all subject to the call of the superintendent of police in case of riots or disorder in the city. We have also a military force within reach, which can be utilized in case of emergency. So the House committee thought that the police force of the District was large enough under these conditions.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is true, as the gentleman says, that we have this extra police force, and we have a number of men in these various Departments, in the White House, and in the various public buildings; but is it not a fact that for the White House and the foreign legations the force of twenty-two men, which I am informed is the force, is taken practically away from other places and is a reduction of the number of men to that extent? I understand that the average beat of a policeman is from 1 to 13 miles, while outside of the city it is from 2½ to 7 square miles covered by each one.

Mr. GROUT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had not before heard of these magnificent distances to which the gentleman refers, and I can not help thinking that he is mistaken.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a fact, as I think the gentleman will find on investigation.

I have called attention to this matter before, and we ought to have certainly at least a moderate increase in the size of the police force. I simply call the gentleman's attention to it, and hope that in the deliberation in the committee they will take it into consideration.

Mr. GROUT. Of course we will carefully consider it; but does the gentleman mean that the beat of any policeman covers 13 miles?

Mr. HENDERSON. That is my information, that some of them have beats which involve practically that length within the city.

Mr. GROUT. I can scarcely believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is possible. I have no doubt, of course, that the mounted police may patrol as great a distance as that.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am quite sure, from my information, that the gentleman will find the statement to be entirely correct.

But, leaving that matter for the present, there is another question to which I desire to ask attention. I would like to ask an explanation of the Senate amendment as to the provisions for electric lighting in the city.

Mr. GROUT. The Senate amendment is in the following words:

Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to grant permits for the repair and enlargement, under proper regulations, of the existing electric conduits.

Now, the reason that we object to that provision is because it applies to one only of the two companies operating in this city. Gentlemen will probably recall the fact that there are in Washington two electric-lighting companies, one known as the United States Company and the other the Potomac Electric Light Company.

The United States Company was first organized, and put down conduits for electric lighting at an early date in the history of electric lighting. Many of them, owing to the increase in the business, were found to be too small, and in order properly to conduct their business they need to be enlarged. But the Potomac Company came in subsequently and entered into business here. They had had the benefit of the previous experience of other companies engaged in the business, and put down larger conduits.

This amendment provides for allowing an increase in the size of some of these conduits, but does not authorize the laying of new conduits. I might take for an illustration the hotel where I live—the Arlington. That hotel is lighted by electricity furnished by one of these companies. But the capacity of the conduit is not sufficient to supply all that is needed; and so it happens that only the dining room and the office and parlors are lighted with electricity. This amendment, therefore, is to enable the United States Company to enlarge its conduits.

But on the other side of H street, opposite to the Arlington Hotel, the Potomac Company has a line of conduits passing the hotel. They would like, of course, to have the privilege of crossing the street and entering into competition for this lighting with the rival company. Their conduits having been put in at a later date, are on a larger plan and would be sufficient for the work which is required from the company.

This amendment has reference, therefore, to that condition of things. The committee thought if we allowed the enlargements of the existing conduits—that is, the conduits of the United States Electric Lighting Company—in cases like that referred to, that we should also allow the other company to extend their conduit and thus have an opportunity of entering into competition for the lighting of the city.

The committee also thought if we grant to the two companies the privilege of enlarging and extending their conduits we should at the same time fix the price at which they should furnish light both to the city and private individuals. We have not, however, been able yet to settle this satisfactorily to ourselves even, but hope to be able to do so when we bring the bill back into the House again, but of course we are glad to know what gentlemen think of the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no doubt at all that that is the better plan. I am entirely content that the committee shall consider the matter. I believe they will deal properly and efficiently with it. But I hope my friend, in the consideration of these matters, will accept the proposition for an addition to the police force. That is needed, and is a matter that will meet the approval of everybody who understands the condition of things here.

Mr. GROUT. Very well; we will consider the matter carefully. Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question as to the payment of the police. Are they paid by the month or the week; and how many hours constitute a day's work?

Mr. GROUT. They actually receive their money every month; but it is a fixed compensation for the entire year. It is subdivided and paid to them monthly.

Mr. RIDGELY. How many days are counted a month, and how many hours a day?

Mr. GROUT. Well, it would be according to the length of the month, the same as our salary.

Mr. RIDGELY. And how many hours to the day?

Mr. GROUT. I can not tell you that.

Mr. DALZELL. Eight hours constitute a Federal day.

Mr. GROUT. I do not understand that that applies to the police.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, it does; to all Government employees.

Mr. GROUT. I had supposed that the eight-hour law did not apply to these policemen, but some gentlemen about me say that it does, and I am not prepared from absolute knowledge to contradict them.

Mr. RIDGELY. That was the purpose of my question, to find out that.

Mr. GAINES. I know that some of the policemen stay on duty all night long. I have seen this when I was up all night with a sick child.

Mr. GROUT. Probably in exceptional cases.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that eight hours constitute a day?

Mr. GROUT. I did not so understand, but gentlemen around me say that is a fact. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] does not intend to be understood that one man is on duty all night long—the same man.

Mr. GAINES. I intend to say that I have seen one policeman stand at the corner of Fourteenth and H streets all night long, and I have seen him all day long.

Mr. CANNON. For how many days and nights in succession?

Mr. GAINES. For at least four weeks.

Mr. DALZELL. Where was this locality?

Mr. GAINES. At the corner of Fourteenth street and H.

Mr. CANNON. I always believed the gentleman from Tennessee could go without sleep for three weeks, but I did not know that he could go four. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. If I was as wide-awake as the gentleman from Illinois, I would go without sleep entirely. [Laughter.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman from Vermont permit a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand the committee have now under consideration an amendment to this Senate amendment permitting a general extension of conduits?

Mr. GROUT. No; there is no amendment proposed. The committee are wrestling with the subject; but this may certainly be stated to the House, I think, that we shall not agree to any extension of privileges here, unless some system of rates is established.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that they should do certain things in reference to rates, "unless instructed by the House."

Mr. GROUT. I said if gentlemen had any suggestions to give us upon the subject we should be glad to receive them.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this point to offer an amendment to the Senate amendment, in the way of instructions as to rates.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the conference report be adopted.

Mr. GROUT. I do not understand an amendment to be in order now.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is before the House, and it would not be in order to amend that.

Mr. BABCOCK. I offer this by way of instructions to the committee, at the suggestion of the chairman.

The SPEAKER. This is a partial agreement, as the Chair understands, and after this conference report is adopted, then the points on which an agreement has not been reached will come up on a motion to insist, or some other suitable motion.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that it may be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it for the information of the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. And I will offer the amendment when it is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any company availing itself of such privilege of extension of conduits as heretofore provided shall not charge or collect more than $6 per month for each arc light of 2,000 candlepower, or more than 8 cents for each 1,000 watts for incandescent current, and any company charging or collecting an amount in excess of such rates shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $50 for each and every offense, to be collected as other fines are now collected in the District of Columbia; and shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes upon personal property, each year 4 per cent of its gross receipts from whatever source, and its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GROUT. That is not in order at the present.

Mr. BABCOCK. It is just read for information.

Mr. GROUT. Now, then, the other point on which the conferees disagree relates to the sectarian charities. Gentlemen will remember when the matter was up—

Mr. DOCKERY. Suppose we agree to the conference report and take these things up seriatim afterwards.

Mr. GROUT. Then I will ask that the sense of the House be taken on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GROUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. What further action does the gentleman desire to take?

Mr. GROUT. I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to a further conference.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask a separate vote on the amendment relative to conduits and electric lights; and I desire to offer the instruction which has been read at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks to have a separate vote in relation to the conduits and electric lights. Does any gentleman desire to have a separate vote on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the question in regard to all the amendments except the one referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the motion to further insist on the disagreement to the other Senate amendments was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move my amendment by way of an instruction to the House conferees.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to indicate the amendment on which he desires to give the instruction?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is for the electric lighting and conduits.

The SPEAKER. Can the gentleman give the number of it?

Mr. GROUT. It is No. 58.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Wisconsin that after the House has insisted on its disagreement and the conferees are appointed a motion to instruct will be in order. So the Chair will take the sense of the House upon insisting upon the disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, is it in order to offer the instruction at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then I move the instructions to the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House conferees have the following instructions. The Clerk will report the proposed instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Instruct conferees to agree to amendment numbered 58, with the following amendment:

Provided, That any company availing itself of such privilege of extension of conduits as heretofore provided shall not charge or collect more than $6 per month for each arc light of 2,000 candlepower, or more than 8 cents for each 1,000 watts for incandescent current, and any company charging or collecting an amount in excess of such rates shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $50 for each and every offense, to be collected as other fines are now collected in the District of Columbia; and shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes upon personal property, each year 4 per cent of its gross receipts from whatever source, and its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont if he will tell us what we are now paying per month for arc lamps?

Mr. GROUT. Fifteen cents per watt hour to the United States Company, and the Potomac Company are furnishing it in some instances for less.

Mr. BABCOCK. At 5 cents, in some few cases, per watt hour.

Mr. GROUT. Not to single individuals, but to Departments, like the Treasury Department or the Interior Department, where a large quantity is taken.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that where the two companies come in competition the rates are 5 cents per watt hour, and where they do not 15 cents per hour.

Mr. GROUT. Very likely that may be true; but I did not suppose there was any individual furnished at a rate as low as 5 cents.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, what do we pay per month for arc lights? I see by this amendment it is $6. What is the amount now charged for each arc light?

Mr. GROUT. The amount is $95 a year—about $7—and $72 under this amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Ninety-one dollars and twenty-five cents per year at present, and this would be $72 per year. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word. The two electric-light companies doing business in the District of Columbia are both of them foreign corporations, paying no taxes upon gross receipts or income, as other District of Columbia corporations are. The charters that have been issued since I have been a member of this House require corporations in the District of Columbia to pay an annual tax of 4 per cent on their gross receipts.

It is no more than just, no more than right, when you are granting concessions, to fix the rates of service. The Senate has insisted upon this amendment, and you are giving away all that Congress has; you are giving away all the rights you have in the streets that Congress owns, and now is the time to fix the rates. I desire to say further that I have been informed by a gentleman formerly an officer in one of the principal companies here that they are manufacturing under their improved processes, and can manufacture to-day, and furnish a 2,000-candlepower arc light for $37 a year, and that the cost of incandescent lighting is 4 cents per thousand watts, of which the maximum price now is 15 cents.

When we reduced the price of gas in this House it was shown on the floor that gas cost 68 cents per thousand feet to deliver, and we reduced the price to $1.10 and then further on to $1 the latter basis of which will soon be reached. Another thing known to most of the members of the House is, that the control recently of one of the electric-light companies has passed into the hands of a syndicate, and the prospect is that nearly all the corporations will go into the hands of one syndicate. Now, I insist that before we grant the rights that we have in the streets we shall regulate the rates for lighting. That is all this amendment means.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I believe with the gentleman from Wisconsin that while we grant this privilege of extending conduits and enlarging those in existence, we ought to deal with this question of rates. But I am not prepared to go to the extent of the proposition submitted by him. Indeed, I think it is too drastic. I may become satisfied that it is not. I will state for the information of the House that these companies have agreed upon a provision which they have submitted to us, but which was not satisfactory, or else there would have been an agreement upon this amendment in this report of the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this proposition was not satisfactory to the committee. The rate in this city now is 15 cents for a kilowatt hour. I am informed that in other cities, like Chicago, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, the price charged per kilowatt hour for individual service is 20 cents. The two companies propose to reduce the service from 15 cents per kilowatt hour to 12 cents, and after three years to reduce it to 11 cents, and three years after that to 10 cents. I believe there is a large profit on 15 cents, but to cut it down at once from 15 to 8 cents might do, and I am afraid would do, injustice to the companies.

Mr. GAINES. Where are the facts upon which the gentleman bases his opinion?

Mr. GROUT. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee where are the facts upon which to base the opinion that it should be 8 cents; that 8 cents will pay the company for laying the conduits and carrying the electric currents into dwellings?

Mr. GAINES. I am not informed about it. I am trying to get evidence.

Mr. GROUT. I am giving you the prices that are charged elsewhere. We do not want to deal unfairly by these companies; we want to deal fairly by them. I am in favor of making a reduction, and I think if the House will leave our hands untied, we will make an agreement that will be acceptable to the House.

Mr. GAINES. Do not we tie our hands unless we tie their hands?

Mr. GROUT. I am talking about the hands of the conferees. If we go out under these proposed instructions, we can do nothing else but to submit them as an ultimatum to the Senate conferees, and it may result in nothing; in fact, is likely to. I think the public interest demands that we should allow the enlargement and extension of these conduits to carry this service out at reasonable rates to the public.

Mr. GAINES. What are reasonable rates?

Mr. GROUT. I am compelled to say now that I do not know. The gentleman from Tennessee wants to know why I do not take the plunge in the dark to the depth proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I may be persuaded to accept his rate when I learn more about it, but I do not want now, speaking for myself, to have my hands tied in the conference unless the House is prepared to say that they want just that rate or nothing done.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman is in favor of fixing the maximum?

Mr. GROUT. I am; and I am in favor of reducing the rate submitted by the two companies. I believe I am in favor of getting it somewhere near what they can afford, without too large profits to the companies.

Mr. GAINES. Did not the gentleman's committee have before it the testimony when it acted that the gentleman from Wisconsin has before him now?

Mr. GROUT. No; this matter has come up for the first time in conference. It was not submitted to the District Committee in the investigation of this bill. We put nothing whatever into the bill, but the Senate have put in this little amendment to allow conduits to be taken up and laid longer, which, as I have told you, will accrue only to the benefit of one company.

Now, that opens the subject. We say that that can not be done unless the other company has a right to extend its conduits also, thus furnishing competitive service. We say further—and this is the declaration of the House conferees, not those of the Senate—that we must have rates fixed, and they must be brought down to a reasonable limit; and we are going to try to bring them down. At present we hardly know ourselves what the limit should be. But we have the information that in other cities the rate is 20 cents; here it is 15.

I think this company can afford to do the business for less—less even than 12 cents. They have put in a proposition that they shall receive for the first three years 12 cents. I do not think we ought to insert a three years' provision like that.

Mr. BABCOCK. The maximum rate is only 12 cents now.

Mr. GROUT. A provision extending over one year will be enough; at the end of that time we may find it proper to make another reduction. There must, of course, be a large expenditure at first in laying conduits and extending the service, so that the company could hardly be prepared to furnish the light at as low a rate for the first year as they might do afterwards.

Now, I think that instead of a term of three years on a sliding scale a term of one year will be sufficient. I will say for the information of the House, as far as I am concerned—and I believe the other gentlemen on the conference agree with me—we shall not agree to these rates. We will have better rates or we will not agree to anything.

Mr. BABCOCK. Does not the gentleman understand that when these rates are submitted, according to this instruction, the company is not obliged to accept them?

Mr. GROUT. That is all plain enough.

Mr. BABCOCK. And does not the gentleman think that the statement made by a former officer of the company that they are manufacturing electric current for 4 cents per thousand watts is a correct statement?

Mr. GROUT. Undoubtedly, speaking of the current only. But that does not cover conduits; that does not cover the extending of the wires into dwellings and public places.

Mr. BABCOCK. This covers everything except the interest on their plant. With all the experience I have had in these matters, I believe this is a reasonable proposition; and when Congress gives away all the streets and all its rights, we shall never have a chance to regulate prices in this House again.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, we shall always have a chance; but the House ordinarily has not courage enough to take up these questions and dispose of them as it ought to do. Now is the time to equalize these rates and make them fair.

The gentleman says that the companies are not obliged to accept these rates. Of course not; they can close business.

Mr. GAINES. And then somebody else will take their places.

Mr. GROUT. I do not say this would close their business. I do not know as to that. I simply ask the House to leave this matter with the committee. I do not know whether my colleague in the conference across the aisle [Mr. DOCKERY] is opposed to these instructions, but I rather think he is. But whether he is or not, I will say personally that I do not want them.

If we do not bring in a satisfactory proposition, you can cast us out; that is all there is about it. If the gentleman from Wisconsin furnished data from authentic sources—from scientific sources—which would support his proposition that this work can be done for 4 cents a kilowatt hour, I should look upon the matter differently.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say that the reason the District Committee have not furnished the information is because your committee—the Committee on Appropriations—has had this subject under consideration all the time. You have included it in every District bill since I have been a member of the House.

Mr. GROUT. Well, I wish the gentleman would furnish all the data now. He makes the statement here, and no doubt he has this information. No doubt the gentleman thinks the company can furnish the cement for less than the amount they have figured; but the question is, can they afford it at the rate named in the instructions?

Mr. GAINES. Where does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] get his evidence or his facts?

Mr. BABCOCK. I get them officially, but I do not think I ought to state the names.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman tells me privately that he gets his information officially.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think it exceedingly important for the interest of the public service and the people of the District that we should reach in this bill some adjustment as to rates. The United States Electric Light Company are seeking by a proviso, which has been put on this bill by the Senate, to enlarge their conduit system, for reasons which have been fully explained by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Now, then, speaking for myself, I want to say, in view of the controversy we have had heretofore with this electric light company, that I am not willing to grant them any additional privileges unless at the same time we can secure rates which shall be fair to the Government and fair to the people of this District.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Which of these companies is it that refuses to obey the act of Congress heretofore passed fixing rates?

Mr. DOCKERY. The very company that now seeks additional privileges by this proviso.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman explain what the company has done or refused to do in this connection—what position they stand in?

Mr. DOCKERY. Congress passed a law fixing rates for electric-light service; and, as I understand, the company has defied that provision of law. I do not know that that is the fact, but such is my understanding. The chairman of the committee is perhaps more conversant with the facts of the matter than I am. I know that the telephone company has been violating the law.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman is mistaken with reference to this other company—the electric-light company.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true. I was confused for the moment in making the statement. The electric-light company has not violated the law. It was the telephone company to which I had reference—a company which has openly violated the law; and I withdraw with pleasure the reflection upon the electric-light company.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have had controversies for years with reference to the United States Electric Light Company, as to its conduits and to its prices. I do not complain of the company. It is perfectly natural that they should seek to secure the highest prices.

But they now come to Congress for additional privileges, and let us at this time fix the rates which are just and reasonable not only to the company but to the people of the District.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is the proper thing to do.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, as to what the rates should be I confess I have no trustworthy opinion. I do not know from personal information what they should be. I will say, however, to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have absolute confidence in the rugged integrity of the chairman of my committee, although I confess I do not agree with him that the rates fixed at this time should be on the basis of a graduated or sliding scale, such as that which has been suggested. I do not understand why, if it is possible for this company to furnish light at reduced rates three years hence, it should not be able to give that rate at the present time.

The gentleman says that an exception must be made in this case, because it will be necessary for the company to enlarge their plant, which would involve a considerable expenditure. I do not dispute that statement. But, Mr. Speaker, that is a charge against the capital stock of the company. And, besides that, we must not lose sight of the fact that as you increase the earning capacity of the company by extending its conduits and its line you increase also its income; and, therefore, I believe that the rates to be charged by them should be fixed absolutely, and not on a sliding scale such as has been suggested.

The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin therefore seems to me to be entirely appropriate, and the only question is as to whether the House will instruct its conferees or not. I am satisfied, as far as I have been able to investigate the matter, that the rate fixed by the amendment is a just and a proper one.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will my friend permit an interruption?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but let me say before yielding that I believe our conferees are acting in the interest of the people of the District in this controversy as they understand it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say, in the first place, that I have full and implicit confidence in the House conferees. I believe that they will be true to the questions submitted to them, and will try to do what is right and best for the benefit of the people of this District.

No one knows better than the gentleman from Missouri himself the difficulties surrounding a committee under such circumstances. This question has never been presented exactly in this shape before.

Mr. DOCKERY. The objection I make is to the sliding scale of charges.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, I must suggest to him that this is probably the last chance the House will have to regulate this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman and myself agree fully upon that point. I want to deal justly with this company, and of course I do not want in any way to oppress it.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a single question in this connection.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to ask him as to the rate he proposes. I want to ask whether the question of the cost of electric lighting is not largely a question of the cost of coal? Out in Western cities, where coal is cheaper, the rates are lower than those proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GROUT. That is in case of overhead service, is it not?

Mr. COWHERD. That is in case of overhead service. In the case of a conduit service the furnishing of the service is cheaper after the conduits are built than it is with an overhead service. The difference is in the cost of construction and the interest charges on the original cost. In some cities in the West it is furnished at $65 per light per year for an all-night service, and I have had experience in one case where a company that was furnishing it at $120 per year practically cut its rates in half as soon as competition was offered. I think it will be found upon examination that the rates offered by the gentleman are certainly high enough.

Mr. GROUT. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], who complains that the Committee on Appropriations have had charge of this subject, that the District Committee could have taken charge of it at any time. It really belongs to them. They never have taken charge of it. The gentleman himself could have introduced a bill taking up this matter and presented it to the House and had it understandingly disposed of.

Mr. BABCOCK. What I stated was that your committee had had this subject before them all the time.

Mr. GROUT. Because the District Committee has neglected to deal with it. That is the reason why.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. May I ask the gentleman from Vermont a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. As I understand, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] will make a rate of about $72 per year per light, will it not?

Mr. GROUT. I understand so; yes.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Now, if the electric-light companies can furnish lights in smaller cities at $65 per year per light, running all night the year round, why can they not furnish them for $72 per light per year in the city of Washington?

Mr. GROUT. For this reason: The plant costs probably twice as much—

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. But are there not a great many more lights?

Mr. GROUT. Wait a moment until I answer. Perhaps the plant cost three times as much. I do not know. It is the difference between overhead and underground service.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. In a small city, where they only have, perhaps, 40 or 50 or 75 arc lights, could they furnish the lights as cheaply as they can in the city of Washington, where they have so many lights?

Mr. GROUT. Well, I can not say how that might be. It would require a larger supply of engines to create the light. I do not think they could furnish the lights more cheaply here. They would have to increase their power to produce the electricity, and there would be no special profit in doing that unless one man could attend to two engines, and he would hardly be able to do so.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Do you believe that if in a small city they can furnish 65 lights at $65 per year it will cost more than as much again to furnish 180 lights in a larger city?

Mr. GROUT. Oh, well, I never was quick in figures, I will say to the gentleman, and will not undertake to solve that problem on the spot.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Do you not know that it will cost less?

Mr. GROUT. No; I do not know it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the instructions. The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GROUT. I will simply say that I do not want to quarrel with this proposition, and so I will not demand a division. I think these instructions will likely result in doing nothing.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then the situation will be just what it is now.

The SPEAKER. The instructions are agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Before the conferees are appointed, I want to have the House understand that there is a disagreement about charities, concerning the introduction of five items in the bill by the Senate, appropriating for sectarian charities. With that distinct notice to the House, I have nothing further to say, except to state that the House conferees are standing against the proposition.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GROUT, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. DOCKERY.

RECALL OF BILL FROM PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was considered, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3466) entitled "An act granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11083) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 57, 58, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5466. An act for the erection of a public building at the city of York, in the State of Nebraska.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12123) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WISTAR W. MILLER.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to pay to the mother of Wistar W. Miller, late a clerk to the Committee on Pensions of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary, and funeral expenses not exceeding $150, the same to be immediately available.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

JOHN A. STEWART.

Mr. ODELL. I also offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to pay the widow of John A. Stewart, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary, and funeral expenses not exceeding $150, the same to be immediately available.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

AMBROSE E. PRATT.

Mr. ODELL. I also offer the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Ambrose E. Pratt, the sum of $33.85, being the amount due him as the clerk of Hon. John Simpkins, late Representative from the Thirteenth Congressional district of Massachusetts, from March 1 to March 20, 1898.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

THERON POTTS.

Mr. ODELL. I also offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $312.00 to Theron Potts for services rendered in the folding room from July 9, 1898, to December 5, 1898, this amount being at the rate of $75 per month.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we will have the report read in that case.

Mr. ODELL. There is no report except a verbal one. Mr. Speaker, this clerk was placed in the folding room as a bookkeeper, upon the request of the Doorkeeper and under the authority of the Committee on Accounts. The amount called for is correct. The man has rendered valuable service, and it is all right.

Mr. DOCKERY. An additional employee without authority.

Mr. ODELL. Yes, sir; a necessary addition.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope this will not be a precedent for future action. The Doorkeeper has no right to employ a man in that way.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM KEITH.

Mr. ODELL. I also offer the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $266.19 to William Keith for services rendered in the folding room from July 9, 1898, to December 5, 1898, this amount being at the rate of $90 per month.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to have the report read in that case.

Mr. ODELL. There is no report. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the employees whom it was found necessary to employ in the folding room during the recess. The necessity for his employment was due to the fact that so many political speeches and other things were to be sent out; and owing to the sickness and vacation of employees who were entitled to vacation the folding room was absolutely crippled, and it was necessary to make provision for this additional employee, and also another similar one, which I have here.

Mr. BAILEY. Is this a privileged report?

Mr. ODELL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. It is a report of the Committee on Accounts to the House.

Mr. BAILEY. Directing the employment of another employee, and paying for those that have been employed without authority?

Mr. ODELL. Yes, sir; that is the idea.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have some question about that being a privileged report. If the employees had been ordered by the House, then I think any matter relating to them would be privileged; but where the employment has been without authority of the House, I question whether it is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The distinction is as to its being an expenditure out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. And that whatever directs an expenditure out of the contingent fund of the House is a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. "The Committee on Accounts on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House" is the language. If the House does not approve of this resolution, of course it is within its power to vote it down. The Chair thinks the language seems to cover all such questions, and that the House has to dispose of them when presented.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the language does cover it, because the language assumes that nobody will be employed, to be paid out of the contingent fund, without the authority of the House.

Mr. ODELL. Neither can they unless the authority of the House is obtained.

Mr. BAILEY. They have been, I understand, and this is simply a proposition to pay them, they having served. I raise the question as to the privileged character of such a report. I believe the Chair correctly states the rule, if it were a service already authorized, an employment already provided for, but the rule must proceed upon the theory that nobody will be employed about the Capitol without the authority of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me say further, along the line of the policy of the Committee on Accounts. There is a statute of the United States which prohibits any officer or any Department accepting service not authorized by law. I do not assume that that will apply to the clerical force of the House, but the principle applies both here and to the Senate.

Mr. ODELL. In answer to the gentleman, I will call his attention to the fact that the rules of the House provide that there shall be a temporary committee on accounts, which shall have the management of the contingent fund during the recess of the Congress. I do not suppose the gentleman would assume that in case there should be a fire, which would necessitate the expenditure of a large sum of money, it would be necessary to wait until next December, until Congress convenes, before repairs could be made.

The necessity arose because the demand for documents was so great upon the folding room. We have had the matter all gone over carefully, in an investigation which has been had for the last two or three weeks, and we have probed into all these affairs, and the committee is unanimous in recommending the passage of these resolutions.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know about the temporary committee on accounts, and I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that this committee should be appointed before adjournment. That temporary committee on accounts was authorized by law in order that there might be an auditing committee during the nine months when Congress was not in session, to adjust the disbursements.

The SPEAKER. The Chair concurs in the proposition made in opposition, that only the House can name its employees, or the House in conjunction with the Senate, in a proper appropriation bill. But it is for the House to judge whether these expenditures are satisfactory to the House or not. Therefore, the Chair thinks it is privileged, the House having complete control over it, and if not satisfied with the action that has taken place, or does not desire, so to speak, to condone it, it can so express itself by its vote. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Is not the resolution debatable? I ask to be recognized for an hour.

Mr. ODELL. No, Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield, and I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the previous question. Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. He had not asked for it when I asked to debate it.

The SPEAKER. He had not, because no one seemed to interfere with the progress of the resolution. [Laughter.] If the House does not desire to order the previous question, it can refuse. The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

SAMUEL MARKS.

Mr. ODELL. I now offer the following resolution, No. 363. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $366.88 to Samuel Marks for services rendered in the folding room from July 9, 1893, to December 5, 1893, this amount being at the rate of $75 per month.

Mr. ODELL. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the several votes whereby the resolutions were agreed to were laid on the table.

SEBASTIAN BECKERT.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3973) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Sebastian Beckert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the military record of Sebastian Beckert, late of Company I, First Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I think an amendment should be added to this bill providing that no pay or allowances shall become payable to this man by virtue of the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is reported by the committee with such an amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That no pay or emoluments be allowed or paid by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois. There is another amendment which I desire to propose—to change the final letter in this soldier's name from "t" to "d," making the name "Beckerd," which is the German form of the name. There is no doubt of the identity of the soldier.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill will be amended so as to agree with the bill.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. BAKER of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDIANS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 4853) to ratify agreements with the Indians of the Lower Brule and Rosebud reservations in South Dakota, and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect, was read, as follows:

Whereas James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, did, on the 1st day of March, 1898, make and conclude an agreement with the male adult Indians of the Lower Brule band of the Sioux tribe, occupying or belonging on the Lower Brule Reservation in South Dakota, which said agreement is as follows:

AGREEMENT.

This agreement made and entered into on the 1st day of March, 1898, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Lower Brule band of the Sioux tribe of Indians occupying or belonging on the Lower Brule Reservation, in South Dakota, witnesseth:

ART. 1. The said Indians belonging on the Lower Brule Reservation hereby consent and agree that those of their tribe now south of the White River on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, South Dakota, may remain thereon; that they may take with them and have converted into the permanent fund of the Indians belonging upon the Rosebud Reservation their proportional or pro rata share of the funds now in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging upon the Lower Brule Reservation; and that the Lower Brule Indians who have so removed may become and are hereafter to be considered Indians of the Rosebud Reservation.

ART. 2. In consideration of the lands upon the Lower Brule Reservation abandoned by the Indians who have removed to the Rosebud Reservation, and in order that the United States may reimburse itself for the lands purchased for the Indians last mentioned upon the Rosebud Reservation, the said Indians of the Lower Brule Reservation do hereby cede and relinquish to the United States a tract of territory constituting a portion of the Lower Brule Reservation, and estimated to contain about 130,000 acres, described as follows:

Townships 107, 108, and 109 north, range 79 west of the fifth principal meridian; also sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, and west half of sections 2, 11, 14, 23, 26, and 35, in township 108 north, range 78 west of fifth principal meridian; also sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, in township 109 north, range 78 west of fifth principal meridian; also sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, in township 107 north, range 78 west of fifth principal meridian; also north one-half of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 of township 106 north, range 78 west of fifth principal meridian; and north one-half of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of township 106 north, range 79 west of fifth principal meridian. The same being the western portion of the Lower Brule Indian Reservation from its northern boundary to its southern boundary, as herein described.

ART. 3. It is hereby further agreed that a reallocation shall be made by the United States to the Indians remaining upon the Lower Brule Reservation within the diminished portion thereof: Provided, That all children born prior to the time of making such reallocation shall receive allotments of land in manner and quantity as provided in section 8 of the act of Congress, approved March 2, 1889: And provided further, That instead of giving an allotment of 320 acres of agricultural or double that quantity of grazing land to the head of a family as provided in said section 8, one-half of that quantity shall be allotted to the husband and one-half to the wife, where both are living and otherwise entitled to the benefits accruing to Indians belonging upon said reservation.

ART. 4. The United States hereby agrees to maintain and continue the Lower Brule Agency and agency boarding school as at present for those Indians who remain upon the Lower Brule Reservation.

ART. 5. This agreement shall not take effect and be in force until ratified by act of Congress of the United States.

And

Whereas James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, did on the 10th day of March, 1898, make and conclude an agreement with the male adult Indians of the Sioux tribe on or belonging on the Rosebud Indian Reservation in the State of South Dakota, which said agreement is as follows:

AGREEMENT.

This agreement made and entered into on the 10th day of March, 1898, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Sioux tribe of Indians belonging on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, witnesseth:

ART. 1. The Indians of the Rosebud Indian Reservation hereby give their permission and consent for the Indians of the Lower Brule Reservation, in South Dakota, who have left the same and settled upon the Rosebud Reservation, to remain thereon and take allotments of lands in severalty as provided in section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, modified as hereinafter provided.

ART. 2. In consideration for the permission and consent aforesaid it is hereby agreed that the United States shall pay the Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, as now constituted, excluding the said Indians who have removed to the Rosebud Reservation from the Lower Brule Reservation, pro rata, in cash, at the rate of $1.25 per acre for the lands allotted to the Indians of the Lower Brule Reservation, as provided in article 1 of this agreement; and it is understood and agreed that the Indians of the Rosebud Reservation shall not be dependent upon the funds of the Lower Brule Indians for such payment, but the same shall be made to them directly by the Government of the United States.

ART. 3. It is further provided and agreed that the Lower Brule Indians who have permanently located upon the Rosebud Reservation shall have their pro rata or proportional share of the tribal funds, now in the Treasury of the United States, belonging to the Indians of the Lower Brule Reservation, transferred to and consolidated with the funds of the Indians belonging on the Rosebud Reservation, and that hereafter they shall be regarded in all essential respects as Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, and their annuities and other benefits from the Government, whether derived from treaty provisions or otherwise, shall be distributed to them at the Rosebud Agency, or a subagency connected therewith: Provided, That the Lower Brule Indians who have so located upon the Rosebud Reservation shall have no further interest in the Lower Brule Reservation, or the lands comprising the same, after their interest in the tribal funds has been transferred to the Rosebud funds as above stipulated.

ART. 4. It is hereby agreed on the part of the United States that allotments in severalty shall be made to all children born prior to the date of the ratification of this agreement, then living, in manner and quantity as provided in section 8 of said act of March 2, 1889: Provided, That in future allotments upon the Rosebud Reservation, instead of allotting 320 acres of agricultural or double that quantity of grazing land to the head of a family, as provided in said section 8, one-half of said quantity shall be allotted to the husband and one-half to the wife, where both are living and otherwise entitled to the benefits accruing to the Indians belonging upon said reservation: Provided further, That the allotments heretofore made on the Rosebud Reservation shall be revised in conformity with the preceding proviso: And provided further, That where any Indians to whom allotments in severalty have been made in the field have since died, such allotments shall be duly completed and approved, and the lands shall descend to the heirs of such decedents in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of said act last above mentioned.

ART. 5. This agreement shall not take effect and be in force until ratified by act of the Congress of the United States.

Therefore

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the agreement made and entered into on the 1st day of March, 1898, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian Inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Lower Brule band of the Sioux tribe of Indians in South Dakota, be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That the agreement made and entered into on the 10th day of March, 1898, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian Inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Sioux tribe of Indians belonging to the Rosebud Indian Reservation in South Dakota, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of making the payment to the Indians of the Rosebud Reservation stipulated for in article 2 of the foregoing agreement, the sum of $148,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the said payment is to be in full for all lands required by the said Lower Brule Indians for allotments in accordance with the provisions of article 1 of the aforesaid agreement.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered on the motion to suspend the rules.

There being no objection, a second was ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], that he may explain this treaty which the bill proposes to ratify.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to ratify agreements with the Indians of the Lower Brule and the Rosebud reservations in South Dakota. Under the act of March 2, 1889, a portion of the Sioux Nation of Indians in South Dakota was divided into six separate reservations. Among the bands affected by this change were the Lower Brule Sioux, who were located near the mouth of White River. A few years ago General Crook and two other commissioners were sent out to induce the Indians to agree to the act of 1889, and they promised the Indians that if they would agree to the act they would recommend that those south of White River should retain their homes; but a few years afterwards about 500 of them were forced to leave their homes—they had houses and farms, horses and cattle. They were forcibly taken to the new reservation, which had been moved up the Missouri River. They were even thrown into prison and kept there until they agreed to remain at the upper reservation.

The Government has been having trouble with these Indians ever since. A year or two ago an inspector was sent out to enter into and make an agreement with the Lower Brule and the Rosebud Indians. An agreement was entered into whereby the Indians at the Rosebud Agency agreed that the Lower Brule Indians might return to their houses south of White River, within the Rosebud Reservation, and become a part of the Rosebud Reservation, and the Government agreed to pay the Rosebud Indians for the lands allotted to the Lower Brule. The land allotted amounts to about 120,000 acres, at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman state where these reservations are?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. They are in South Dakota.

Mr. STEELE. Are they not buying some land in Wyoming?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. No; I am speaking of the Lower Brule and Rosebud reservations, in South Dakota.

On the 2d of March, 1889, an act was passed dividing a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians of South Dakota into six separate reservations, and this is one of the six reservations. In the Indian appropriation act of 1896 provision was made whereby these Indians might return to their homes south of the White River, and under this act 442 Brules removed to their former homes, and under the act land was to be ceded to them—about 120,000 acres—which the Government agreed to buy at $1.25 an acre.

Under the agreement a certain tract of land, amounting to about that number of acres, is ceded back to the Government by the Lower Brules. The land ceded constitutes the Western portion of the reservation, and this land is to be opened to settlement, upon proclamation by the President.

This whole matter has been arranged to the satisfaction of all concerned, the Secretary recommends the ratification of this treaty, and the Indians have gone back to their old homes—

Mr. STEELE. Is it not a fact that both bands of Sioux, the Ogallalas and the Brules, who were on the Platte River, were assigned a reservation over on the Missouri River, to which they objected very much, insisting on going back to their reservation on the Platte, in Wyoming, and with great difficulty they were forced upon this new reservation?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Yes; that is true, but I understand both these reservations are in South Dakota. The gentleman has made a correct statement as to the opposition of these Brule Indians to their removal. About 500 of them were forced from their homes. This agreement, however, puts them back on the lands they were forced to leave; and I may say further that this bill has the approval of the Department.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to ask a question in reference to this matter, I ask a vote, or move the previous question, if it be necessary.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to say a single word for the purpose of getting information on this point. Is this approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been recommended by him.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The bill was drawn by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Secretary of the Interior submitted it to Congress for its action.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the amount involved? What does the Government agree to pay?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The Government agrees to purchase the land at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there an appropriation of money to meet that expenditure?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Yes, to pay for about 120,000 acres.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much is the amount of the expenditure?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is provided that the expenditure shall not exceed the sum of $128,000.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman know himself that the Indians are satisfied with this new field?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Unquestionably. And they have voluntarily gone back, and they ask the passage of this bill. They were not satisfied before.

Mr. STEELE. I know that; but are they satisfied with the provision made here for them?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I believe there is no question about it. About 442 have already moved to the Rosebud Reservation, and I understand the land is better than that they have been occupying. They were glad to get back to their old homes.

Mr. STEELE. That is the point I wanted to get at.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

PUBLIC BUILDING LOT AT ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2675) authorizing the exchange of lot 6, of square 10, known as the old custom-house lot, in the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for lands adjoining that part of the United States military reservation in said city designated as the powder-house lot.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey the title of the United States to lot 6, of square 10, in the city of St. Augustine, State of Florida, known as the old custom-house lot, to Charles F. Hamblen, or his heirs or assigns, in exchange and upon a conveyance by said Charles F. Hamblen, his executors or assigns, to the United States of America of the lot of land known as the Hedrick lot, in square 44, in said city of St. Augustine, situated between the United States military reservation known as the powder-house lot and the Matanzas River or Bay, with all riparian rights and water privileges to said lot belonging. But the conveyance of the said lands belonging to the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be subject to the rights of Henry M. Flagler in and to a lease of the same heretofore made to him by the Treasury Department: Provided, however, That the exchange of lands herein authorized shall not take effect until the governor of the State of Florida shall have ceded to the United States jurisdiction over the said lands to be conveyed by the said Charles F. Hamblen, with exemption from State, county, and municipal taxation: And provided further, That the title to the land authorized to be acquired by this act shall be approved by the Attorney-General.

SEC. 2. That an open thoroughfare or street 60 feet in width shall be maintained along the northern boundary of the present military reservation known as the powder-house lot, and along the northern boundary of the lands which shall have been acquired as aforesaid by the United States, this provision to be operative when the city of St. Augustine shall by ordinance abolish that part of Marine street south of the north line of said powder-house lot, or sooner, at the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5130) to provide for the erection of a building for the Department of Justice.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the building now occupied by the Department of Justice is too small for its purpose, is unsafe, overcrowded, and dangerously overloaded, and has been so pronounced, after examination by the proper officials of the Treasury Department: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That a fireproof building shall be erected for the accommodation and use of the Department of Justice upon the ground belonging to the Government at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Madison place (Fifteen-and-a-half street N.W.), in the city of Washington, D. C., part of which is covered by the building now occupied by the Department; and the construction of said building shall be in charge of the Attorney-General, who shall be authorized and directed to select and adopt plans for the said building and to make contracts for its construction and for the removal of the old building, after proper advertisements and the reception of plans and bids, and to pay to the persons submitting the two sets of plans next in order of merit to those selected such sums as, in his judgment, shall be proper compensation for their preparation; and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and completing and furnishing the said building the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the money appropriated for said building shall be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General.

SEC. 2. That said building shall be constructed so as to provide a court room and necessary accommodations for the Court of Claims. In the meantime the Attorney-General is authorized to hire temporary quarters for the use of said court, and to remove said court and its records and archives thereto; and the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 3. That the Attorney-General shall annually report to Congress at the commencement of each session a detailed statement of all the proceedings made under the provisions of this act.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second to the motion, Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MERCER. Now I ask that the report of the committee be read, which is explanatory of the bill; and pending that, I ask that order be preserved on the floor of the House.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 5130 and House bill No. 11460, have considered the same and make the following report:

Your committee recommend that House bill No. 11460 lie on the table, and that Senate bill No. 5130, which is substantially the same as House bill No. 11460, do pass.

In support of this action your committee includes in its report and makes a part thereof the following letter from the Attorney-General of the United States, to wit:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1899.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose you herewith a copy of a bill which I have prepared to provide for the erection of a new building for the Department of Justice.

The condition of the present building is such as to render it imprudent for any of us to remain in it a day longer than is absolutely necessary. The danger arises from the overloading of the fourth story by the immense weight of the library, which is on that floor. The walls are cracking uniformly and the partitions are separating. The employees are becoming nervous and solicitous about their personal safety. Besides, the present building is utterly inadequate, and relief ought to be afforded for that reason as well.

Immediate relief can be obtained by hiring other quarters for the Court of Claims, which occupies the first floor of the present building, and then removing the library to that floor. The building can then be occupied by the Department until one wing of the new structure is completed, when we can move into that and tear down the old building.

The bill which I inclose provides for an appropriation for temporary quarters for the Court of Claims. I urgently request that you will forward the consideration of this bill and secure its passage at the earliest possible moment.

Another matter, which I do not add as a request, but which I make as a suggestion, is this: By securing the property adjoining the present structure on the east, lying between the present building and Fifteenth street, a much more handsome and spacious building could be erected. Many persons have recommended that course, and I personally approve it. I submit it to your judgment and to the judgment of the House. If you should deem it wise to adopt the latter course, the appropriation should be one and a half million dollars, and the phraseology of the bill should be modified accordingly.

It seems to me that the precarious condition of the Department building would justify your asking the committee to report the bill very speedily and the House to pass it under a suspension of the rules. I shall be happy to furnish you or the committee with any data upon the subject which you may require.

Very sincerely, yours,

JOHN W. GRIGGS.

Hon. DAVID H. MERCER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit an inquiry or two in regard to this bill. Who has it in charge, to begin with?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] presents the bill.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question. It is impossible to hear on this side of the House very much of what is going on, but I would like to inquire if it is probable, in the opinion of the gentleman who presents the bill, to explain that this building is so dangerous that there is a single one of the occupants who will resign if we do not provide a new one?

I want to call attention also to another thing before I take my seat.

Mr. MERCER. If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee is undoubtedly putting a question to me, but owing to the confusion on the floor I can not hear him.

Mr. COX. Then let us keep the House quiet for a little while, and I will make myself heard.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would like to ask a question—

Mr. COX. Pardon me a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor to ask a question.

Mr. COX. The whole purport of this report, when you get down to the common sense of the thing, is that these employees are very much disturbed by the fear that the building will fall down on them. Now, there is not a single one of them who will resign upon that ground. More than that, if you will say they will resign to-morrow, I will vote for the bill. [Laughter.] One more word, Mr. Speaker. We will get down to a little business before long here.

Mr. MERCER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. Oh, reserve all the time you please. That is all right. Now, let me put another question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox] for a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized to ask a question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. I am very much obliged to the gentleman, for I only want to ask one more question. Where are we going to stop in the appropriation of the money out of the Treasury of the United States? Here is a proposition to appropriate a million and a half for a building, and there is not a word in the report there to show that these gentlemen can not get along as well as the ordinary people of this country do. If they are afraid that they will be killed, why, I make a plain suggestion. Let them resign and get out of the building. We are not going to kill any of them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds whether it has ever occurred to the committee to remove the library from the fourth floor of that building to a lower floor, so as to obviate the danger complained of?

Mr. MERCER. I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that there is no place on a lower floor in which to place the books. I will add further that the Departments in this city are to blame for a good many things that they do with reference to their books. With the exception, perhaps, of one Government building in the city of Washington, they seem to take delight in placing their heavy books upon the third and fourth floors, a wrong place to put books.

This bill has been pending for a long while. The Attorney-General has urged its adoption, day after day. Other persons have urged its adoption. I will frankly admit to the gentleman from Missouri that if I had my way, and I believe if the committee had its way, we should be in favor of erecting a temple of justice in the city of Washington which not only would take care of the Attorney-General, the Supreme Court, the Court of Claims, and the appellate court of the District of Columbia, but would afford suitable accommodations for such a congress as the International Postal Congress and for international commissions like the American and Canadian High Joint Commission.

But the Attorney-General says there is not time to do anything of that kind; that the Government owns this ground; that this is an urgent case, and I place his request before this House, for it to assume the responsibility. And if this House desires to have another Ford's Theater disaster upon its hands, that is for the House to decide. I am following the suggestions of the Attorney-General, and the bill was drawn by the Attorney-General himself.

I submit an extract from the message of the President upon the Department of Justice building:

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO CONGRESS,
DECEMBER 5, 1898.

I deem it my duty to call to the attention of Congress the condition of the present building occupied by the Department of Justice. The business of that Department has increased very greatly since it was established in its present quarters. The building now occupied by it is neither large enough nor of suitable arrangement for the proper accommodation of the business of the Department.

The Supervising Architect has pronounced it unsafe and unsuited for the use to which it is put. The Attorney-General in his report states that the library of the Department is upon the fourth floor, and that all the space allotted to it is so crowded with books as to dangerously overload the structure. The first floor is occupied by the Court of Claims. The building is of an old and dilapidated appearance, unsuited to the dignity which should attach to this important Department.

A proper regard for the safety, comfort, and convenience of the officers and employees would justify the expenditure of a liberal sum of money in the erection of a new building of commodious proportions and handsome appearance upon the very advantageous site already secured for that purpose, including the ground occupied by the present structure and adjoining vacant lot, comprising in all a frontage of 201 feet on Pennsylvania avenue and a depth of 136 feet.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 28th instant requesting certain information in connection with the necessity for the construction of a building for the Department of Justice on the present site and upon the ground adjacent thereto, etc., and in reply, I have to advise you that after a conference held with officials of the Department of Justice it is estimated that 50 per cent more space is needed at present properly to accommodate said Department, and that in a few years double the present space will be required. Officials of the Department of Justice do not advise the construction of an addition to the present building, which is represented as inconvenient in arrangement of rooms and stories, but prefer a new building on the adjoining lot, which could be constructed and occupied and the present building then removed.

You are further advised that no proposition has been submitted to this Department by the Department of Justice for the construction of a building for the purposes indicated, and no plans have been drawn by the Supervising Architect of this Department in connection therewith, for the reason that no authority exists for the making of such plans.

From a necessarily hasty examination of such incomplete data as this Department has been able to obtain in regard to the requirements of the service for the purpose indicated it is estimated that a building of thoroughly fireproof construction, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and elevators, of sufficient size properly to provide for the present and future needs of the Department in question, can be erected for from $800,000 to $1,000,000.

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. DOCKERY. Did the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have an inspector or architect to examine the building to determine as to its safety?

Mr. MERCER. In reply to the gentleman from Missouri, I will say that the inspector of public buildings in this District has not officially condemned the building, but he did condemn it to the Attorney-General, and we have a letter from the Architect's Office saying that the building is unsafe.

Mr. DOCKERY. By your report you have condemned one of the public buildings of this District as being unsafe and propose to expend over a million of dollars for a new structure. The bill authorizes that expenditure. Now, of course, the committee has some official information upon which to rest their determination. I ask that the official report be read.

Mr. MERCER. I will say to the gentleman that the principal thing upon which we rested our action was a personal inspection of the building ourselves. The whole front of that building, running through the different partitions, shows a zig-zag break from an inch and a half to three inches wide. Paper has been pasted over that crack and the gradual breaking away of the walls has broken the paper. The crack has been enlarging for some time.

Mr. DOCKERY. How long has that crevasse been there?

Mr. MERCER. Two or three years, and it is constantly increasing. It started two years ago, I think.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is any member of the committee versed in architecture?

Mr. MERCER. I think they are now. They were not when they began the investigation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, Mr. Speaker, of course this million and twenty-five thousand dollars is going to follow the other millions that have preceded. This is perhaps a small matter, but I undertake to say that if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were dealing with this question as with their own affairs they would not proceed along these lines.

There is not a Representative here but who is willing to say that we should construct a new building for the Department of Justice, if it is obvious that the old building is unsafe. No one desires the employees of the Government—

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). To remain in an unsafe building.

Mr. HOPKINS. Have you been over and examined this building?

Mr. DOCKERY. If I had made the examination, I would know just as much as the gentleman from Nebraska, and that is nothing.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not think the gentleman would know as much; and I do not think the gentleman knows anything about that building.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose I am as well informed as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have studied the question of architecture somewhat—

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman claims to be informed on a great many things—

Mr. HOPKINS. And I have looked over this building.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know the gentleman from Illinois has frequently claimed to have greater knowledge upon many matters than others.

Mr. MERCER. He occupies the same position upon this matter as the gentleman from Missouri when he is looking at Joplin, Mo. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. What was it the gentleman from Blair, Nebr., said? [Laughter.] Pardon the reference to Blair. I know it is considered somewhat impertinent by the chairman of the committee to propound any inquiry along this line—

Mr. MERCER. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is evidently so from the reply the gentleman made; but at the risk of offending members of the committee, until noon next Saturday I propose to exercise my rights as a member of the House to make such inquiries. I know I can not stop the avalanche of appropriations, but I do desire to say—as I was about saying when interrupted by my architectural friend from Illinois [laughter]—that no gentleman on the floor desires the Attorney-General or the clerks to remain in that building if it is unsafe.

But I think the House is entitled to know whether there is official information. If there is, then, of course, we are willing to vote whatever is necessary for the Department of Justice. If I desired information upon a question of law, I do not know of any gentleman I would prefer to ask in preference to the present Attorney-General, an accomplished lawyer; but I imagine the Attorney-General is not competent to pass upon the questions involved in the safety of a building, so I hoped the gentleman had some official information upon which to rest this request for $1,025,000.

Mr. MERCER. I will say, with the permission of the House, that I will print in the RECORD the letter the gentleman refers to. I have it in my committee room.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman says he has official information condemning the building?

Mr. MERCER. I have a letter from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does he condemn this building?

Mr. MERCER. He says the building is unsafe.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why did not the gentleman say that before?

Mr. MERCER. I tried to say that to the gentleman, but I could not get him to hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Permit me to say a word.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON. You know I like the vigilance you exercise, and it is needed; and I have nothing unkind to say, because I appreciate what you are doing. I will say, however, that I am brought a good deal in contact with the Department of Justice, from the fact of my relation to the Department. I have been there, and have gone all over the building with the Attorney-General, who wanted me to see it and know the condition it was in.

I saw books piled up; I saw the cramped condition. I saw the Assistant Attorney-General and others sitting in little rooms where they had hardly room to turn their chairs around with a mass of papers in a space that is wholly inadequate. There is not a proper place for the library. In addition to this, at one end is an enormous crack, which extends from floor to floor, and at the other end a corresponding crack, showing that the building is working forward.

There are many places where it is cracked in addition to these two leading cracks which are working in sympathy. I am not an architect and have very little knowledge of building, although I have put up a few in my life, but I believe it to be an unsafe and dangerous place for men to be put in, and I believe it is a grave responsibility to defeat this bill. I will say further, with the exception of the Dubuque bill, this is the most meritorious bill reported from this committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman has made out a very strong case, in my opinion. Now, then, as there are official reports condemning the building, as the gentleman from Nebraska asserts, I shall not further object.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to say that it has been a fact well known by members of this House—

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am occupying the floor in my own right. It is a fact well known to members of this House that the building is unsafe. I have had the same experience, as expressed by my friend from Iowa, of going over the building within the last two weeks, and I was astonished to find it in so bad a condition. It is unsafe to human life, and in justice to the people who are compelled to go there to discharge their official duties we should make haste to provide for the construction of an entirely new building; and I trust that there will not be a vote on either side of the House in opposition to the bill as proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Nebraska propose to pass the Senate bill? I have just come in.

Mr. MERCER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to submit an amendment to the gentleman, or I will ask that the gentleman modify his motion so as to fix the limit of the cost of this building at $1,000,000.

Mr. MERCER. I am willing to do that.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask him to add a new section, which will throw it into conference, where it can be arranged. Add a new section in the following words: "The limit of the cost of said building is $1,000,000, and no plans therefor shall be accepted or the construction thereof entered upon that will involve an expenditure exceeding the limit of cost fixed herein."

Mr. MERCER. I am willing to do that.

Mr. CANNON. I believe with that the bill ought to pass, but without that they might enter upon the construction of a building that would cost three or five million dollars. That we need a building is right; that we have a good site is true; that a building there could be built that will properly house the Department of Justice and the Court of Claims for a million dollars, and do it in great style, I have no doubt.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska will be changed to a motion to suspend the rules and to pass the bill with the new section, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The limit of the cost of said building is $1,000,000; and no plan therefor shall be accepted or construction thereof entered upon that will involve an expenditure exceeding the limit of the cost herein.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether there has been any plan or estimate submitted by any proper authority?

Mr. MERCER. The Secretary of the Treasury informs me that a building can be built for from $800,000 to $1,000,000, and the Attorney-General says that it can be erected and furnished for $1,000,000.

Mr. LLOYD. But has any plan been submitted?

Mr. CANNON. No; there has not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the bill puts the entire construction under the supervision of the Attorney-General.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and I am inclined to think that is wise.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does that contemplate the construction of the building independent of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; just as the Printing Office, which will be agreed to, subject to the ratification of the House and Senate, to construct a Government Printing Office for $2,000,000. That is done under the Chief of Engineers without regard to the Supervising Architect's Office; and without abusing that office, I think that the best results in the erection of public buildings we get are upon plans made and construction entirely free from the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall not press the matter. Whatever doubt there may be as to the policy, the building will at least be built before the close of the twentieth century, and it may not be if it is left to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. MERCER. That is the very reason that the provision was inserted, so that it can be built within a reasonable time.

Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Is there any necessity for this building?

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, yes.

Mr. COX. Would the Government be hurt if we let the thing lie for another year?

Mr. CANNON. I suppose the Government could get along, although I will say to my friend that I am satisfied the library in this building should come down from the top of the building or else the employees should move out at once. I think it is really a work that ought to be commenced.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, STOCKTON AND LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Mr. MERCER. I send to the desk the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10882) to increase the cost for the erection of a public building in Stockton, Cal., and making provision for the acquisition of additional land or a new site therefor, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

DAVID H. MERCER,
 J. D. HICKS,
 J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.
 FRANCIS E. WARREN,
 H. D. MONEY,

Mr. MERCER. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask a further conference.

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Speaker, is it not in order to move that the House concur in the Senate amendments? May I not make that motion at this time?

Mr. MERCER. I make the point of order that the gentleman's proposition comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is still in order.

Mr. BARLOW. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments and concur in them.

Several MEMBERS. Let the amendments be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

At end of bill add:

"Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure a site for and cause to be erected thereon a suitable addition to the public building now the property of the United States in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., with fireproof vaults therein, for the adequate accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, internal revenue, customs offices, and other Government offices in the city of Los Angeles, Cal.

"The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and all improvements and additions, complete, the sum of $250,000; Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of California shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein; and there is hereby appropriated for the purchase of said site and the commencement of said additional building $100,000."

Amend the title to read as follows:

"An act to increase the limit of the cost for the erection of a public building in Stockton, Cal., and making provision for the acquisition of additional land or a new site therefor, and to provide for an addition to the public building at Los Angeles, Cal., and appropriating money therefor."

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to this amendment of the Senate. It is without precedent. In this case the House passed a public-building bill and sent it to the other end of the Capitol. An amendment was adopted there adding to our bill a bill for the construction of a building in another city, although in the same State. We have been in conference and have disagreed.

Now, sir, the amendment which the Senate has attached to this bill is really, as the matter now stands, the main bill, because the bill as passed by the House provided for a public building at Stockton, Cal., and called for $156,000 in authorization, while the Senate amendment provides for an authorization of $250,000. I hope the House will vote down the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. BARLOW]. I am not opposed to Los Angeles, but to the method adopted by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the report and the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] moves the previous question.

Mr. BARLOW. May I not have the privilege of making a statement?

Mr. DOCKERY. I trust the gentleman from Nebraska will allow the gentleman from California to state his case briefly. That is only fair.

Mr. BARLOW. I simply want to state the case to the House. Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California have two minutes.

Mr. BARLOW. I want five minutes.

Mr. MERCER. Very well, five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered and that the gentleman from California have five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which the Senate has placed on this bill is in its provisions the same as a bill which was passed by the Senate December 27, 1897, and sent to this House. It has been slumbering in the room of the Committee on Public Buildings ever since. I, being a new member and not understanding the methods by which public buildings were secured in that committee—supposing that these propositions were considered on their merits—did not see that I got in on that omnibus bill.

Now, I want simply to lay the situation before the House; and if gentlemen do not think that there is a necessity for a post-office at Los Angeles, let them vote the amendment down. On the other hand, if the House believes that there is a necessity for a post-office building at that place, then I ask it simply to let the precedent go, as we do in many other cases, indeed in most cases, and vote to meet this public necessity.

I want to give just one or two items in regard to the business at the post-office at Los Angeles. Last year the gross receipts were $212,000; the net receipts $111,888. The money-order division handled during the past year upward of $4,000,000; the registered division nearly 300,000 pieces of registered mail. It is the railway center of the Southwest and distributing point for all of southern California, Arizona, and New Mexico.

The following public offices are located in that building: The United States circuit judge, the United States district judge, with one court room for both; the clerk of the United States circuit court and the district court, with one office between them; the United States district attorney; the United States marshal; the chief clerk of the Railway Mail Service, who has only one room and no private room for the examination of the postal clerks; the United States pension examiners; the United States post-office inspector, who has no office at all, and is compelled to keep his records in the jury room; the railway postal clerks' supply room in the dormitory, an unfinished room next to the roof utterly unsuited for the purpose desired.

Outside of this, and living in rented rooms, are also a number of Government officials, the United States land office, the United States internal revenue, United States assistant marshal, the post-office inspector, the railway clerk, and various other officials of the Government, who have no accommodation of any kind provided for them.

Mr. MERCER. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is not already a public building in that city?

Mr. BARLOW. There is a public building in that city; but it was erected when the city had a population of 30,000 people. We now have a population of 120,000, and the accommodations are wholly insufficient. The post-office inspector reports that while we have five windows for the delivery of the mail, yet it is not an unusual thing for men, women, and children to be strung out in a line of 150 feet into the street, waiting to be accommodated at the delivery window.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will pass; and it seems scarcely reasonable to think that there can be opposition to its passage.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would like to ask the gentleman how this city compares with the city of Blair, Nebr.? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Speaker, I am not fighting anybody else, or any other location. I am only asking what I know to be necessary in connection with this bill and this city. There is an absolute necessity for the building there, and it ought to have been provided for years ago.

Mr. BRUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand correctly that this bill passed in 1897?

Mr. BARLOW. The bill passed the Senate on the 27th of December, 1897.

Mr. BRUCKER. And it has been on the Calendar and unacted upon by the House during all of this time?

Mr. BARLOW. That is the case. The bill has never been acted upon, and is now brought up in the shape of an amendment, as has been suggested.

Mr. BRUCKER. Well, the bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman to recede and agree to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARLOW) there were—ayes 89, noes 81.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. MERCER and Mr. BARLOW as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 117, noes 60.

Mr. MERCER. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to recede and concur; and there were—yeas 134, nays 64, answered "present" 10, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—134.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOCKPORT, N. Y.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I have another conference report on a bill in the same condition as the one just acted upon. The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 500) for the erection of a public building at Lockport, N. Y., having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

DAVID H. MERCER,
J. D. HICKS,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.
FRANCIS E. WARREN,
H. D. MONEY,

Mr. MERCER. The House having expressed its opinion upon that, I now move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment in this case.

Mr. STEELE. If I understand the gentleman from Nebraska, it is proposed that the House shall recognize the right of another body to add whatever it pleases to these bills.

Mr. MERCER. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that the House apparently has recognized it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.
The amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 500) for the erection of a public building at Lockport, N. Y., on which the committee of conference disagreed, were read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the borough of New Brighton and State of Pennsylvania, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000; and

Amend the title so as to read: "An act for the erection of public buildings at Lockport, N. Y., and New Brighton, Pa."

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire). The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move the previous question upon that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BARRETT. I think I have just been recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. BARRETT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRETT. I was sitting trying to hear the name of the place where the proposed building is to be erected, but was unable to hear it. We ought to hear, so that we may know how to vote on these questions.

Mr. MERCER. The amendment is to insert "New Brighton, Pa." in the bill, and calls for $75,000.

Mr. BARRETT. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair declines to give us proper information the Chair will keep order so that it will be possible for us to hear what is going on at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks for the previous question.

Mr. HANDY. I would like to appeal to the gentleman—

Mr. HOPKINS. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HANDY (continuing). To give us information as to the necessity for this bill.

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman did not need any information on the other bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HANDY. We had information on the other bill, but not a word on this bill.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARRETT and Mr. HANDY. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 3.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HICKS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House receded and concurred in the Senate amendments was agreed to, and the latter motion laid on the table.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. Let us quit.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House adjourn.

IMPERSONATION OF WEIGHMASTERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a conference report, which takes precedence of a motion to adjourn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 503) to punish the impersonation of weighmasters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 3.
That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of striking out section 2 add at the end of section 2 the following proviso: "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to prohibit the sale of corn on the cob by the barrel;" and the Senate agree to the same.

G. M. CURTIS,
JOHN J. JENKINS,
W. S. COWHERD,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
A. P. GORMAN,
R. R. KENNEY,

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The Senate recedes from its amendments, with the proviso that corn may be sold on the cob by the barrel.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I have another conference report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I renew my motion that the House adjourn, but withhold it for a moment to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to make a personal request.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as I find it impossible to secure unanimous consent to make a speech on the floor, I ask permission to extend remarks in the RECORD, being a speech upon the beginning and present status and the movement to secure reform in the Treasury and banking and currency laws, covering the ten years of my service in the House. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to print those remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the remarks of the gentleman contain criticisms and reflections upon members of his committee, and I object.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If they do not, I have no objection. If they do, I want the gentleman to deliver his remarks in the House, and then I shall ask the House for leave to answer. If the gentleman from Massachusetts says there is nothing personal to myself in his speech, I have no objection to his printing it, but if there is I want the gentleman to have an opportunity to be heard, and I desire an opportunity to answer him.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I want an opportunity to be heard; but I find it impossible to get unanimous consent. My remarks contain nothing but what I have a right to say on the floor if I had the opportunity; and I will not be put under any restriction other than the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I object, unless the gentleman states positively that there is nothing personal to myself in that which he desires to have published. He has advertised that he intended to assail members of his committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I renew my motion to adjourn, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is a conference report, which takes precedence.

CONTROL OF WHARF PROPERTY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10294) relative to the control of wharf property and certain public spaces in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, and 8, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out of said amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War is authorized to grant permission to the Department of Agriculture for the temporary occupation of such area or areas of Potomac Park, not exceeding a total of 75 acres in extent, as may not be needed in any one season for the reclamation or park improvement, the said areas to be used by the Department of Agriculture as testing grounds: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to change the essential character of the lands so used, which lands shall continue to be a public park, as provided in the act of Congress approved March 3, 1897: And provided further, That said area or areas shall be vacated by the Department of Agriculture at the close of any season upon the request of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the entire park shall remain under the charge of the Secretary of War."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following:

"That on or before January 1, 1903, the fence around the Botanical Garden shall be removed: Provided, That at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress the Joint Committee on Library is directed to report a bill embodying a plan for removing the Botanical Garden to another location."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 9.

G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
W. B. COWHERD,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,

The statement was read, as follows:

CONTROL OF WHARVES AND PUBLIC SPACES.

The bill provides for the control of the parks and wharves of the District. Certain provisions in it have already become law and are eliminated. The Secretary of War retains control of all parks, but is allowed to permit temporary privileges to the Secretary of Agriculture. The provision for the removal of the fence around the Botanical Garden is modified, so as to allow three years for the removal and to direct the Joint Committee on Library to report plans for making the garden into a park.

The conference report was agreed to.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 3, 1899.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.
On motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the deficiency appropriation bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. After I get the bill up I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached. The Chair hears no objection, and that course will be pursued. The Senator from Maine yields to the Senator from Nebraska.

NATIONAL WHITE CROSS OF AMERICA.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5583) to incorporate the National White Cross of America, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HALE. There are one or two cases like this, to which I will yield. Of course, if it leads to discussion I must object.

Mr. ALLEN. It will not lead to any discussion at all. The bill has been read.

Mr. HALE. There are two large appropriation bills not through; but I have agreed to yield in one or two cases that will give rise to no debate.

Mr. ALLEN. There will be none whatever on the bill. There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5583) to incorporate the National White Cross of America, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read. There are amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 21, page 2, after the word "merchandise," insert "for hospital purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, page 3, line 3, after the word "America," strike out the words "is also authorized to hold real estate in the United States so far only as may be necessary for its lawful purposes, and to an amount not exceeding $1,000,000 in value, and it."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, after the word "Cross," to insert the words "of America."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECKNAGEL &amp; CO.

Mr. HALE. I agreed also that Senate bill 2409 might be taken up. It is the same bill that was up the other day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2409) for the relief of Recknagel & Co.; which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, page 3, section 1, after the word "sums," to strike out "with legal interest thereon;" and in line 10, page 3, after the word "argols," to strike out:

In excess of the duty of 3 cents per pound, which was exacted or which would have been exacted upon importations of the same kind of merchandise under the decision or decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury and the revenue laws of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1874, or immediately prior to the revision of the statutes.

And insert:

Imported by them under the terms of, or in pursuance of, or for the purpose of fulfilling, any contracts or accepted orders entered into by the said firm for the sale of said merchandise by said firm prior to said 31 day of October, 1874, in excess of the duty of 3 cents per pound.

So as to make the section read:

That the said Carl L. Recknagel and Rudolph Pagenstecher and Albrecht Pagenstecher, as now or formerly composing the said firm of Recknagel & Co., or their legal representatives or successors in interest, recover from the United States of America whatever sums were paid by the said firm to the collector of the port of New York between the 22d day of June, 1874, and the 1st day of July, 1883, upon all importations of argols other than crude, or argols partially refined or brown argols partially refined, or brown argols, imported by them under the terms of, or in pursuance of, or for the purpose of fulfilling, any contracts or accepted orders entered into by the said firm for the sale of said merchandise by said firm prior to said 31 day of October, 1874, in excess of the duty of 3 cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the bill will not be further considered just at this time.

Mr. HALE. Very well. I only agreed that it should be taken up if it did not give rise to any debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to look at it before it passes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa objects, and of course that is the end of it. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] said he would not insist upon his objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not had time to examine the bill. If the Senator from Connecticut has examined it, I will not interfere with its passage.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What is the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the bill for the relief of Recknagel & Co.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is it a bill that interferes with the present tariff regulations or something of that sort?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It relates to the collection of customs.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I got the impression that it was a change of the law in some particular.

Mr. HALE. I know nothing about it except that it came up the other day, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] objected to it and it went over. Since then—

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my objection to the bill.

Mr. HALE. Is there any further objection to the bill to which the amendments have been made? If there is any objection, of course it can not be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Maine will yield for morning business?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. We ought to have a chance to transact morning business.

Resolved, That the senate of the State of Washington (the house concurring), do by memorial respectfully and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States to make provisions for submitting a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people: And be it further

SEBASTIAN BECKERD.

Mr. CULLOM. There is a bill upon the table that came from the House which I should like to have laid before the Senate, if agreeable. I think there will be no objection to it at all. It is a bill in which a colleague of mine in the other House from Illinois is interested. That colleague is unfortunately so nearly blind that he can hardly get about. I ask that it be laid before the Senate and be put upon its passage.

The bill (H. R. 3973) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Sebastian Beckerd was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby is, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the military record of Sebastian Beckerd, late of Company I, First Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay or emoluments be allowed or paid by reason of passage of this act.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill been to any committee of the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. It has not. It is a bill in which the Representative of the St. Clair district of Illinois, Mr. BAKER, is intensely interested. He says the poor man never was actually guilty of desertion, and his report will show it, and that his wife is struggling to take care of the family—doing washing and all that sort of thing. He has been appealing to me for several days to have the bill passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not just or fair that we should take up these House bills and pass them without any examination by any member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that I consulted the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs about it, and I tried to find the Senator from Missouri to speak with him on the same subject, but I was unable to do so.

Mr. COCKRELL. This will be the last bill of the kind that will pass, I give notice.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES SWEET.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion against Charles Sweet, he being a soldier in the Union Army in the late war, and member of Company F, Eighty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, the charge being of desertion from Company B, First Battalion, Eighteenth United States Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge as of the 9th day of October, 1861: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on Finance were agreed to yesterday.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 11712) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library. I am very anxious to have the bill passed. It was read yesterday, and I desire to get it into conference.

Mr. HALE. If it gives rise to no debate, I will yield.

Mr. McMILLAN. It was debated last night, and I think there will be no further discussion upon it. I wish to get the bill through so as to put it into conference.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read through. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported as a substitute by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the bill go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. McMILLAN subsequently said: The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has withdrawn his objection to the library-building bill which was under consideration, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution for the appointment of Lyman B. Perkins, late of the Navy, to be a passed assistant engineer."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have in my hand a bill which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are exceedingly anxious to have enacted into law. It is a House bill, to which there can be no possible objection. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12184) to distinctively designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation.

Payment to Utah: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is, authorized and directed to pay to the persons, firms, and corporations the amounts assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and collected in the district of Utah in 1877, 1878, and 1879 as a tax of 10 per cent on alleged notes used for circulation and paid out, and which have not heretofore been refunded, as appears from the records and accounts of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, such sums not refunded aggregating $12,126.75.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to have some explanation from the Senator in charge of the bill of what this amendment means. It is entitled "Payment to Utah," but it appears as it reads that it is a payment to certain persons, firms, and corporations of a sum of money collected over twenty years ago "as a tax of 10 per cent on alleged notes used for circulation." As the amendment reads, it is very vague and not understandable, at least to those of us who know nothing about it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is a matter which has been presented to the Committee on Claims and examined by the committee, and it has the approval of the Department. The Government collected from a large number of mercantile establishments in the Territory of Utah a tax of 10 per cent upon certificates or notes used for circulation. The court decided that they did not fall within the provision of the statute which provided a 10 per cent tax. All the large claims, those which could get into court, were paid. This is to pay a large number of claims, some of which would not amount to more than $50, and some to $100, and so on. I think there are at least fifty persons or more who will be included.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask if this provision has the approval of the Department?

Mr. TELLER. It has the approval of the Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, I suggest, at least for the sake of accuracy, that the amendment should be amended so that it will not read "Payment to Utah." It appears on the face of it to be a payment to one of the States of the Union.

Mr. HALE. That should not be, of course, and the caption is wrong.

Mr. TELLER. It should be "Payment to citizens of Utah."

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. I move to amend by inserting before the word "Utah," the words "citizens of."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the caption by inserting before the word "Utah" the words "citizens of;" so as to read, "Payment to citizens of Utah."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think the Senate ought to accept the amendment even in that form, because some of those people might not now be citizens of Utah.

Mr. HALE. I had thought of that.

Mr. SPOONER. Why not simply say, "refunding of taxes?"

Mr. HALE. It will make no difference, as it is merely a caption.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the caption ought to go out.

Mr. HALE. Let it be struck out entirely.

Mr. TELLER. I will accept that suggestion, and move to strike out the caption.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment, in line 24, by striking out the caption "Payment to Utah."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, after line 10, to insert:

Payment to Wyoming: To pay to the State of Wyoming the actual amount paid out by the Territory of Wyoming during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886 for expenses incurred in preserving the formation, natural curiosities, and objects of interest in the Yellowstone National Park, through patrolling, policing, and governing, after it was declared a national reservation and before United States troops were placed therein for its protection, $7,780.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 12, after the word "the," to strike out "fiscal year 1898, $1,088.77" and insert "fiscal years as follows: For the fiscal year 1899, $309.46; for the fiscal year 1888, $3,011.74;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Contingent expenses, Treasury Department: Freight, telegrams, etc.," for the fiscal years as follows: For the fiscal year 1899, $309.46; for the fiscal year 1888, $3,011.74.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I submit an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may lie on the table without being printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, on page 80, but I have not a copy of the bill now before me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The agreement was that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations should first be acted upon. Does the Senator desire to offer the amendment now?

Mr. MILLS. No; I will wait until the reading is concluded. I do not want to be precluded from offering the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the committee amendments have been acted upon the bill will be open to amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 9, after line 2, to insert:

Vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings: For vaults, safes, and locks, and repairs to the same, for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire of the Senator having this bill in charge whether the amendments on page 13 relating to public buildings are amendments to carry out provisions of law which have already been passed, or whether they are new provisions inserted here without statutes or bills for such buildings having been passed?

Mr. HALE. The policy which the committee adopted was to put nothing in the bill but what had passed the Houses.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And bills have passed both Houses which are represented by these amendments?

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt of it. That was the policy and purpose of the committee.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, after line 8, to insert:

For old post-office building at Omaha, Nebr.: For the introduction of new plumbing, steam-heating plant, elevator with freight attachment, plastering, painting, and making such other repairs as are required and necessary to put the old post-office building, Omaha, Nebr., in condition for occupancy as headquarters, Department of the Missouri, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 19, after line 2, to insert:

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me that I may submit a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope Senators will give attention to this report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report. During the reading of the report,

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I unfortunately have a bill here in which the amendments are not numbered. I ask unanimous consent to call attention to an amendment which reads as follows:

For geological and topographical surveys in Alaska, 1898 and 1899, $7,089.60.

I realize the utter impossibility of accomplishing any sort of reduction in the constantly increasing appropriations for the Geological Survey, and it seems as if no bill ever came into the Senate that did not have something in it for the Geological Survey. I have no doubt there is something in the Navy personnel bill, if it were carefully examined, that would bring grist to the mill of the Geological Survey. I should say, by the way, that each year's appropriations for the Geological Survey steadily grow larger and larger.

We have already appropriated, I think, some twenty to twenty-five million dollars for the Geological Survey of the United States. It is all charged to the West, and the West gets very little benefit from it. If the business were to be continued on its present plan throughout the United States, it would cost several hundred millions of dollars before this work of the Geological Survey is completed, the great portion of which is useless except from an aesthetic and sentimental point of view.

I ask that the amendment "For geological and topographical surveys in Alaska, 1898 and 1899, $7,089.60," be amended by adding thereto the following words:

And the appropriations for the next fiscal year for the continuance of the investigation of the coal and gold resources of Alaska shall be reduced by such amount.

It is not a great hardship. Over in the other body they got three hundred and odd thousand dollars. When it got over here in the hands of this obliging and liberal Committee on Appropriations, we find that we increased the appropriation for the Geological Survey some $70,000, and of this amount $25,000 goes into Alaska to investigate its coal and gold resources. It does seem to me that if we are called upon now to pay the deficiency from last year out of a very large appropriation, it would not be too much out of place if we let that come out of the $25,000 they are to have for next year.

I call attention year after year—some years I skip it—to the Geological Survey from a sense of duty, thinking that perhaps some day this constant dropping may wear away the stone. I have not much hope of it, but I do feel it my duty, whenever the Geological Survey appropriation comes up, to go out of the Senate Chamber or object to it, and happening to be in the Chamber now I move the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand I am in order, if there is no objection made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that a conference report, signed by the conferees of the House and Senate, can not be amended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Must the Geological Survey have, in addition to all the other money, this, too?

Mr. ALLISON. If this becomes a law, they will be obliged to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is no way out of it?

Mr. ALLISON. I see none. If they want to expend it, they will have the opportunity.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am afraid that the seed which I have scattered will fall into stony ground.

Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid so myself.

The reading of the conference report was resumed and concluded, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
A. P. GORMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,

W. H. MOODY,

THOMAS C. MCRAE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to occupy but a moment. In the disagreements on the public building amendments involved in amendment numbered 10, Nos. 8, 6, 4, 3, 2, 11, 21, 22, 23, 24, are still in disagreement. The House conferees insist that our amendment numbered 10, which embraces a large number of public buildings, shall be carefully scrutinized so as to include only those buildings for which bills have passed both Houses.

So, although nominally amendment No. 10 is disagreed to, as soon as we can ascertain what bills were provided for by the two Houses at the time this amendment was agreed to in the Senate they will be inserted if they are found in the Senate amendment. Those bills which have passed both Houses and are not found in the Senate amendment have been placed upon the deficiency bill this morning. The situation as respects these public buildings is that the House refuses thus far to assent to the insertion of appropriations for any of the public buildings, bills for which have not passed both Houses and which have not been provided for by separate statutes. Therefore they are all in disagreement.

Amendments Nos. 75, 76, and 77 relate to the Zoological Park, where there are some differences of detail and disagreement. No. 88 is the appraiser at Boston. Amendment No. 140—and I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to it—is disagreed to, the contention on the part of the House being that in the river and harbor bill, which is now pending between the two Houses in conference, the provision for the improvement of Yaquina Bay is repealed, and they decline to consider the question of an appropriation for that harbor until the question of the repeal is settled. Of course, if the law authorizing the improvement of Yaquina Bay is not repealed, they would consent that the appropriation may stand. There is also in the bill an amendment respecting the appropriation for the Missouri River.

Amendment No. 155 relates to the Hot Springs sanitarium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., which is in disagreement. No. 161 is a footing depending upon that amendment. Amendment No. 163 is the amendment placed on the bill by the Senate relating to a submarine cable between the Pacific ports of the United States and Hawaii. The House thus far has refused to consent to any part of this amendment remaining in the bill. These are the differences. The agreements read at the desk I will be glad to explain if any Senator desires special knowledge on this question.

Mr. VEST. I should be glad to hear from the Senator from Iowa in regard to the Missouri River.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate inserted an amendment relating to the Missouri River appropriation, adding a hundred thousand dollars to the amount inserted by the House. To this the House have not thus far assented, claiming that the $100,000 is in excess of the amount heretofore authorized by law.

Mr. MASON. I could not hear all that the Senator from Iowa said, and I desire to understand what the position is in regard to the cable to Hawaii.

Mr. ALLISON. The House conferees refuse to agree to the cable or any part of it as inserted by the Senate, and therefore that is in disagreement. The Senate conferees did not think that they were authorized, after the almost unanimous vote of the Senate, to surrender the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. If I understood the Senator from Iowa in regard to these public buildings, a practical agreement has been reached, not completed in detail, however, to the effect that where bills have passed both Houses creating a law for the public buildings, then the appropriation is made according to the amount the Senate has put in.

Mr. ALLISON. According to the adjustment made by the Senate in amendment numbered 10.

Mr. MORGAN. That I understand excludes all public buildings that have not passed both Houses. Am I correct about that?

Mr. ALLISON. Their contention excludes all bills that have not passed both Houses of Congress. It excludes the building at Salem. It excludes the buildings at Evanston, at Deadwood, and one or two others that I do not just at this moment have in mind.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to express the hope that our conferees will not submit to this exaction on the part of the House. While this bill was under consideration in the Senate the bars were pulled down in the House, no doubt by agreement with the majestic or magisterial hand that controls the destiny of the United States in a great many particulars, and bills came flooding over here for these respective public buildings. They came in shoals and rafts, and once in a while we would notice a subsidence of the action of the Senate waiting for more bills to get into the hopper to be ground out.

That was favoritism of the worst kind, not on the part of our committee, but it was favoritism in the House, favoritism on account of members of the House who were devoted to reelection in their respective districts. I take occasion to denounce that as a fraud upon legislation and a contrivance to which the Senate of the United States ought not to submit. The bills which were put on this appropriation bill by the vote of the Senate were bills that had been considered here, and had been voted for by this body, and which the House, exercising its own rightful pleasure, had refused to consider at all, thereby picking and culling and putting such bills into the form of law as they chose to do.

Now, sir, I am informed—I do not know that I am correct as to my information, and I should be very glad to be corrected if I am not correctly informed—that those bills have not yet received the approval of the President. These bills which passed the House of Representatives, this great flood of bills that came upon us the other day in this peculiar way, have not yet been approved by the President. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the position in which we would be in the event that the President withholds his approval from some of those bills.

That remark, Mr. President, is intended to emphasize the fact that the House has succeeded in passing bills upon its own recommendation and refused to permit bills to be passed upon the recommendation of the Senate, for a House bill containing no appropriation and brought over here and acted upon in this body and which had not been submitted to the President of the United States, a bill upon which the ink was not dry at the time it came from the House over here, can not have any advantage at all in law or morals or public policy or justice over a Senate bill passed under similar circumstances and passed a few days beforehand in this body after consideration.

I object to this kind of logrolling. If we have to logroll in order to get justice done to our respective States and localities, I want it to be done so that all who are invited to the logrolling shall have somewhat of a show in it; and I undertake to denounce that as an abuse of legislative power. It is a fraud and an outrage, and the committee will find itself involved in very serious trouble if, after we have concurred in their report and passed these amendments, the President of the United States shall withhold his approval, as I hope he will do, from many of these bills.

Now, I insist, Mr. President, that every Senator here and every State ought to be treated with something like fairness and justice, and that a bill ought not to be rejected merely because it has passed the Senate and the House refuses to consider it, if you please, and then turn around and consider a bill and put it upon this appropriation when the House has passed it, and we whip it through like an auction sale, without the consideration of the merits of any one of these propositions. I sat here and saw a number of these bills pass, more than twenty, and it was done in such a hurry that names of many of the places were oftentimes mistaken on the floor of the Senate. They went through in a rush. I am opposed out and out to this method of dealing with public affairs.

I know exactly where it came from. I know the origin of this run upon the legislation of the United States. I know the very man who inspired it, and his will and pleasure were to make fair weather for certain purposes with certain members of the House by letting their bills go through, after many of them had been importuning and dunning him for a year to have recognition to get their bills passed through the House of Representatives.

Now, sir, I do not wish to speak in a spirit of criticism that is not just, but this is just, this is right and fair, and I hope the Senate will adhere to its bill on this question and not permit this kind of an arrangement to be made for the satisfaction of a particular set of men who happen to be the favorites of a particular ruler in the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANTLE. If I understood the reading of the conference report aright, it recommends that the Senate recede from amendment No. 101. I wish to state that that is an amendment which is proposed by my colleague [Mr. CARTER], who is at this moment absent from the Chamber in attendance upon a committee meeting. He has requested that I ask that a separate vote be taken upon this amendment in agreeing to the conference report. I make the request that it be done, if possible.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Montana that it can not be done on a conference report.

Mr. MANTLE. I am very sorry indeed that the Senate conferees have consented to the Senate striking out that provision. The situation is one of a great deal of moment to the State of Montana. In many instances about one-half of an entire county has been set aside recklessly for the use of these reservoirs without any reference to their practical utility.

I suppose, Mr. President, it is useless to argue the case at this time. For my part I feel like voting against the recommendation that the Senate shall recede from these amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa who has charge of the bill what became of amendment numbered 3?

Mr. ALLISON. It is in disagreement. It has not been agreed to. The condition with respect to amendment numbered 3 involves the same contention that the House conferees make in regard to all public buildings that have not a separate and distinct authorization of law.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to state some information to the Senator, which I hope he will convey to the House conferees. This is a peculiar case and is in no wise analogous to the others, except in the one particular the Senator mentions.

Here is a building that has been provided with all the money the people of that vicinity are asking for, plans were made, the contract let, the excavation made, and all of the material on hand to complete the building up to the main floor; brickwork, stone and cut-stone work all in place and on ground. The basement, or first floor, is nearly finished. I will state how the requirement for this appropriation occurred. The Treasury Department did not make borings to ascertain to a certainty the character of the soil, as should have been done, before the foundation was commenced.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that every line of that report giving an explanation as to the building at Cheyenne was read by the Senate conferees to the House conferees. The Senate conferees placed them in possession of all the facts stated in the report and also other facts stated to me by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I desire simply to add that this action will mean, if it shall come to pass, that the amendment can not be adopted, that operations will have to be suspended upon the Cheyenne building, and that the people will be without the use of the public building there and the Government must continue to do its business with the public offices scattered over the town, as at present, until some later Congress takes action.

The building suffers in the meantime and the constructed work will greatly deteriorate. It is impossible to rearrange the plans and reduce the building to get within the appropriation because it is only a three-story building, and to take off the upper story would leave insufficient floorage room.

So we are in such a condition that we must absolutely suspend entirely the erection of the building unless we can get this further sum, and the Government will be with their money invested and without either income from it or use of it in a building. As I remarked before, the building will be deteriorating from day to day.

I trust that the conferees on the part of the Senate will use their best endeavors, on account of the extreme condition there and the peculiar circumstances, to retain this amendment, because it absolutely means an abandonment of the building until the next Congress appropriates, unless the amendment can be maintained.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what action was taken by the conferees in regard to the amendment providing for a public building at Durham, N. C.?

Mr. ALLISON. That is in disagreement.

Mr. BUTLER. Just as the buildings in Alabama and Wyoming?

Mr. ALLISON. They stand in exactly the same relation.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I wish to repeat and emphasize what the Senator from Alabama has so well said. The case of Durham, N. C., is more meritorious than that of half of the buildings for the construction of which bills have been railroaded through the House.

In 1885 the post-office's gross receipts at Durham were $5,545; the net receipts were $3,835. Last year the gross receipts had jumped to $16,430.09, and the net receipts were $8,090.28. That is a free-delivery office. The internal-revenue collections in that town last year were $1,253,090.43. Two of the largest tobacco factories in the world are located there. It is one of the most progressive towns in our State. It bids fair soon to be one of the largest. There was enough tobacco to ship from Durham for export on which there were no internal-revenue taxes paid to have made the internal-revenue collector tax alone amount to $2,259,952.79.

I dare say that this case of Durham is more meritorious than or equally meritorious as any of the dozen of the many bills that have passed, and more so than a large number of them. I for one protest against this method of favoritism in legislating and rail-roading bills through, giving little towns that do not deserve it a public building and leaving out such towns as Durham, N. C. If we had towns the size of Durham provided with public buildings and we had the money, I would be willing and in favor of erecting public buildings wherever there was any substantial reason for doing so, but I submit that Congress can not afford to turn down a great and growing town like Durham and construct public buildings galore in towns half the size and with one-fourth to one-tenth the business.

Mr. President, if a public building can not be built in a town like Durham, in this bill, then the Senate should ask the conference committee on the part of the Senate to disagree to all the public buildings in the bill. If a measure as meritorious as this can not go in, then why should any go in less meritorious?

Now, Mr. President, one word about amendment numbered 163. I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the House conferees object to any part of the amendment providing for a Pacific cable. The amendment as sent to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and as adopted by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations provided for the building of a submarine cable from some point on the Pacific coast not only to Honolulu, but to Manila by way of the Midway Islands and Guam, both of which belong to the United States, and also a branch to Yokohama. That amendment had been considered for some time in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

A subcommittee of that committee had the bill submitted to the Post-Office Department and to the Navy Department. The estimates of the Navy Department were secured, and all the information gathered was laid before the Committee on Appropriations with letters from the Navy Department suggesting certain amendments, which were incorporated. The total cost of the whole cable, not only to Manila, but with a branch line to Yokohama, was less than $7,000,000. The Senate cut the amendment down, providing for a cable to Honolulu with an appropriation of $2,000,000.

Now, I submit that there can be no possible objection in my mind to building the cable the whole distance, but the objection was raised by some one that we had not yet acquired the island of Luzon and that therefore we should not extend the cable farther than our possessions. But we certainly own the Hawaiian Islands; they are a part of this Government technically, but without a cable they are in fact not a part of us. They are farther from us than almost any other spot on the globe without a cable.

We had an object lesson with the Oregon the other day that is as strong an object lesson for the building of this cable as the former trip of the Oregon around Cape Horn was for the building of the Nicaragua Canal. When the message of Admiral Dewey came that he needed the Oregon at Manila, where was the Oregon? It was at Honolulu. Here the Navy Department stood desiring to wire to Captain Clark to take the Oregon at once to Manila, and yet to one of our possessions for one of our most magnificent vessels we had to send a boat with a message, taking a number of days instead of a few minutes.

Mr. President, if we are not going to have a cable there we can not afford to have an important vessel there that we may need at some other point in case of an emergency. If we do not need a cable to Honolulu, then why should we have annexed the islands to this country? What do we want a coaling station and dry docks there for? What do we want with it at all, if we are not to be in speaking distance of it?

Mr. President, a few days ago the President of the United States, realizing the importance of this cable, even before the incident of the Oregon occurred, sent a message to Congress, which I ask to have read. He urged Congress before it adjourned to take steps not only for building of a cable to Honolulu, but also to Manila by way of Honolulu.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As a consequence of the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain, and its expected ratification by the Spanish Government, the United States will come into possession of the Philippine Islands, on the farther shores of the Pacific. The Hawaiian Islands and Guam becoming United States territory, and forming convenient stopping places on the way across the sea, the necessity for speedy cable communication between the United States and all these Pacific Islands has become imperative.

Such communication should be established in such a way as to be wholly under the control of the United States, whether in time of peace or of war. At present the Philippines can be reached only by cables which pass through many foreign countries, and the Hawaiian Islands and Guam can only be communicated with by steamers, involving delays in each instance of at least a week. The present condition should not be allowed to continue for a moment longer than is absolutely necessary.

So long ago as 1885 reference was made in an Executive message to Congress to the necessity for cable communication between the United States and Hawaii. This necessity has greatly increased since then. The question has been discussed in the Fifty-second, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses, in each of which some effort has been made looking toward laying a cable, at least as far as the Hawaiian Islands. The time has now arrived when a cable in the Pacific must extend at least as far as Manila, touching at the Hawaiian Islands and Guam on the way.

Two methods of establishing this cable communication at once suggest themselves: First, construction and maintenance of such a cable by and at the expense of the United States Government; and second, construction and maintenance of such a cable by a private United States corporation, under such safeguards as Congress shall impose.

I do not make any recommendations to Congress as to which of these methods would be the more desirable. A cable of the length of that proposed requires so much time for construction and laying that it is estimated that at least two years must elapse after giving the order for the cable before the entire system could be successfully laid and put in operation. Further deep-sea soundings must be taken west of the Hawaiian Islands before the final route for the cable can be selected. Under these circumstances it becomes a paramount necessity that measures should be taken before the close of the present Congress to provide such means as may seem most suitable for the establishment of a cable system.

I commend the whole subject to the careful consideration of the Congress and to such prompt action as may seem advisable.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Washington, February 10, 1899.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is impossible for me to state the important reasons for the building of this cable any stronger than the President has stated them in that message. I submit that Congress should respond promptly and cheerfully to the appeal of the President. But even if Congress did not have that faith in the President's wisdom and judgment, the object lesson we have had in the case of the Oregon in the last few weeks seems to me an argument that is unanswerable and should appeal to every Senator.

I trust that the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist, and continue to insist, upon this amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to concur in what the Senator from North Carolina has said about the immediate importance of the Hawaiian cable. I also call the subject to the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who has officiated so acceptably as one of the commissioners to Hawaii. The amendment as it was originally proposed by the Senator from North Carolina provided for a cable to the Philippines, a complete system of Pacific cable. I forget what the Committee on Foreign Relations proposed, but I believe it was their proposition that there should be—

Mr. HALE. Their proposition was to subsidize a line for a cable clear to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the two propositions were, one of aid to a private company to build to the Philippines, and the other for the construction by the Government of a cable to Honolulu and the Philippine Islands. Now, the Senate Committee on Appropriations cut down the project and made it a provision for a cable to Honolulu. The Senator from Maine, whom I see here, has been trying, lo, these ten years to secure the construction of a cable to Hawaii. We could not accomplish it, as Hawaii was independent. It would seem as if we might accomplish it without any delay or question whatever now that Hawaii has become a part of the United States. So, Mr. President, I hope that under no circumstances will the Senate committee give up the Hawaiian cable.

While I am on my feet I will take occasion to say that for one I do not wish to be crowded too much by the fear of an extra session of Congress. There are worse things than an extra session of Congress. It may be a bad thing, but there are worse things than an extra session of Congress, and there are some things that ought to be done by this Government through Congressional action that are of sufficient importance to require an extra session of Congress if they can not be secured without an extra session.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say one thing further, unless the Senator desires to speak about the cable.

Mr. HALE. I was going to do so. The two Houses are at a deadlock on the Hawaiian cable. The Senate conferees are fully impressed with the importance of building the cable; and in the present day of the expenditure of immense sums of money in almost every direction that the human eyesight or the human imagination goes, it is not a very expensive enterprise. It can not be said that the building of it will in any way cripple us or will unduly absorb the revenue. The Senators on the part of the Senate upon the conference do not see any reason why they should give the matter up, and they have faithfully thus far stuck to it. I do not think there is any member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate who is not heartily in favor of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether a vote of the Senate to adhere to that amendment would be of any use at this time?

Mr. HALE. I do not think that is needed now, because the word "adhere" is the final closing word, which simply says to the House, "We will have no more conference with you, and if you do not back down the bill is lost." Therefore, I should not advise, in a diplomatic way, dealing in that manner with the other House, but would rather not do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a part of the etiquette of the subject which I do not understand, and therefore I yield to the opinion of the Senator from Maine, but I do hope it may be understood by the conferees what the sentiment of the Senate is on this subject.

Mr. HALE. I think the conferees are impressed with that, that it is not only their own view, but is the united feeling of the Senate. It is one of the items which the committee considers itself substantially instructed by the Senate upon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to hear from the Senator from Nevada (Mr. STEWART) upon the subject.

Mr. STEWART. I think this is the most meritorious item in the bill. When I voted for the acquisition of the Sandwich Islands, I did so under the impression that it was important in a military view; but if we are to have no telegraphic communication with it, it falls to the ground so far as that consideration is concerned. I supposed it would be treated as a part of the territory of the United States when we annexed it.

I find that the friends of annexation are not willing to accept the consequences of their own act. This Congress has declined to extend any of our laws over that country. If it is the desire to get rid of it, I think we should act promptly. We should either give the Sandwich Islands away or proceed to treat it as a part of the territory of the United States. It is highly important—it seems to me absolutely essential, if it is to be governed as a part of the territory of the United States—that the United States should have telegraphic communication with it.

I never have advocated Government telegraphs or Government control and ownership of railroads. That has been discussed much in the country, and there are two sides to the question. But I do not think there are two sides to the question whether the Government should connect all its parts by its own telegraph. I think that should be done, and the line should be in the hands of the Government. Whatever we have, whatever islands we hold, should be connected by a Government telegraph.

I am opposed to, and I shall oppose, the building of this telegraph, with the aid of the Government, by a private corporation. I do not want any private corporation to separate this country into different parts, and I shall oppose such a measure as well as I can. I rejoiced when this very proper amendment came in, and I think if there is anything the Senate should adhere to and stick to it is this amendment. I hope there will be a vote by yeas and nays on this question, so that the Senate may see and the House may see where we stand upon it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the great argument made in Congress and in the country against the annexation of Hawaii was its distance. Now, this is a measure which almost wholly removes that argument for all purposes except the purpose of physical locomotion and the movement of merchandise. It is a measure which makes Hawaii a territory touching our shores. It removes at once what was a serious and grave argument against the policy now adopted, and at a comparatively trifling cost. I hope the Senate conferees will adhere to this purpose on the part of the Senate as they would advocate any great public measure of the first importance. I will not at this late hour undertake to detain the Senate by a full discussion, as I should otherwise be very glad to do.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, it is generally the rule that when an enterprise will not pay, they want the Government to take it up. This cable to Hawaii will not pay. There will not come enough revenue from it to pay the terminal expenses. There are only 3,000 Americans on those islands; of those there are only two or three hundred who have any money, and they are sugar planters. The business they will have to do over this cable will not pay for the employees at the two ends of the line.

If the Government is going to build a cable, why not build one that will pay? If we are going into the telegraph business, why not do it upon land? We have a telegraph system in this country which is bonded and stocked for $125,000,000. It can be reproduced for $25,000,000. At the present rates it would pay 20 per cent on an investment of $25,000,000 to the Government, and therefore the rates could be reduced more than four times if the Government should build it and own it.

For my part I would rather see the Government build its telegraph system on land and relieve the people from the burdensome exactions now collected in telegraph tolls. We can get along without telegraphic communication with those 3,000 Americans, those so-called Americans, the sons of missionaries, the sugar planters of Hawaii. The rest of the population is foreign to us, and have no use for the telegraph and would not use it.

Of course if we are going to build the cable, the Government should build it rather than subsidize a private enterprise. One or the other must be done or the cable will not be built. So it is only a choice of evils. There is no necessity for the cable in any event.

If I were going into the telegraph business outside of the present boundaries of the United States, I would build a cable to Alaska, where there are 30,000 or 40,000 Americans, and connect those possessions, a country where Americans can live and where the climate is such that it will produce people capable of self-government, rather than be so crazy to secure telegraphic communication with the Asiatic hordes of Hawaii.

Since our flag went up in that country 10,000 contract laborers from Asia have been brought to Hawaii to work upon those sugar plantations—slave laborers, who are punished and imprisoned if they refuse to work under the laws of Hawaii, laws put in force by this Congress when we annexed that country. We have there a miniature despotism, a perpetuation of the old government, with all of its arbitrary and despotic powers; and yet when an amendment was offered to the resolution which annexed Hawaii to repeal the contract slave-labor laws of that country, this Senate voted it down. Eight months have rolled away and no effort has been made to provide a system of laws there or to establish a Territorial government, except the report of the commission and a speech on the part of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

An effort during the last days of this session has been made to repeal the contract-labor laws and to abolish, for the second time in the United States, the system of human slavery. But the effort was not made with any very great amount of persistence; it was delayed until the last moments of the session, and to-day 25,000 men are enslaved under the flag of the United States. Some Europeans, who were imported to Hawaii last October as contract laborers from one of the provinces of Germany, refused to work, because when they reached that country they found they had been deceived, and so they refused to go upon the plantations and carry out the contract. They were arrested and ordered back to work, and, when they refused, were placed in the common jail, and they are working on the streets, with striped clothes, as convicts, under the whip and lash of a master; and this under the flag of the United States.

Last September, at Hilo, a man was arrested for refusing to carry out his labor contract. He was brought into court, and was ordered back to work. He refused to go. He took off his coat and showed his arms, bruised and cut by the blows of his master, and said he would rather go to the common jail than go back to such employment; and he was sent to jail. The last advice I have from there are to the effect that he is still in jail and compelled to associate with criminals, simply because he refused to go back to a contract employment which was nothing but slavery and submit to the bruising and beating of a taskmaster; and this under the flag of the United States.

And yet no serious effort is made to abolish this system of slavery. We fought one great war to free the African, and to-day we are paying millions to annex slavery in the Pacific; and yet this Congress, it is proposed, shall adjourn and this thing not be remedied; but there is a tremendous rush to build a cable to these islands in order that these atrocities, these crimes against the rights of man, may be more easily heard in the United States. It seems to me there are many things more important for Hawaii and for the honor of the people of this country than the building of this cable.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of Senators to the contemptible attitude in which the Senate is placed by the report of this conference committee. Our rule is that an amendment to an appropriation bill may be made provided it has had the sanction of the Senate in any form by bill or resolution previously passed by the Senate during the session. That is the law of the Senate. Now, do not Senators see that if our committee tolerate the idea that amendments put on appropriation bills by the Senate shall not be considered, we are in the contemptible attitude of allowing the House to dictate to us as to what shall be considered in a conference committee?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator misapprehends the attitude of the Senate conferees. The House considered these amendments, but have refused to agree to them thus far. What they will do later on I do not know, but until they are agreed to they are not a law, of course.

Mr. PETTUS. They are not a law, and nothing that the House has done is a law, either, and nothing that both the Senate and the House have done is a law. It is a mere simple subterfuge, and a contemptible subterfuge at that, to call it a law, and thereby say it is sanctioned by law. It is also a mere word to the ear, without any word to the intellect, to say that a bill is considered by the House and the House refuse it merely because they have not previously sanctioned it.

Mr. President, the Senate is occupying in this matter a contemptible attitude. It has refused to assert its equality with the House of Representatives—that is what it has done—and the House ought to be required to consider these matters on their merits. If they reject them on the merits, that they have a right to do; but to tell the Senate that they will not consider them because they have not previously sanctioned them is to belittle the Senate to an attitude which it should not occupy. It is a disgraceful attitude in the eyes of mankind.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I was so far away and there was so much noise in the Chamber at the time the conference report was explained that I did not fully hear it, and I should like to ask for my personal information as to the exact attitude of the conference to the various classes of public buildings included in this bill, those bills which have passed both Houses prior to this time, and those which have passed both Houses, some of them perhaps within the last twenty-four hours, and those which have only passed this body and have not received the sanction of the other House.

The attitude of the conferees on the part of the House is that as to all the public-building bills which have not passed both Houses appropriations for such buildings shall not be included in this bill; that public-building bills which have passed both Houses they consent are to be appropriated for in the manner suggested by the Senate amendment; but inasmuch as some of the appropriations for public-building bills which have passed both Houses were in amendment No. 10, and some of the public-building bills which have not passed both Houses were also in amendment No. 10, that amendment is still in conference to ascertain which of those shall be embraced in this bill.

I should like to further ask the members of the committee of conference, does the first class include those public-building bills which have passed both Houses prior to the passage of the sundry civil bill by both Houses, or does it also include public-building bills which passed this body during the time the conference has been in session?

Mr. ALLISON. Bills which have passed this House and have passed the other House also.

Mr. CLARK. Bills which have passed the other House also, but which passed this House during the time the conference was in session?

Mr. ALLISON. When amendment No. 10 was made up by the Committee on Appropriations and offered here, it included, as we supposed, all the public-building bills which had passed both Houses, and therefore they were embraced in our amendment; but it turned out that two or three of the public-building bills inserted in amendment No. 10 had not then passed both Houses. I think one of them has passed since that time; and, if so, I suppose it will be included also. We have not discussed that detail; but all the public-building bills which had not passed both Houses when the sundry civil bill passed the Senate are not to be included, but are to be included elsewhere.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator please repeat that statement?

Mr. ALLISON. All the public building bills which are embraced in amendment numbered 10 are to be included in the final adjustment if they have passed both Houses, but no public building bill which is not embraced in amendment numbered 10 is expected to be included in the amendment, for the reason that it had not passed both Houses at the time the sundry civil appropriation bill passed, and, therefore, can not go in; but such buildings will be provided for in the deficiency appropriation bill before that bill passes the Senate, if the Senate shall so agree.

So the final result of the whole affair is that the public building bills which have passed both Houses and received the signature of the President, as it is assumed they will, will be embraced in one or the other of these bills.

Mr. CLARK. And none others?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the contention of the House. We stand here contending, though the Senator from Alabama finds fault with the conferees—

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. We stand precisely where the Senator from Alabama stands; we say that under the circumstances connected with the passage of these bills through both Houses, the public-building bills which passed the Senate, and are proper bills to be passed by both Houses, should be embraced within this conference report or within the provisions of the deficiency bill, because they are upon all fours. That is our contention. The House conferees refuse to agree to it, and we have brought in this report with a disagreement covering each and every one of those amendments. So every public building provided for by the amendments of the Senate to the bill is still in conference and in contest between the two Houses.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. So far from finding fault with the conferees, I applaud their course of action. I think it very desirable and very proper that, notwithstanding they are encountering this difficulty, they should have stood by the action of the Senate and come in here for advisement before they would consent to an agreement.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. We advised the Senate of the contention on the part of the House conferees, and we have protected our public buildings provided for in the bill. Therefore, so far as the conferees on the part of the Senate are concerned, no harm has yet been done to any of these buildings.

Mr. CLARK. I did not rise to find any fault, but simply to make inquiries, so as to get at the exact situation.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that, and I do not suppose the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] did.

Mr. CLARK. I am very glad our conferees have made that contention, which seems to me very proper, and I hope they will stand by it.

I want to call attention to amendment numbered 8, providing for the erection of a public building at Evanston, in the State of Wyoming. The conditions and circumstances with reference to that building, and some others in the bill which have been agreed to by the other House, are that that building is in a town where there are United States courts and United States land offices, in addition to offices contained in most of the other buildings which the House are willing to construct. The necessity in the one case appearing, the necessity in the other case appears to be much greater, it seems to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent from the Senate Chamber when the conference report was presented. I only glean from the few words I have heard in the last two or three minutes the status of the public-building bills which did not chance to pass the other House. I am very glad that the Senate conferees are standing firm in their contention in behalf of those bills.

Mr. President, let us glance at the situation. The other evening some twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty bills, more or less, came over here from the House of Representatives. Any Senator could have stopped the passage of any one of those bills; but, in our good nature, we permitted all those bills to be passed by consent.

The bill for a public building at Nashua, N. H., has passed the Senate three times in three different Congresses; it has received the approval of the House committee twice certainly; but it chanced to be not quite far enough up on the House Calendar this year to pass. Had it been reached, it would have passed without dissent. Nobody would have raised a voice nor would a vote have been cast against it. I contend that that bill is just as strong and has just as strong claims to consideration by this Congress as the bill which perhaps chanced to be the next bill before it, and which passed the House, and which we in our good nature permitted to pass the Senate.

Mr. President, I want to commend our conferees for standing firm in the opinion and the conviction that the few bills which did not chance to pass the other House, but which would have passed that House had they been reached, are equally entitled to consideration on this bill as the bills which passed the House and which we in our good nature by consent permitted to pass the Senate. I trust our conferees will continue to urge hereafter on the House conferees not only the importance, but the propriety of allowing the amendments for these public buildings to remain in the appropriation bill, and to have some money appropriated for them.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] when he says that a cable between the coast of our continent and Honolulu is the most important feature of this bill. It appears, however, that the House of Representatives has obstinately determined not to permit that legislation to take place on this measure. I am greatly surprised at that statement, for the reason that I can not conceive that there is any question of order that the House could raise upon a report of this kind. The Senate had considered this subject for several days, and had put it upon the bill.

Anticipating the annexation of Hawaii, a very important cable company, organized in the United States with great capital, having a monopoly of all the lines, or at least a great many of the lines—a real monopoly of the cable service which leaves our Atlantic and Gulf coasts—went to Hawaii and prevailed upon the President of Hawaii and his cabinet to make with them a provisional contract for a cable from Honolulu to the Pacific coast and also from Honolulu to Japan. That contract was drawn up in due form upon terms, of course, that the cable company desired; but it was left to the Secretary of State of the United States to determine whether it should go into effect. If he disapproved it before the 1st day of January, this contract by its terms would cease; if he failed to disapprove it, it was to go on and be in effect. It was an attempt by this company to prejudice and capture the monopoly of the cable service in the North Pacific Ocean.

This great company would not have been there on that line, putting themselves to the expense and trouble of going through with this very peculiar arrangement, this attempt to fasten themselves upon this cable service before Hawaii was annexed to the United States, unless they had seen in it great profit to themselves.

It will not do, Mr. President, for any Senator to undertake to minimize the value of the cable service in the North Pacific Ocean. It is one of the elements both of commerce and of naval warfare, as well as an element of postal service or postal supply, between commercial men and other people in the islands of Hawaii and also the United States.

I shall not take the time of the Senate by attempting to magnify or even to delineate the value of a cable between the United States and Honolulu, and between Honolulu and any other place on the Asiatic coast of the Pacific Ocean, or any of the great islands to the south of us or to the north of us. It is not necessary to do that. Any American who has any breadth of comprehension whatever understands that question. The plainest common-sense man in this country understands that we must have a cable service across the Pacific Ocean, and everybody understands that you can not have a cable service across the Pacific Ocean otherwise than by making a stopping place at Honolulu.

It gives us an advantage over the other nations of the earth that can scarcely be computed, the advantage of compelling all of them to build their lines to Honolulu because of the scientific and physical difficulties in passing those islands coming to the coast. It can not be done. Electrical science has not yet approached that perfectness where it is possible to convey messages satisfactorily, to say the least of it, across the whole width of the Pacific Ocean without a rest.

We happen to have at Honolulu, at Guam, and also in the Windward Islands, locations which we have acquired, some of them by treaty with Spain, others by discovery and appropriation years ago. Mr. Bayard, with keen sagacity, in Mr. Cleveland's Administration, caused our ships of war to stop at the Windward Islands and make a survey. I have here before me, furnished by Mr. Littlepage, of the Navy Department, charts, complete diagrams, a complete coast survey—I will call it a coast survey, a hydrographic survey—of these Windward Islands, and also other surveys, demarking the lines of cable, with their measurements and the exact attitude of these islands toward each other. I desire to put these charts in the hands of the conference committee, so that they may exhibit them to their confrères and have the advantage of this very valuable and particularly scientific and accurate information.

Mr. President, this effort of which I have spoken that was made in Hawaii was made by Schrymser & Co. Failing in that, they came before the Congress of the United States and presented their propositions here in this House and, I think, also in the other House. Those propositions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and other propositions were likewise referred. That committee took the different propositions and modified them so as to present what they conceived to be a safe bill for building, first, to Honolulu, then from Honolulu on down to Manila, either by the way of Guam or by way of the Windward Islands, a line to Japan.

Those bills were referred by resolution of the Committee on Foreign Relations to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee took the whole subject in review, and I am very much gratified to say that that committee acted, in my judgment, more wisely than the other committees of this body who have considered that subject. They concluded that the best thing to do was to build what you might call a trunk line between Honolulu and the coast, connected with the land system here, and that that should be built at the expense of the Government; that the Government should have the absolute control of it; that it should be built by the War Department and turned over to the service of the Postal Department.

Without going into the particulars of the measure, the Senate has voted upon this bill; and, speaking of it generally, I am satisfied it is the only safe way to handle this great subject of controlling intelligence in the North Pacific Ocean. The only way to do it is to make this Government not only independent of other governments, but to compel other governments, or other companies chartered by other governments, if they choose to build lines, to hold them in subordination to the power of the United States to control the information which passes across those lines, especially in relation to military and naval affairs.

Now, preparatory to all of this, and while Hawaii was an independent State, the Government of the United States made three very accurate surveys between Honolulu and the coast of California. On the coast of California the surveys extended from San Francisco down to Monterey, and they represent what is called a lane survey; that is to say, an area 300 miles wide, which has been distinctly and thoroughly surveyed and sounded in the most accurate and scientific manner. We have possession of all that information.

What has been developed by these surveys? A perfect plateau without any serious break whatever in it between Honolulu and the American coast at Monterey and San Francisco. There has not yet been discovered in the bottom of any part of the oceans any plain or plateau which is equal to this in the security of the transmission of intelligence by cable or in the security of the wires. There is no loop in the whole line; there is no cavern into which this line drops or hangs by its own weight. It is comparatively a level plain. There are some undulations in it, but they are very gradual, very gentle, like the swelling of the hills here in Maryland perhaps, though not quite so abrupt as that. But the survey has been a marvelous success, and in the discovery of this plateau equally so.

Mr. Pritchett, the head of the Coast Survey, when he was in Hawaii, made examinations and drew a chart which shows that a similar plain extends from the northwesternmost island of Kauai down to the southwesternmost island of Hawaii, connecting all of these islands, so that there is not a safer piece of ground to be found in the bottom of the sea in any part of the world than that over which this cable is projected.

That committee had every evidence that could be called for or that could be required to justify their action. They have made an appropriation of a sum of money for the building of this cable, and they have put it in the proper form. There is no objection to the form of it; there is no objection to the project. No objection can be raised upon the ground that it is not necessary; and no objection has ever been raised, or ever will be raised, by any person except the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], that it is not necessary. I expect that that Senator stands alone amongst all the people of this earth in his opinion that there is no necessity for a cable between Honolulu and the United States, and I wish to let him enjoy that opinion, because it is his own exclusive property. It is not necessary for him to take out any copyright upon it or any patent upon it, because everybody knows that it belongs to him from the nature of things.

What, then, is it that is interfering with this business? Now, let us inquire what it is. Mr. President, it is that same monopoly that is interfering here. They do not want the United States of America to control this cable because that takes the monopolistic power out of their hands. They have already aroused and excited the competition of other companies who are watching this legislation with very eager eyes to prevent them from acquiring some peculiar advantage. The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations cuts them off from all opportunity of that sort, and the war which is made in the conference committee against this cable is a war in favor of monopoly and not a war in favor of the United States Government.

We have got cable lines in other places which we maintain and for which we make regular appropriations, built by the Government of the United States and sustained by the Government. So it can not be said to be entirely a new enterprise. It is something that we know how to do, and which we have been doing for a good many years. So it is not novel. It is all right and all correct in every particular; and what objection can be made to it, or what objection will be made to it by any American citizen, except some corporation or company that desires to control this avenue of intelligence between the heart of the Pacific Ocean and the main coast of America?

That is the whole question. I am not deceived about it. I know exactly who the antagonist of this proposition is. The Senate put the amendment on without objection. It is very true, I believe, that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] had some observations to make about the Hawaiians and the Americans and the missionaries and some other people living down there whom he does not want to hear from, either by letter or by cable. He seems to have a very small opinion of those people down there, and the only advantage they have in the world is that they enjoy the same opinion of him. I judge they do.

His remarks on this subject called forth a statement by a gentleman who comes here accredited as the agent or the commissioner of the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu. I happen to know that gentleman personally, and I can assure the Senate that there is not a more intelligent and excellent man in Hawaii or in the United States in my acquaintance than Mr. Kinney. Besides that, he is one of the best lawyers in the whole country. He says, in regard to this matter:

In reference to Senator PETTIGREW's remarks on Hawaii, I desire to make the following statement:

Hawaii is unquestionably handicapped by her undesirable labor system and conditions that have grown out of it. The idea that any man should be imprisoned for refusing to carry out a civil contract, however willful his refusal, is naturally offensive to public opinion in the United States. While it is true that here in the United States this very thing is being done in the enforcement of the contract for service entered into by seamen, and the imprisonment of seamen for refusing to work has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court, yet the extension of such a system to the common labor of a country is hopelessly antagonistic to the institutions of this country.

But, undesirable as our system is, it certainly is not as black as was suggested by Senator PETTIGREW in his remarks in the Senate. The laborer is kindly treated, amply protected, and as well paid as New England farm hand. The suggestion of whipping is absolutely without foundation; it must have been furnished to Senator PETTIGREW by some one of the few malcontents left in Hawaii, still so bitterly hostile to annexation that they would rejoice to bring a panic to Hawaii through the operation of annexation, to gratify their revengeful feelings. The part of sound statesmanship is, however, as we contend, to introduce the broader and higher American system into Hawaii, so as to cause the least possible friction or financial disturbance.

Hawaii has of her own accord and under her own impulses been growing toward freer institutions. The contract-labor system has pretty generally been discarded except where it is necessary to make advances to the laborer to get him into the country. Otherwise the percentage of free laborers is overwhelmingly in excess of those under contract. The white men that Senator Pettigrew refers to as being imprisoned are undoubtedly the Galician laborers recently imported from Austria. Under our immigration laws planters are compelled by the Government to bring in a certain percentage of white labor as against a certain number of Japanese immigrants. In pursuance of that provision a ship's company of several hundred of these Galicians arrived in Honolulu after the joint resolution of annexation had passed, the planters having to pay some $30,000 for their passages and expenses.

These laborers were told by friends that under annexation their contracts could not be enforced against them and that they could jump them with impunity, which they accordingly did. They were committed to prison, the lower court holding against them. Meanwhile a test case has been submitted to the supreme court of the Hawaiian Islands and a decision is now due. The circumstances under which the Dole government allowed some 7,000 Japanese contract laborers to be sent for after the joint resolution of annexation had passed are substantially as follows:

"The local government for some years had been keeping the planters down very close in their requisitions for laborers, so that when the joint resolution was finally passed the labor market in Hawaii was actually short for existing needs. But a small percentage of the Japanese laborers remain in the country for any length of time after their three years' contract expires. The result is that the Japanese population keeps continually changing. It would commence to lessen at once if the process of renewal was stopped."

"When, therefore, the news of annexation reached Hawaii the planters were not only confronted with a short labor market, but one that would grow absolutely inadequate in a very short time after the anti-contract and immigration laws of the United States had been extended to Hawaii. They therefore applied for permission to secure sufficient laborers to offset the numbers whose contracts would expire in a year or so, and to supply the demand for more laborers from several new plantations, and as a result a sufficient number were allowed to come in to meet actual imperative needs for a period of from eighteen months to two years."

Mr. President, that has not anything to do, so far as I know, with this cable. At the same time, it is a necessary and proper reply from this commissioner from Hawaii to the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota, which I conceive to be entirely unjust and entirely unsupported by the facts.

I will add nothing in regard to the importance of this measure, but I do hope that our conferees will recognize the fact that we are taking now the first direct and practical start or movement in realizing the power that we have acquired by the annexation of Hawaii through this cable, and scarcely an element of power connected with the annexation of Hawaii will be more important and more influential upon the future destiny of this country than the cable line.

Mr. HALE. Unless the Senator from Iowa can dispose of this matter at once, without any further debate, I must ask the Senate to go into executive session for a few moments, as it is important to confirm certain nominations.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we can have a vote on the report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will delay the Senate for only a minute. I wish to reply to some remarks made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLISON. After that I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says that those who have opposed the building of the cable by the Government of the United States are working in the interest of monopoly, and that he can not be deceived about it. This is the first time the Senate of the United States has proposed that the Government should build a cable to Hawaii. Heretofore the effort has been to subsidize a cable to Hawaii to be built by a private company or corporation, and in each instance the Senator from Alabama has been the champion of that enterprise, of that monopoly. If a company which sought a subsidy is now trying to defeat the effort to build a cable on the part of the United States, that company, that very monopoly of which he complains, has received his most ardent and earnest support in the past, and of course he can not be deceived. He certainly must know the facts of which he speaks. He must be very familiar with the methods of that monopoly.

I have always opposed the building of a cable to Hawaii, subsidized or otherwise, because I believed the United States could better invest its money and because I did not think it was necessary to secure cable communication with only 1,100 American citizens and about 1,900 people of American descent, 1,900 of whom are males and 1,100 females. I did not think that sort of a community deserved the expenditure of several million dollars on the part of the Government of the United States in order that we might hear of them, perhaps too often.

Now, let us see. Not only is this the situation in regard to the American population, but these Americans or people of American descent enacted contract-labor laws for the purpose of working their sugar plantations with slave labor. Here is an extract from the Hilo Herald of September 10, 1898:

A few days ago a laborer on the Hononu plantation was arrested for deserting contract service. At his trial the man offered no defense and Judge Hapai, upon hearing that it was the man's first offense, ordered him to return to his work. The man, however, refused to do so, preferring to go to jail rather than return to the plantation. He was accordingly sent to the Hilo jail. Here is an instance of a man who has committed no crime against

God or man being deprived of his liberty and sent to associate with criminals. Just before the trial the man removed his coat and showed a torn shirt sleeve and bruises upon his arm, indicative of ill-treatment.

And this occurred months after that country was annexed to the United States. Last fall they imported into Hawaii some people from one of the provinces of Germany, and about 80 of these contract laborers were sent to a plantation. They refused to work, claiming they had been deceived when they made their contracts. The court, under the Hawaiian law, ordered them to return to the plantation to which their contract had been assigned.

The men obeyed the court, but some of them left the estate a second time, and for this desertion have been ordered to return to their labor or go to prison. A number of them are in prison and are dressed in prison garb. One marched through the city in the chain gang to work on the public works in company with all grades of criminals. I get this information from a letter from Joseph O. Carter, one of the most prominent citizens of that country and a man of the highest character and integrity.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will finish in a moment.

I wish to state further that there are good people on those islands. The natives are the best people there. The native Hawaiians are kind hearted, nearly all of them can read and write, they obey the law, and they are the best citizens of those islands to-day. Under the bill which is brought in here by our commission they are to be excluded from participation in the government by a property qualification.

In other words, this Republic, abandoning the idea of manhood suffrage, abandoning the idea that the individual shall rule, proposes to establish in the Hawaiian Islands the doctrine of the supremacy of property over the rights of man, and, in support of our newly-born imperialism, the commission brings in here a bill for us to adopt which provides a property qualification that eliminates these people from any participation in the government, except that they may vote for the lower house—the house of representatives. But they can not vote for senators and are granted no voice in the selection of their governor.

The consequence is that the senate can prevent any legislation whatever in the interest of the people, even if the people should elect the members of the house of representatives. Those natives of Hawaii were opposed to annexation. That was their land and their country. They ought to have been allowed to retain it, instead of having it taken away from them by the forces of the United States, simply to assist a lot of sugar planters to plunder that country.

In the Hawaiian debate it was urged upon this floor that the sugar trust was opposed to annexation. The same charge is made now in regard to the monopoly. I do not believe the sugar trust was opposed to annexation, for under their contract they get the Louisiana sugar and the Hawaiian sugar on the same terms that it came to them before annexation. Annexation did not affect their interests a particle. If any Senator wishes to break down the sugar trust, admit refined sugar free of duty instead of putting a discriminating duty upon it and he will break down the sugar trust. The trust deal in refined sugar, and they buy the raw sugar, and we put a discriminating duty in their favor on refined sugar in order to give them a monopoly of the American trade. I made the motion twice in connection with the two tariff bills to take off the duty from refined sugar in order to destroy the sugar trust; and the last time I did it the Senator from Alabama voted against it.

Mr. President, you will invariably find it true that a man who stands on this floor and yells "Stop thief!" has some occasion for concealment. Who was it that was interested in the annexation of Hawaii? The Hawaiian sugar planters, who had already received in remitted duties $78,000,000 and who now receive each $10,000,000 on the amount of sugar they ship to this country. In other words, if we had left the duty upon their sugar, we would collect $10,000,000 a year. Their importations do not reduce the price, because the quantity is not sufficient to affect the market; and the consequence is they take the $10,000,000 of remitted duty, and it is put into their pockets.

Who could afford to come here and urge annexation? Who had the money to do it? Who had the $78,000,000, and who was to get the $10,000,000, if the islands were annexed? The Hawaiian sugar planters. Who could afford to subsidize newspapers and employ lobbyists? The Hawaiian sugar planters. The stock of the Ewa plantation went up to 400 per cent. within a week after the islands were annexed, because of the enormous profit they could make when duty to the amount of 2 cents a pound was remitted.

I am tired, Mr. President, of hearing this talk about the opponents of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands being the champions of trusts and monopolies, because it is false in every particular; and not only that, but I believe that those who make the accusation know it is false, and I do not propose to sit silent and endure any more of it here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. McBRIDE rose.

Mr. HALE. If there is to be further debate—

Mr. ALLISON. There will be none.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. FRYE obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. FRYE. I will yield if it takes only a minute.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from Illinois make some explanation of what he intends to do under this resolution.

Mr. MASON. I will state that the Committee on Manufactures last year recommended some legislation in regard to mixed flour which was passed by the Senate. It became a part of the Dingley tariff act, and it is working to the entire satisfaction of the Government. Over 150 factories are now under the law making mixed flour, but it is stamped.

Mr. COCKRELL. And they are branding it as mixed flour?

Mr. MASON. They are branding it as mixed flour and buying stamps. The Department reports shows that over 10,000 barrels have been taken under it. The committee is going to present evidence simply. The committee has had it under advisement for months, and I have stated fully—

Mr. FRYE. If the resolution is going to give rise to any discussion, I must object.

Mr. MASON. It is not going to cause any discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. HALE. Before the report is read I should like to know in the interest of the business of the Senate what course my colleague proposes to take with regard to this report. Does he propose to go on and continue it? Of course it is a privileged report and can come in now; but is it his purpose to go on and consider it with a view of securing action by the Senate at this time?

Mr. FRYE. It is, because it is a final report, a full agreement.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any assurance that the report will not give rise to long debate and discussion or to a question of consideration? I ask the question because my colleague will see, as other Senators will, that it is important with reference to other business that we should know what course is to be taken with the river and harbor bill. There have been intimations to me from Senators that so strongly are they opposed to the provisions of the bill as agreed upon by the conferees that they do not propose to let it become a law. Of course when it is once in, if its consideration is continued in the Senate with that result in view, all other business—the deficiency bill, the Army bill, the conference upon the naval bill and the sundry civil bill, and everything else—is slaughtered. Now, what is the Senator's view? I wish he would state that before the reading of the report is begun. What is his expectation with regard to it.

Mr. FRYE. My expectation is that it will be agreed to before a great while. I can not conceive it possible that any Senator can be so aggrieved with anything in the report that he will hazard the appropriation bills and an extra session of Congress, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator proposes to go on and develop whatever is the sentiment of the Senate in the matter. I only want to say that we have now only twenty-one hours and a half for all of the business of the session before the gavel falls, and if the river and harbor bill is evidently going to absorb that time, some of us, in the interest of other business, whether we are for the river and harbor bill or not, at some near time must test the sense of the Senate whether it proposes to go on with it. I do not now seek to interfere with my colleague.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word, if the Senator from Maine will allow me, before the reading of the report is commenced. I understand that this is a final report on the river and harbor bill. Am I correct in that?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. ALLISON. It covers every item?

Mr. HALE. It is an agreement.

Mr. ALLISON. It is an agreement. Then I suggest to the Senator from Maine having charge of the river and harbor bill, if this is a final report it matters not whether it is passed at this hour or ten hours hence. The deficiency bill, which is now under consideration, and the Army bill, which will follow it, are bills which must go to the House for consideration there, and for conference at a later stage. So I think, for the economical use of the hours which remain of this session, it is wise to pass in the Senate first the appropriation bills that must pass, and then take up the conference report.

Mr. BERRY. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore, this being a final report, the enrolling clerks will have the report and they can proceed with the enrollment as though the bill was passed, whereas the enrolling clerks can not touch the deficiency appropriation bill or the Army appropriation bill. So I trust the Senator from Maine having charge of the river and harbor bill will allow the conference report to go over until the deficiency appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bill shall have been passed by the Senate, and then we are certain to get all these bills through. If we spend five or six hours, or even three or four hours—

Mr. HALE. Or two hours.

Mr. ALLISON. In the consideration of the conference report at this time it will be impossible possibly for the Army bill and the deficiency bill to be considered in both Houses. So I make that suggestion to the Senator from Maine. I would not have brought in the report which I have in charge had I known that it would occupy more than fifteen minutes. I supposed I could get it out of the way, but it led to debate which was more enlarged debate than I had supposed.

Mr. HALE. The deficiency appropriation bill would have been through by this time, and could have gone into conference and been out of the way, and then that conference report, with others, could have come in.

Mr. FRYE. The only trouble about it that I can see is the suggestion my colleague has made that some Senators here propose to talk the river and harbor bill to death. It will be a good deal more difficult for them to talk it to death with an appropriation bill behind it than with nothing behind it. But at the same time I myself personally have more interest in passing the Army and the deficiency appropriation bills and saving an extra session of Congress than I have in the river and harbor bill, important as that measure is. Therefore I shall accept, unless my committee objects to it, the proposition of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Iowa and allow the consideration of the appropriation bill to go on now.

Mr. CULLOM. Then let us go on with it.

Mr. HALE. Let the reading of the deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with.

Mr. BERRY. All right.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "War Department," on page 33, after line 8, to insert:

That in all cases where an officer or an enlisted man in either the Army, Navy, Marine Corps of the United States, or contract surgeon or trained nurse in the employ of the Government has died while on duty away from home since the 1st day of January, 1888, and the remains have been taken home and buried at the expense of the family or friends of the deceased, the parties who paid the cost of transportation and burying such remains shall be repaid at the expense of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed what it would have cost the United States to have transported the remains to their homes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous, War Department," on page 35, after line 8, to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Headstones for graves of soldiers," fiscal year 1897, $146.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Navy Department," on page 39, after line 14, to insert:

To pay W. H. Michael for labor and material expended on the compilation of Laws Relating to the Navy and Marine Corps, authorized by law, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval establishment," on page 41, after line 2, to strike out:

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to credit the amount disallowed in the account of Paymaster C. M. Ray, United States Navy, being his final account of the U. S. S. Maine for the third quarter of 1898, and being for expenses for burial of Ensign J. C. Breckinridge, United States Navy, amounting to $411.55.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 10, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to allow, in the accounts of pay officers of the Navy ordered to pay the same, the funeral expenses incurred in the cases of Chaplain Thaddeus S. K. Freeman and Ensign Joseph C. Breckinridge and Worth Bagley.

The next amendment was, under the head "Department of the Interior," page 49, to increase the appropriation "For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof," from $25,000 to $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 16, to insert:

To pay Prof. Charles E. Munroe for services as an expert in investigating the causes of the explosion in the Capitol building on November 6, 1898, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, under the subhead "Public lands service," after line 5, to insert:

For replacing the furniture, fixtures, instruments, etc., in the office of the United States surveyor-general of North Dakota, which were destroyed by fire on the 8th day of August, 1898, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the clause making appropriations for the geological and topographical surveys in Alaska, from line 14 to line 17, on page 54.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The reading clerk seems to have passed—I have been sitting here, and he must inadvertently have passed it rather hastily—the provision on page 54, from lines 14 to 17, inclusive, which reads:

For geological and topographical surveys in Alaska, 1898 and 1899, $7,069.00.

Mr. HALE. Are those the same items in regard to which the Senator made an eloquent speech this morning?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The same items. The remarks which I then made were extremely applicable, except that they were upon the wrong bill. It was the right number and street, but the wrong town. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. The Senator having made his remarks upon that bill, as that bill has gone through, will he not now kindly let this bill go through?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Without a speech?

Mr. HALE. No; let us consider that that speech was made on this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will, with great pleasure, if the Senator was convinced by it.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that I have sympathized with him from the beginning about this system and the inefficiency of this branch of the service. It has been before us early and late. It never ceases in its demands. What it does not get on the sundry civil bill it gets on the deficiency bill; what it does not get this year it gets next year, and what it does not get next year it will get in the hereafter, and it will go on until the Senator and I are moldering in the dust.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is what is going to happen to us, and that is what is going to happen to them also. Only one word. I will not repeat any remarks I had the pleasure of making on the other bill a little while since, and will only make one suggestion as a Western man.

When these people come here clamoring at the doors of the Appropriations Committee they say, "This is going West; it is demanded by the West. They are hungry and eager there for more geological surveys, and they will be perfectly happy if you will give them some more topography and some more geology." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I do not know one of those Western States but what would rather that you would give them $50,000 every two years for some public building inside of the limits of one of those States and leave all this geology out, and yet we are going to an expense of from $400,000 to $700,000 every year for this geological survey in one form or another. In the sundry civil bill, which we have already passed, they get nearly $500,000, including $25,000 for exploration, or whatever they may call it, of coal and gold in Alaska. The amendment which I desire to offer is that the appropriation for the next fiscal year for surveys in Alaska shall be lessened by the amount which is carried in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator, under the rule, consent that we simply go on with the amendments of the committee? And then, when we are through with those amendments, any other amendment will be in order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I see I have got to make that speech over again. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. That is the reason I am invoking the point of order, so that we may have a third speech of the same kind from the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very sure the Senator will get it if I am here.

I now give notice that at the proper time, if the proper time shall ever arrive, I will again present the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let the reading of the bill proceed, Mr. President.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Indian Affairs," page 56, line 15, after the words "five hundred and," to strike out "fifty-three dollars and forty-four" and insert "ninety-three dollars and twenty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies" for the fiscal year 1898, $563.23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 58, to insert:

For payment to J. A. Gillilan amount expended by him in the purchase and shipment of 322 bushels of seed potatoes for planting in May, 1898, for the Leech Lake, Cass Lake, and Winnibigoshish bands of Chippewa Indians, $233.81.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 14, to strike out "twenty-nine dollars and five" and insert "fifty-one dollars and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Incidentals in New Mexico" for the fiscal year 1898, $51.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 12, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to allow office rent to the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes while remaining at the seat of government, under orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, during the fiscal year 1898, not to exceed $100.97.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to call attention to the paragraph on page 60 for continuing the work of the commission to negotiate with the Crow, Flathead, and other Indians.

When the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration this same appropriation was offered to continue the commission and negotiate with the Indians. By a very decided and emphatic vote the Senate struck out the provision. I see it now appears in this bill as a House provision. I suppose the purpose is to furnish a place for these three people for another year. Under the existing law their terms expire in April.

These commissioners under this bill will continue another year, and I judge from the persistence with which this matter is pursued that the Senators who want to take care of these people are exceedingly anxious to get them out of their States; and for the purpose of accommodating those Senators and relieving them from the burdensome presence of these commissioners in their home States, and letting them roam over the Rocky Mountains at will, and draw $4,500 a year each from the United States, they have secured this provision from the House of Representatives.

From this persistence, I am satisfied if the Senate should strike out the provision it would triumph in conference, and therefore, after calling attention to the matter, I will not move to strike it out.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 62, after line 19, to insert:

Payment to John H. Koogler: To pay John H. Koogler for preparing and conducting prosecution against Tillman C. Chance in the Indian Territory, by direction of the United States court, $25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 23, to strike out:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States courts," on page 66, line 19, after the word "appropriation," to insert "and the like appropriation for the fiscal year 1900;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, $6,000: Provided, That this appropriation and the like appropriation for the fiscal year 1900 shall be available for the payment, upon the approval of the Attorney-General, of the expenses of the United States district attorneys while absent from their respective districts in connection with services heretofore rendered, or to be rendered, before the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Texas that the understanding of the Chair is that there was an agreement that the committee amendments should first be acted upon, and afterwards amendments offered by individual Senators on the floor.

Mr. MILLS. I understood from the Senator in charge of the bill that he would not object to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. But will not the Senator wait until the reading of the bill is concluded, and then offer the amendment?

Mr. MILLS. Very well.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To pay Henry D. Clayton for expenses in contested-election case, as recommended by the Committee on Elections, $300.

Mr. HALE. Also, on page 80, after line 4, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, $15,000.

Mr. HALE. These are House matters. I also offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in on page 84, after line 10.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

To pay W. P. Jerdons for clerical services rendered to John W. Cranford, deceased, late a member of the House from the State of Texas, $100.67.

Mr. HALE. On page 85, after the word "cents," in line 23, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, as follows: To Thomas R. Morgan, $90, and to Henry J. Hayden, $1,783; in all, $237,688.58.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 24, on page 85, the following:

Provided further, That in case of the appropriation for the judgment in favor of Anthony F. Navarro and others, as set out in No. 17305 of Senate Document No. 153, the Secretary of the Interior is directed to withhold from distribution among the said Indians so much of any moneys due them by reason of said judgment as may be found justly and equitably due as per individual contracts for legal and other services rendered said claimants, and to pay the same on account of the prosecution and recovery of the moneys aforesaid to the attorney of record in said cause, as required by the decree of the court.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the amendment read again.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know what this is and the sum involved.

Mr. HALE. This is to carry out the finding of the court, which is found in the judgment of the Court of Claims at the March term, 1898, in which there is this clause, "For that purpose, the sums set forth in said third finding of fact, less any attorney's fee which may by Congress be provided to be paid to claimant's attorney of record."

Mr. PETTIGREW. This leaves it in the discretion of the Secretary to fix the amount to be paid to the attorney?

Mr. HALE. According to the contract.

Mr. PETTIGREW. According to the contract.

Mr. HALE. It is in the same line as the Boutwell case.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What is the amount involved?

Mr. HALE. Altogether it is $29,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Under this amendment the court fixes the amount of attorney's fees?

Mr. HALE. According to the contract.

Mr. PETTIGREW. According to the contract. I do not know that I have anything further to say about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert what I send to the desk, to be inserted after line 6, on page 58.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For additional amount for compensation of Dr. George I. Leavitt, physician for the Indians on the Walker River Reservation in Nevada, $120.

Mr. HALE. On page 27, after line 17, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For emergency fund to meet unforeseen contingencies constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $3,000,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 60, after line 12.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 60, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay the balance of awards made to the loyal Seminole Indians under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with interest thereon, as per Articles III and IV of the treaty of March 21, 1896, and paragraph 14 of the agreement of December 16, 1897; and the sum of $177,085 is hereby appropriated for the purpose: Provided, That if any of the said loyal Seminoles whose names are on the lists as made up in pursuance of the said treaty of 1896 shall have died, then the amount due such deceased persons, respectively, shall be paid to their legal heirs; and the acceptance of the sum hereby appropriated shall be in full settlement of said awards.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to come in after line 17 on page 80.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To pay to the heirs of John W. Cranford, deceased, late member of the House of Representatives from the State of Texas, $5,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 76, after line 15.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

For the erection of a monument in honor of the memory of Brig. Gen. Francis Nash, of North Carolina, according to the resolution of Congress passed on the 4th day of November, 1777, $5,000; and for the erection of a monument in honor of the memory of Brig. Gen. William Lee Davidson, of North Carolina, in accordance with the resolution of Congress passed on the 20th day of September, 1781, $5,000; and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the sums appropriated to the order of the governor of North Carolina whenever required for the purposes aforesaid.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator wait until I get through?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Continental Congress authorized ten monuments to be erected in honor of persons who had served in the Revolutionary war, at some $500 apiece.

Mr. HALE. If there is going to be debate, I shall object.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. One or two were for Connecticut generals, and we have never thought that the Government ought now to expend $5,000 for those generals, and we have never made any claim for it. Congress has passed some bills, but no monuments have been erected. There have been some bills passed in the Senate. Now, if Congress is going to do it, it ought to take the whole ten persons who in the Continental Congress were thus honored. I do not think it ought to be done in the interest of one or two. It ought to be done for all if for any.

Mr. HALE. If any debate or objection is made, I shall have to make the point of order, of course.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not care to debate the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the printing, in book form, of so much of the report of the committee on awards of the World's Columbian Commission as is contained in the special reports upon special subjects or groups as were prepared by expert judges authorized to act by the World's Columbian Commission, its executive committee, the executive committee on awards, the committee on final report, or the board of reference and control, said reports, when printed, to be for the use and distribution of the Department of State.

Mr. HALE. There was a large demand for about $80,000 worth of printing. It was left to the Committee on Printing to examine it and edit it, and only report such reports of awards as would be useful in our exposition at Paris. I wish to know from the Senator who offers the amendment whether this covers that programme?

Mr. LODGE. This covers the programme. The original amount asked for was $78,000. The Committee on Printing felt that there was no reason for the expenditure of so large a sum. This provides simply for the reports of certain experts, which are essential and very valuable and important for the coming exposition. The estimate of the Public Printer, which is on the back of the amendment, is under $10,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 41, after line 15.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For payment to W. B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archibald, $97,108.78, in full discharge of all claims against the United States as per the report of the Selfridge board, found in Senate Executive Document No. 18, first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 4, insert:

That in the District of Columbia any street railway company operating its cars in part over the tracks of another company along a route authorized by Congress shall be allowed twelve months from the passage of this act in which to install an underground electric system, and pending such change shall preserve all rights now granted by its charter.

Mr. HALE. This simply prolongs the time.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted as a new section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney-General be, and hereby are, authorized and required to negotiate with the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company, said company being the owner of a line of railroad with terminals at Sioux City, Iowa, and Fremont, Nebr., for a settlement of the latter's obligation with reference to the bonds heretofore issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railroad, and to make such settlement as shall be in their judgment to the best interest of the United States; and upon the payment into the Treasury of the United States, on behalf of said Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company, of such sum as may be agreed upon, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to execute under his hand and seal of office, on behalf of the United States, and deliver to said Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company a release in writing, duly acknowledged before an officer authorized to acknowledge deeds, stating that the sum of money so to be paid is in full satisfaction of the lien of the United States created by the issue of said bonds.

SEC. 2. That the payment of said sum shall be in full satisfaction of all causes of action which the United States may have against said company growing out of the issuing of said bonds: Provided, however, That the President of the United States shall approve such settlement. Said Secretary shall also have the power to send for persons and papers and swear and examine witnesses on the question as to the value of the Government lien upon said railroad; And provided further, That the said Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company shall pay in settlement of the claim of the United States not less than $1,000,000, of which $250,000 shall be paid at the date of settlement, and the balance of $750,000 shall be paid in three years: And provided further, That the said settlement shall be made within six months from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HALE. I do not know anything about the matter. It involves a large sum. It certainly ought not to go on except by unanimous consent. If no Senator objects to it, I shall not, because I do not know about it.

Mr. GEAR. I will state that this settlement is one of the last on the Pacific system. It involves quite a large amount. The only limitation is that we shall not take less than $1,000,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask if it has the recommendation of the committee?

Mr. GEAR. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Pacific Railroads reported an amendment to go on the sundry civil bill, but it was for a very much larger sum than this.

Mr. HALE. I can not hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. It was for a very much larger sum, and the committee, of course, have not recommended this amendment for a million dollars.

Mr. HALE. Is it recommended by the committee?

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. GEAR. I beg pardon. It is recommended by a majority of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. When was that? It was recommended with an amendment, and only with an amendment, that not less should be paid than the amount of the principal debt and interest without compounding the interest. That was the recommendation of the committee, and not a million dollars. It was very largely above that sum of money.

Mr. GEAR. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that it is provided in the bill that the amount shall not be less than a million dollars. I have a dispatch here which I wish to read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 1.

Hon. J. H. GEAR:

The debt of the Union Pacific is all provided for and paid, also the Central and Western by agreement of February 1, 1899, as provided by act July 7, 1898, leaving Central Branch U. P. S., $3,763,176.07, and Sioux City and Pacific, $4,241,532.70, as the only lines indebted to the Government.

W. F. MACLENNAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa that he can not be heard at the Reporter's table.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the dispatch be read. I did not hear it, and I do not know where it comes from.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the dispatch. The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 1.

Hon. J. H. GEAR:

The debt of the Union Pacific is all provided for and paid, also the Central and Western by agreement of February 1, 1899, as provided by act July 7, 1898, leaving Central Branch U. P. S., $3,763,176.07, and Sioux City and Pacific, $4,241,532.70, as the only lines indebted to the Government.

W. F. MACLENNAN.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think I will ask to have the amendment read again. It is a very large and a very important matter, and I think the Senate should give some attention to it.

Mr. GEAR. I will state in reply to the Senator that a similar amendment was passed as applicable to the Central Pacific at the last session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave to modify the amendment by striking out the word "swear" and inserting the words "administer oaths;" so as to read, "administer oaths and examine witnesses;" and also by striking out, after the words "one million dollars," the remainder of the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the modifications made by the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 14 of the amendment, to strike out the word "swear" and insert "administer oaths;" so as to read:

Said secretary shall also have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths and examine witnesses.

And by striking out all after the words "one million dollars" in the following words:

Of which $250,000 shall be paid at the date of settlement, and the balance of $750,000 shall be paid in three years: And provided further, That the said settlement shall be made within six months from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not desire to address myself to this amendment. I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. We can not hear on this side.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska desires to offer another amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is very difficult to understand these amendments. Indeed it is difficult to understand anything that is going on in the Senate now. If I have the floor, I will wait until I can be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. It is impossible to hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend his remarks until the Senate is in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not willing to have an amendment of this character passed simply because it is offered. A good many other amendments are being passed here which have not been considered at all by the Senate, and I think I will take this occasion to say that it is very improper legislation. We have this deficiency appropriation bill; it has been considered by the committee; the committee has considered, of course, all amendments which have been introduced and referred to it; and when the bill is through and the committee amendments are adopted, it seems that all that is necessary to do is for a Senator to rise and propose any amendment on any subject involving any amount of money, and no objection is made by the committee or anyone else.

I want to enter my protest, Mr. President, against the course of legislation on these appropriation bills in the Senate. Immense claims, old claims, stale claims, matters of pure legislation are being put on these bills without the slightest objection or the slightest consideration or without the Senate knowing what goes on the bills. Now, if the Senate desires to legislate in that way, I can do nothing except to interpose my protest.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order that the amendment involves legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment, to be inserted on page 13, after line 18.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 18, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or receive the donation of a suitable site and to contract for the erection and completion of a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at the city of York, in the State of Nebraska; that said site and building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $30,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not care to run this appropriation bill, but I want to call the attention of the Senator who has it in charge. I ask him if he knows what this amendment which has now been offered is.

Mr. HALE. I only know from its being read, and at the time there was such confusion that I do not believe the clerk who read it understood it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then I ask that it may be read again, and read when the Senate is quiet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators will take their seats. The pending amendment is the one offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. ALLEN's amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The amendment having been read in the same confusion which prevailed when it was first read, I desire to ask the Senator who has charge of the bill if he knows what the amendment is, whether it has been considered by the committee, whether any bill for the building referred to has passed the Senate, and what there is to the amendment, as far as he knows?

Mr. ALLEN. The bill has passed the Senate. It has been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and recommended favorably.

Mr. HALE. The bill was reported to the Senate and passed by the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Has it passed both Houses?

Mr. HALE. I do not think it has.

Mr. ALLEN. It is pending in the other House.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We were told earlier in the day by either the Senator from Maine or the Senator from Iowa that it was the policy of the committee not to allow any public building to be appropriated for either in the sundry civil appropriation bill or in the deficiency appropriation bill unless bills for the public buildings had passed both Houses before the consideration of those appropriation bills. I desire to ask now whether the policy of the committee has been changed. Because if it has, I wish to introduce some amendments for public buildings.

Mr. CULLOM. So do I.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know very many other Senators desire also to do so. I simply desire that there shall be some rule about it.

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment does not carry an appropriation—not a dollar, not a nickel.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then it has no business on the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Then let the Senator make objection to it if he desires.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If there is any objection I can make, I thought I was making it.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well; I do not doubt it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Connecticut has himself objected to it.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President—

Mr. WOLCOTT. Are amendments now in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are in order after the disposition of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] was recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. Let my amendment be disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMON. I move to amend the bill by adding after line 2, page 77:

To pay Lafayette Grover the amount expended by him in defending his title to his seat in the Senate from the State of Oregon, $2,500.

Mr. HALE. All cases involving claims on account of contested seats in the Senate the Committee on Appropriations has always relogated to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They involve a great deal of investigation, and that committee has always had charge of all matters touching allowances for Senatorial seats. This is a very old matter. The Committee on Appropriations knows nothing whatever about it. I do not know whether the Senator in offering the amendment is directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If that is the case, it is in accordance with the rule we have always observed.

Mr. SIMON. I desire to say that it has been approved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections and was reported by the chairman of that committee.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to make a remark in answer to the remark of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will not the Senator from Nebraska allow this amendment to be acted on first?

Mr. ALLEN. It is a good place to make my remarks, Mr. President, right on this amendment.

The Senator from Connecticut finds fault with the committee, and I suppose with the Senate, too, for admitting upon appropriation bills what he calls legislation. I suppose everything we do here, Mr. President, is legislation, or at least it should be. I do not know of any power we have that is not legislative, excepting in cases of impeachment and in passing upon treaties and in confirming or rejecting appointees of the President.

But, Mr. President, the committees appointed by this body are full to overflowing with bills that it has been absolutely impossible to get them to take up and consider and report, either favorably or unfavorably. The Senator from Connecticut himself is culpable to a great extent in that respect. I have now before a committee of which he is a member several bills that have been there for two years that have never even challenged the attention of the Senator from Connecticut or any other member of the committee. The bills are in the committees by the hundreds and by the thousands, and it is because you have got to pursue the committees night and day and importune them constantly that Senators are compelled in the last moment to come into the Chamber and ask to put their bills on appropriation bills in the form of amendments.

If there was a little more statesmanship, Mr. President, in committees, a little more attention to the public business and a little less idling away of time in committee meetings, this difficulty would disappear to a great extent. Every man seems to think his own bill embraces the greatest feats and ideas of statesmanship that it is possible to embrace in a bill. I have no doubt the Senator from Connecticut believes that his bills embrace the ne plus ultra of all good things, of all beneficial things, and that the bills of other Senators embrace the dregs of legislation and the impracticable things.

Why are not these bills taken up? Why do not the committees take them up in their order and consider them and have the stamina either to report them favorably or reject them? If that were done, there would be no chasing around here at the last moment to get these necessary measures on an appropriation bill.

Here the Senator stands, Mr. President, within eighteen or twenty hours of the constitutional death of this Congress, an obstructionist to good measures simply because under the rules he has it within his power to do so.

Mr. SIMON. I desire, in connection with the amendment I offered, to present a letter from ex-Senator Grover setting out the basis of his claim. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read as requested by the Senator.

Mr. SIMON. It has been suggested that it be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the letter will be placed in the RECORD without reading.

The letter referred to is as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., February 4, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I have forwarded to the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections a claim to be reimbursed for expenses necessarily incurred by me in defending my seat in the Senate of the United States in the years 1877-78, in the sum of $2,500.

The investigation of my election to the Senate was ordered on numerous petitions from Oregon, asking that I be refused my seat for reason of alleged fraud in my election by the legislature.

These petitions were not signed by members of the legislature nor by persons who were present at the election, but chiefly by persons who knew nothing of the matter, giving their signatures on the wrongful representations of designing persons. Nor was the investigation of my election originated or promoted by the Republican party or by any prominent members of it; but it was brought about by a small faction of Democrats, who sought my defeat in the legislature after a fair and honorable nomination in a caucus of my party, in which they were fully represented and fairly treated.

The legislature of Oregon was at that time Democratic by a fair majority, brought together in that interest chiefly by my work stamping the whole State as a candidate for the Senate, and of course I was the leading and the legitimate candidate. No benefit would accrue to the Republican party by a change of personal occupancy of this seat in the Senate, so the Republican members of the legislature took but little interest in the contest, but nominated and voted for a prominent Republican, voting for Senator as a compliment to him and maintaining their own organization intact.

In the work of the subcommittee on Privileges and Elections sent to Oregon to investigate my election, I do not remember that any Republican member of the legislature was called to testify against me, but all the members who testified were called in my behalf to explain the fairness and the honorable character of my election.

In the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I was unanimously acquitted of any wrong or dishonorable act in my election, and my seat was sustained and occupied by me for the full term of six years from 1877 to 1883.

The reason why I have not at an earlier day filed my claim for reimbursement of my expenses in this contest, in accordance with the custom in case of contested seats in the Senate, is that at the time of the contest and since, until a late day, I have been so conditioned as to private fortune that I did not feel the necessity of doing so; but at the present time it is otherwise. But I have never waived my right to apply for reimbursement according to the custom of the Senate.

I have written this letter to you individually as a prominent member of the committee before whom this matter will come, as well as a prominent member of the Senate, and ask your kindly attention and consideration of the same.

Very sincerely, your obedient servant,

LA FAYETTE GROVER.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHANDLER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, a single word in reply to the Senator from Nebraska.

This Congress has appropriated by many millions of dollars more than any other Congress that ever sat in Washington, and the Senator from Nebraska will be the first and loudest to charge it with extravagance. All I desire is that if it be possible the appropriations shall be only such as receive the attention of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate, and such as the Senate knows what they are when they are put upon appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLEN. My amendment does not carry a penny.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If it is the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to say nothing when amendments are offered and then try to strike them out in conference, that is a very improper and inconsiderate way of legislating. It has come to be almost impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to oppose any amendment which ought not go on an appropriation bill. There is rush and hurry and demand and importunity to get every claim a Senator desires to have recognized upon appropriation bills.

Now, Mr. President, I think we may well pause, and in the few remaining hours of this session endeavor to transact business intelligently with reference to these claims. It is not for me to lecture or to scold or to criticize, but I do feel that as a Senator I have some responsibility and some duty to perform. All I ask is that all these claims that are sought to be put on these bills shall be understood, shall be considered, and if in order shall be acted upon by the Senate, and not go as a matter of course because some Senator desires to have them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON].

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to state in reference to that amendment that it was regularly presented by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, regularly reported, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it seems to me it ought to be allowed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I move to insert, on page 6, after line 17, the following:

To pay the claims (Treasury settlements) certified in Senate Document No. 60, second session Fifty-fourth Congress, $23,000.83.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. These are claims to which I desire especially to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill. One year ago I offered the amendment. It was objected to by him at that time, and there was an understanding, pretty general, I think, arrived at by the Senate upon his suggestion, that if it could go over until this year it might be included in the omnibus bill, as it is called.

There is no controversy whatever about the justice of these claims. The Government has the money in the Treasury arising in this way: During the war the Government took possession of a steamboat, and while in possession of it permitted it to be destroyed. The insurance companies enumerated here paid the risk which they held on the boat, amounting to $23,000. The Government recognized the liability and paid to the owners the amount of the value of the boat, less this insurance money, and the insurance companies became thereby subrogated to the rights of the owners. They have been for more than thirty years trying to get their money. The Departments have uniformly ruled in their favor. The Attorney-General has given an opinion, which I have here. I think, in all fairness, this claim ought to be allowed without any objection whatever. The amount is $23,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I will ask what committee reports this amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. It is not reported. I referred it to a committee, but they made no report on it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it a claim that has not been reported by any committee?

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, it has not been reported by any committee, but it has—

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has it passed any committee of the Senate?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir; not at this Congress. I referred to the report made in the previous Congress. It has been several times reported. I have before me, printed, the Attorney-General's statement as to the claim having been audited and being a just and proper one to be paid.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Ohio concluded?

Mr. FORAKER. I have not concluded, Mr. President. I insist on this amendment. I had hoped that the Senator having the pending bill in charge would accept the amendment. It is manifestly just, and it seems to me nothing less than an outrage that the Government, which has this money in the Treasury and has had it there for thirty years, should not pay it.

This was reported in connection with the omnibus claims bill and passed the Senate. It received the favorable action of the Senate, but it was crowded out on that bill because, as I understand, they had to cut down the appropriation to a certain figure. That precluded the possibility of allowing this claim, but the allowance of others was preferred. The claim has been passed upon favorably by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this claim is one that is so old that I have almost forgotten the circumstances connected with it. If I understand the case, it is one where the insurance companies paid losses during the war.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. And the Government received from Great Britain a certain amount of money—

Mr. FORAKER. No; this is not one of those cases.

Mr. ALLISON. Then let me ask the Senator how the Government has the possession of this money?

Mr. FORAKER. In this way: The Government impressed into the Government service during the war a steamboat upon which these insurance companies had an insurance risk. The boat was destroyed while in the service of the Government. The Government subsequently recognized its liability to reimburse the owners for the value of the boat, and the claim was adjusted. Meanwhile the insurance companies were called upon to pay, and they did pay the amount.

This amendment provides for the payment of $23,000. When the Government came to pay, recognizing the right of the insurance companies to be subrogated, it paid to the owners of the steamboat the amount which was found to be due on account of the loss of the boat less the amount which had been paid by the insurance companies.

Now, the insurance companies, the Government having reserved their money in that way, having made their payments, the Government having taken advantage of their payment, therefore they ask the Government to reimburse them; but the Government has never done so, although the account has been adjusted in the Treasury Department, and has been time and again recommended for payment, and although the claim has passed the Senate in the way I indicated a moment ago.

Mr. ALLISON. But the difficulty with me respecting this claim is that thirty or more years have passed away since the claim had its origin; and if it was a perfectly just claim, and perfectly manifest and proper that it should be paid, it seems to me very curious that in the last hours of the session we should be asked to put it upon the deficiency appropriation bill without the report at this session of some standing or select committee of this body.

That is the criticism I would make upon the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I can answer the Senator to his own satisfaction, I am sure. I presented this amendment last year, and it was ruled out on a point of order, but an agreement was arrived at at that time that it should be included in the omnibus claims bill this year. I had the claim presented to the Committee on Claims, and the committee recommended that it be put onto the omnibus bill. I did not know until a few days ago that it had been stricken out of that bill. The reason for striking it out was that it was said it was necessary to cut down the amount provided in that bill, which made it necessary to exclude a number of claims, and they excluded this among others.

Mr. ALLISON. The very object of having that omnibus claims bill considered was to eliminate old claims from the appropriation bills. If we are to adopt the practice of inserting now upon the deficiency bill the claims which were rejected, or which were not considered in the omnibus bill, we shall be in no better position than we were in some years ago respecting this matter.

Mr. FORAKER. This claim was considered there.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There were claims amounting to about $5,000,000 passed by the Senate—four or five million dollars—which were eliminated.

Mr. STEWART. Over $6,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Are they all to go on this bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was going to say, why should not all of them go on this bill, if any go on it?

Mr. ALLISON. That is true.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had on the bill of last year, or the year before, claims of exactly this character to the amount of about $100,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. One hundred thousand dollars was not anywhere considering the number of claims I had which had been rejected and a great many disagreed to. I have not offered them here, because I did not think they would properly come here on an appropriation bill.

Mr. FORAKER. That may be, but I bring this amendment here because certainly it is appropriate to put it on this bill. It may not be good policy to do it, but surely it is legitimate legislation, and certainly I have a right to insist upon it under all the circumstances.

The point I am particular about is that I reserved it to the last hour, and I reserved it only because of the understanding that was had about these claims, and because I had done my full duty about having this particular claim brought before the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with any agreement which was made, but certainly there was no agreement about putting the amendment on this bill.

Mr. HALE. There was no agreement to put it on the bill, but only that the Senator from Ohio should wait until other claims had been considered. Of course there was no agreement to put it on.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not claim that. We put it in the omnibus claims bill, as we thought, and it having failed there, I want to put it on here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we should have some understanding about this amendment. If this amendment is to go on the bill, every other amendment which has been rejected or omitted on the omnibus claims bill, so called, will come in; and though there is no present report of a committee, Senators will say, "These matters were relegated to the Committee on Claims and not put in the omnibus bill, and were thrown out because there was not money enough, as was supposed, to pay the nine or ten million dollars involved."

Mr. HALE. I think the Senate understands the situation. If these matters are put on the deficiency bill, there are thirty or forty others that will be put on, and there is no use of our doing that.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senate can rule this out on a point of order, but there has been no amendment of this kind offered by anybody, and under the rules such an amendment can not be offered now. I took advantage of the situation as soon as I learned it and presented this amendment. I am within the rules, and nobody else can get within the rules now with such an amendment, as I understand.

Mr. HALE. The Senate can vote the amendment down, of course.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly the Senate can vote it down or the Senate can vote it up, of course. It is a just claim, which has been pending for thirty years unpaid, and I am within the rule in offering the amendment; and we should pay the claim.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Those of us who do not serve on the Committee on Appropriations, in the stress and volume of business at the end of a session, must follow our leaders—we must stand by the action of the committee. If the committee or the Senator in charge of this bill have in their possession under the parliamentary rule a valid objection to this amendment, we ought not to be called upon to vote the measure down. I will vote with the Senator from Ohio upon the merits of the measure, if I am called upon to do so, but we have a right to call upon the Senators in charge of the appropriation bills to make points of order when points of order ought to be made.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly, if a point of order can be properly made; but the Senator says he has brought himself within the rule by reporting this amendment from a committee.

Mr. FORAKER. No; by referring the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. I understood the Senator to say he had reported it from the committee.

Mr. FORAKER. No; but an amendment must not be reported by a committee in order to come under the rule. I understand, under the rule, if an amendment be offered and referred to the Committee on Appropriations for more than one day before it is presented to the Senate it is in order; and, having done that, I am within the rule.

Mr. HALE. No; it must be reported from a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reported favorably from a committee of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. And then referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day before being presented in the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I want a disposition of the amendment.

Mr. THURSTON and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope I shall not be taken off the floor, Mr. President, until I find the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Rule XVI governs the matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I should like to say a word while he is looking for his rule.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. If those of us who are in charge of claims, whether large or small, that were rejected or thrown out by the conference committee from the omnibus claims bill have any status here, and there is going to be a change in the policy of the Appropriations Committee in regard to those, I have a very small claim which is a very just one, which has been passed by the Senate twice, and I give notice that if one of these claims goes in, I shall ask—following out my usual policy here—I shall ask that I get a little piece of this steal. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. I have now the rule to which I had reference. The second paragraph of Rule XVI reads as follows:

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has not borne in mind that previous to an amendment being sent to the Committee on Appropriations the day before being offered in the Senate it must be reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate. Let the Chair rule upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there has been no report from either a standing or select committee of the Senate on this claim.

Mr. FORAKER. There has been no report on this particular amendment. There was a report on this claim when it was proposed in connection with the omnibus claims bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to rule out the amendment under the first clause of Rule XVI—not the one read by the Senator from Ohio—unless the amendment has been reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate at this session.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, that I have the floor, Mr. President, I have three other amendments which I want to offer, and I want to retain the floor, at least, until I offer them.

I move to amend by inserting after line 2, on page 79, what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

To pay amounts found due the several States for expenses incurred and paid by them under act of July 27, 1861, as recommended by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury November 21, 1862, and December 2, 1862, and reported under resolution of the Senate (Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Senate Document No. 75) by the Auditor for the War Department, $195,230.43.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, that is also an old claim. It applies not only to Ohio, but quite a number of other States. It is for expenses incurred in furnishing troops during the civil war.

The claim has been allowed by the Department, and has been repeatedly recommended for payment. I do not know of any good reason why it should not be paid, except that every time it is presented a point of order is raised against it. I ask the Senate to take action upon the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to make the same point of order I made against the other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the amendment been reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate?

Mr. FORAKER. It has not been.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FORAKER. There is an amendment on the table which I offered to-day, which I now ask to have read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 20, on page 2, the following:

To pay the Second and Third Assistant Secretaries of State additional compensation of $500 each; in all, $1,000.

Mr. FORAKER. In support of that amendment I send to the desk a letter from the Secretary of State which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 16, 1899.

SIR: It will be seen by reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, 1899, page 1909, that the proposition to raise the salary of the Second and Third Assistant Secretaries of State was rejected in the Senate on a point of order that the proposed increase had not been estimated for.

While it is true that the increase was not estimated for in the Book of Estimates presented at the present session (House Document No. 12, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session), it was estimated for in the Book of Estimates laid before the Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, in House Document No. 12, pages 18 and 345.

Congress at that session gave to each of the two Assistant Secretaries named $4,000, an increase of $500; but it seems proper to say that the bill as it left the Senate gave them $4,500, the reduction having taken place in conference.

I am cordially in sympathy with the recommendation of my predecessor that the salary of these officers be placed at $1,500, and trust that your committee will renew its amendment in that direction on the pending deficiency appropriation bill.

There is no valid reason why the Assistant Secretaries in the Department of State should not receive the same salary as like officers in the other Executive Departments. It is a simple act of justice and equity to grant this and it seems a hardship to deny it. In point of service the present incumbents of these positions have perhaps been connected with the Government longer than any other Assistant Secretary at the present time.

Their service in this Department has covered a period of more than twenty years. They give regularly many hours daily overtime to the Department's work, and are entirely familiar with its duties. As a matter of fact, they have no fixed hours, and include Sundays as well in the discharge of their official duties. They have done this for years, and the public business demands this extra service of them.

I therefore trust that this suggestion may receive the committee's favorable consideration.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

HON. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. As the Secretary of State says, it is an act of equity and justice to give to these officers the increased pay which is provided for by this amendment. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not make any point of order against it, if he has the privilege and the right to do so under the rules.

Every Senator knows that there is not a more faithful official in Washington than Mr. Cridler and the other incumbent who will be affected, and it is due to them not only on account of the extra labor they have to perform, the important character of it, and the extra hours they have to give to the service, but also because every other official of equal rank is paid, as I understand, what it is proposed to pay to these officials. I hope no Senator will make any objection to the amendment.

Another thing the letter says is that there has been an estimate for this appropriation heretofore—not at this particular time—that it has been urgently recommended and estimated for heretofore, and I hope it may go through without objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire whether this is a deficiency amendment to a deficiency bill or whether it is a proposal on a deficiency bill to increase permanently the salaries of some officers?

Mr. FORAKER. It is a proposal to increase salaries.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think that has any place on a deficiency bill. I do not want to usurp the place of the committee, however, in objecting to it.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations, when Senators call attention to these points, can not discriminate and let one amendment in and not another. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the statement which has been made here and with the statement which has been read at the desk, but I can not, after what has been said, consistently refrain from making the point of order as the organ of the committee and of the Senate in reporting the bill. The amendment is clearly subject to the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order unless an estimate for it can be found in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. THURSTON. I propose an amendment, and in doing so I desire to explain it in a very few words, in the hope that my amendment may escape the fate of some of the later amendments. That momentary explanation may not make it necessary for me to explain more at length the subject. I offer as an amendment a bill which has heretofore passed the Senate.

The Omaha Exposition closed last year with great success. It left behind splendid grounds and buildings. Public-minded citizens desire to continue it another year. They have raised half a million dollars, and they propose to deposit with the United States $50,000, out of which alone shall come any expense incident to the object stated in this amendment. The amendment relieves the Government from all liability whatever, and I now offer it to the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a board of management for the Greater America Exposition of Omaha, Neb., to consist of not less than six members, selected from the Departments at Washington and the Army and Navy and consular service, who shall be charged with the selection, preparation, installation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of exhibits from the West Indies and the islands of the Pacific Ocean, illustrating the life, resources, and attractions thereof, said exhibits to be placed in the buildings erected by the United States on the site of the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha, Neb., and the use of said building for said purpose is hereby granted to the Greater America Exposition Association: Provided, That on November 1, 1899, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the possession and ownership of said buildings shall be vested in the city of Omaha, Neb.

That for the purpose of encouraging and aiding said Greater America exposition the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to plan and direct the holding of a congress of American Indians, similar to that held on the same grounds in 1893, and to assign from his Department, to take charge of and conduct said congress, the necessary agents, inspectors, and employees.

That the Departments at Washington be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to place at the disposal of the board of management herein created such property as may have been collected or may hereafter be gathered together by Government agents as will aid in carrying out the plans for the exhibit proposed, and are authorized and directed to render to the Greater America Exposition Association such assistance in collecting, preparing, transporting, and installing such additional exhibits as may be deemed desirable and expedient by the exposition association.

That so much of the act of Congress approved June 10, 1896, entitled "An act to authorize and encourage the holding of a trans-Mississippi and international exposition at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, in the year 1898," as relates to the admission to the United States of exhibits to said exposition be, and the same in hereby, extended to the Greater America Exposition aforesaid: Provided, however, That before this provision shall be operative the Greater America Exposition Association shall deposit to the credit of the United States in a United States depository at Omaha the sum of $50,000, to be expended under regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury in carrying out the provisions herein set forth: And provided further, That the United States shall in no manner, and under no circumstances, be liable for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability, of any kind whatever, of the said Greater America Exposition Association, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of said exposition; and employees of the said United States detailed as members of said board for duty in connection therewith, including officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation beyond their regular salaries or rates of pay and their actual and necessary traveling expenses and subsistence while necessarily absent from their homes or stations engaged on the business of said board, and any unexpended balance shall be returned to said Greater America Exposition Association.

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to invite the cooperation of the governments of the world in making a success of the Greater America Exposition, and to direct the consuls and representatives of this government in other lands to bring the scope and purpose of said exposition to the attention of the organized commercial bodies and government authorities at their several stations.

Mr. HALE. To save the time of the Senate, as it is getting late and other bills are waiting, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to do so, as Senators must see. Senators are suggesting to me that I am making fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. ALLEN. I was made fish of some time ago.

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to make the point of order. If the Chair overrules it, the question can then be decided by the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the Senator from Maine listen to me before he makes the point of order.

This company has invested a great many thousand dollars in this enterprise. It does not cost the Government a dollar. It simply authorizes a Government exhibit at the expense of the association. It would be a terrible disappointment to a great many thousand people and to a great many very worthy gentlemen not to have this amendment passed in some form. In view of the fact that it is not a claim and that it carries no appropriation, but simply gives color and recognition to this enterprise without any expense to the Government, I trust the Senator from Maine and all other Senators will withdraw all objections and let the amendment go through.

Mr. HALE. I am a good deal in sympathy with the Senator about that; but after the lectures which have been visited upon the Committee on Appropriations this afternoon for not enforcing points of order, during the rest of the consideration of the bill I shall feel constrained, whatever may be my feeling about any particular amendment, to make the point of order; and it must rest with the Chair under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. I am satisfied the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw their strictures.

Mr. THURSTON. At any other time in the legislative session I should discuss this proposition, but I do not feel justified in occupying the time of the Senate now. The Chair will see that the objection is not tenable.

I offer an amendment now, which was put into the Indian appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations to carry into effect the existing law, and on the written recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Nebraska to withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. THURSTON. I understood from a Senator on the floor that the Chair had already decided the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not made any ruling whatever. The Chair, however, is constrained to sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Maine. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 18, on page 60, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to establish and maintain at the city of Omaha, Neb., a warehouse for Indian supplies, from which distribution shall be made to such Indian tribes of the West and Northwest as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, $8,000.

Mr. HALE. Is the amendment reported from any standing committee?

Mr. THURSTON. That was put on the Indian appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations, and it is in obedience to the written recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. It carries into effect an existing law providing for the establishment of an Indian depot in that city, passed two years since.

Mr. HALE. Did it go out in conference?

Mr. THURSTON. It went out in conference.

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to make the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. After line 10, on page 84, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

To pay E. H. Djureen for extra services in the folding room of the House of Representatives from January 1 to February 1, 1899, $75.

Mr. THURSTON. I wish to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that I am informed that that was left out in the House by mistake. The only way it can now get into the bill is to put it on here. If in conference that is found not to be the fact, of course I shall have no objection to its going out.

Mr. HALE. Our rule is to put on anything which the House for lack of time or change of law or mistake has failed to put in. I was going to say that this is a case that comes under that rule, but if it is found in conference that it is not a mistake, of course the Senator will understand why it is dropped out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the amendment. We have had for years a rule, and an invariable rule in regard to the House and Senate, that we will not interfere with their amendments and they are not to interfere with ours. If my memory serves me—I know I have always done so, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations—we have always required a member of the House, or any other person connected with the House coming to the Senate for an amendment to be placed upon the bill in the interest of any member of the House or any employee of the House, to bring to us a recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. I understand the Senator from Nebraska has done that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Senator a recommendation from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. THURSTON. No; I do not claim that. It was sent to me by a member of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claim has been presented to me, I have no doubt, and I told them it did not belong on an appropriation bill in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Nebraska has not got what I supposed he had—

Mr. THURSTON. I offered the amendment at the request of the member of the House and for his accommodation, thinking that the matter could be placed before the conference committee, and if it failed to find that it was intended to have been put on in the House, it could go out as a matter of course.

Mr. HALE. I can not consent to that, because just now a matter of that kind came to me and I sent the member back to get what I supposed the Senator from Nebraska had. I make the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORAKER. A point of order was made against the first of the amendments I proposed, on the ground that it had not been reported by a committee. I was not aware at the time that it had been. I find since that the claim provided for in the first amendment, to pay the insurance company $23,000, was reported by the Committee on Claims favorably, and, in view of that, I ask now that the Chair may be allowed to reconsider the ruling made upon the point of order, for this makes me clearly within the rule, and that I may have action upon the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator whether the amendment was reported by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. FORAKER. It was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. TELLER. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FORAKER. Referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If that is true, the Chair was clearly wrong. The Chair asked the question whether it had been so reported and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that when it was called up I was not paying close attention, and I did not notice that it was the same case, or I would have called the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the last paragraph of Rule XVI:

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

I should like a ruling on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made by the Senator from South Dakota. The Chair must sustain the point of order, if it is a private claim.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator insists upon it, it is a claim, and I suppose would be called a private claim within the provisions of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was in error as to the first ruling, but he was in error on account of the information given by the Senator from Ohio.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BALTIMORE.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 710, "An act to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the erection of a new public building thereon for the accommodation of the Government service in said city," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the title.

E. MURPHY, JR.,

The report was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I move the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 2, insert:

The officers and enlisted men comprising the temporary force of the Navy during the war with Spain who served creditably beyond the limits of the United States, and who have been or may hereafter be discharged, shall be paid two months' extra pay; and all such officers and enlisted men of the Navy who have so served within the limits of the United States, and who have been or may hereafter be discharged, shall be paid one month's extra pay.

Mr. HALE. Has the amendment been reported by a committee?

Mr. CHANDLER. This amendment was reported by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs as an amendment to the pending bill. It had already passed the Senate as a separate bill and favorably reported in the House, and it is clearly a deficiency. I may also add that a bill making a similar provision for the Army became a law January 12.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

General Land Office: For the following additional employees in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the balance of the fiscal year 1899, the same having been heretofore provided by law for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, namely, for four clerks at the rate of $1,000 each, three clerks at the rate of $900 each, and three laborers at the rate of $600 each; in all, $2,917.30.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that it is an increase of appropriation, that it is not estimated for, and that it has not been reported by a standing committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Nor recommended by the head of a Department?

Mr. CLARK. I was unable to hear the Senator from Maine, owing to the confusion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine will restate his point of order.

Mr. HALE. It is that under Rule XVI it is an increase of appropriation, a new item, and is not recommended by any standing committee.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senator from Maine will withhold the point of order for one moment, and I will explain exactly what this is.

Mr. HALE. I will state also that this whole subject was considered on the legislative appropriation bill, and certain additions were given to the force of the Interior Department, and others were refused.

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. HALE. And it would not be good legislation now, it having been fully considered and acted upon in the legislative appropriation bill, to put it upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will listen for a moment, it is those additions which were made in the legislative bill that this provides for.

Mr. HALE. I am going to listen to the Senator, of course.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator makes the objection that we have already provided certain employees and no more should be provided. This is to provide for the pay from now until the 30th of June of the very additional employees that were given to the General Land Office on the legislative bill for next year.

Mr. HALE. The legislative bill, of course, only—

Mr. CLARK. And it is so stated in the body of the amendment. The General Land Office insists most strenuously that they need now as much as afterwards the additional force which is to come on the 1st of July.

Mr. HALE. To be frank with the Senator, that presents a new consideration. If the clerks that are covered by the Senator's amendment are the same that are covered by the legislative appropriation bill which applies to the next fiscal year, I do not see any danger of bad legislation in providing, if the office need them, that they shall have the clerks between now and July.

Mr. CLARK. That is what the amendment is intended for, and I should like to have it read at the desk, to see if it covers that, and if it does not, I shall be glad to have it amended so as to do so.

Mr. HALE. That is fair. Let it be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I think that makes a good case, Mr. President, and I do not make the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 5, on page 74.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, on page 74, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to state an account with Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company for transporting the United States mails over postal routes Nos. 30003 and 149003 during the period between July 1, 1878, and February 21, 1892, both inclusive, in which he shall credit said company with nonland-grant rates over that portion of its route between New Orleans and Morgan City, La., in accordance with the decision of the Court of Claims in case No. 13877, and shall pay to said company, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as shall remain due upon such adjustment.

Mr. HALE. I make the same point of order as that made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. It is a private claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. TURLEY. On page 79, after line 5, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 79, after line 5, the following:

To pay Martha E. Bowden and Zenobia Porter, the heirs of Lemuel J. Bowden, formerly a Senator from the State of Virginia, $3,000.

Mr. HALE. I make the same point of order.

Mr. TURLEY. The amendment is recommended by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HALE. That is not my point. I make the point of order under the other clause, that it is a pure claim. It is the same point made by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. TURLEY. I do not think the point of order is well taken. It is not a claim made by these parties. It is an allowance by the Senate to the heirs of a dead Senator. It is not a claim made by them directly against the Government. It is in pursuance of a practice which has been pursued by the Senate since 1875 in making allowances to the families or estates of Senators who died in the service. There have been twenty-two just such cases.

Mr. HALE. There is so much confusion here that I could not tell when the amendment was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The amendment will again be stated.

Mr. HALE. Let it be stated again. I want to see if it is one of these matters that come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. TURLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Of course if it does, it is all right.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. TURLEY. It is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HALE. These matters have always been left to that committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move to strike out the committee amendment on page 52 and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that the amendment, having been adopted, can not be stricken out as in Committee of the Whole, but the motion may be made in the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear what the Senator proposes.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 52, the committee amendment, being lines 6 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof—

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think it would be in order to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is undoubtedly in order.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator's amendment refer to the same subject-matter?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Precisely.

Mr. HALE. Then of course the vote ought to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota make the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. HALE. Instead of the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of lines 6 to 10, on page 52, it is proposed to insert:

Reproduction of the official plats of United States surveys, diagrams, field notes, and correspondence constituting the records and files of the surveyor-general and register and receiver at Bismarck, N. Dak., which were destroyed by fire on the 8th day of August, 1898; also, for safes and typewriters for the surveyor-general's office and local land offices, the work to be done and the purchases made under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $30,000: Provided, That $2,000 of this amount may be expended in the purchase of furniture, fixtures, and instruments in the office of the surveyor-general of North Dakota, which were destroyed by fire.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I move the amendment I send to the desk. The amendment is taken from a bill which has passed the Senate. I have stricken out all after the enacting clause, as indicated by the pen marks.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 98, it is proposed to insert:

That the appropriation made by act of March 3, 1879, to be paid to Robert Otis, as administrator of the estate of Roger A. Hiern, be, and hereby is, made available for payment to the administrator de bonis non of said estate, said Robert Otis having died; and the suspension imposed by joint resolution of July 1, 1879, upon the disbursement of said appropriation until the further action of Congress is hereby raised and removed.

Mr. HALE. I would not object to the first part of it, simply transferring it, but a part of the original legislation declared that no payment should be made until further legislation by Congress, and I can not yield that point.

Mr. MONEY. Does the Senator make the point of order on the amendment?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. I did not understand the point of order. Will the Senator state it again?

Mr. HALE. I would not object, I said, to that part of it which simply transfers it from one person to another, but the original legislation provided that nothing further should be done until further legislation by Congress, and the Senator seeks to repeal that provision by this amendment. Therefore it is a change of existing law, and is legislation.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, this bill has passed the House, I am informed, quite a number of times. It has passed the Senate, and I am told by a member of the committee that it would not be subject to a point of order, and that there was no objection to it. As a matter of fact, I beg to say that the sum was appropriated once, and payment made to the owners of the steamer, except this one man. It was suspended by a joint resolution because, it was said, he was not loyal. There never was any proof brought up that he was disloyal.

On the contrary, there are affidavits to show that he was loyal; but even independent of that fact it was not necessary that there should be any proof of loyalty whatever, because this steamer was purchased. General Butler came to New Orleans on the 2d day of May, and on the 8th day of May he had the steamer brought from the lake where she was lying and authorized the captain to enlist a crew, and on the 12th she went into the service of the Government as a hired vessel.

She was carried on the quartermaster's roll as a purchased steamer, and in October, 1865, she was sold as the property of the Government and the money paid into the Treasury. Then the parties who were concerned, who owned sixty-five one-hundredths of the steamer, were paid their money. It was denied to Roger A. Hiern, the other owner, upon the ground of disloyalty; but the commission appointed to inquire into this thing found that he was loyal, although I hold that it had no relation to the subject. It is an award of money, and the money was appropriated, and was stopped by the resolution of which I spoke. I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I hope the Senator from Maine will not object to it.

Mr. HALE. Let the Chair rule upon it. I think myself there is some doubt about it on the Senator's statement, but I should prefer that the Chair should rule upon it.

Mr. MONEY. I state from my information that the bill has passed the House. It has been favorably reported in the Senate and passed the Senate, and the money has been lying there for all these years. I do not see how any point of order can lie against the amendment, it having passed the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator to restate the facts concerning this matter, as the attention of the Chair was diverted when he made the statement a moment ago.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that the Chair wants a restatement of the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator pleases.

Mr. MONEY. It is suggested to me by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the difficulty with the Senator from Maine will be obviated by allowing the amendment to close with the word "died," in line 7, which will relieve it of any point of order whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator consent to that modification?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir; I consent to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With that modification, the Chair rules that the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit an amendment reported by the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill insert:

To reimburse to the Maritime Canal Company, of Nicaragua, for expenditures in aid of the commission authorized by act of Congress known as the Ludlow commission for inspection and survey of the Nicaragua Canal, $15,890.35: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall investigate the items of the said claim and approve the same before any payment of the same is made.

Mr. HALE. Was the amendment reported by any standing committee?

Mr. MORGAN. It was reported by the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Was it reported at this session?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Very well; then let it pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the end of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representative or representatives of the late James Crooks and to the legal personal representative or representatives of the late William Crooks, said James and William Crooks having been citizens of Canada, the sum of $5,000, the value of a vessel, called the Lord Nelson, illegally seized by Lieutenant Woolsey, of the Navy of the United States, on Lake Ontario, on the 5th day of June, 1812, and interest on said sum at the rate of 4 per cent from the day of seizure to the date of the approval of this act, paying to said representative or representatives of each of said James and William Crooks one-half the sum found due under this act, which said sum shall be received by said representatives, and each of them, as a full payment and satisfaction of all claims on account of the loss of said vessel against the United States.

Mr. HALE. That is a pure claim, besides being eighty years old. I raise the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DANIEL. I did not catch the remark of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I made the point of order that this is a pure claim under the last section of the rule, besides being eighty years old. That, of course, does not add to the point, but it shows how unwise it would be to take up one of these old matters. We are fortunate in having a rule which excludes them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I offer an amendment to come in on page 84 at the close of line 17, the amendment having relation to the Geological Survey.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 17, page 54, insert:

Provided, That the appropriations for the next fiscal year for the continuation of the investigation of the coal and gold resources of Alaska be reduced by this amount.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the committee accept the amendment?

Mr. HALE. It is not subject to a point of order, of course. It is only a limitation upon the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 5, page 86.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, after line 5, insert:

To pay to the personal representative of James H. Dennis the sum of $25,638, being the amount found by the Court of Claims to be due to him by reason of certain contracts for the improvement of the Tennessee River.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine makes the point of order against the amendment. On what ground, the Chair will ask the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. If it is a judgment of the Court of Claims, it is, of course, not subject to the point of order; but if it is simply a Bowman claim, none of those are on this bill, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. LINDSAY. The claim was considered by the Committee on Claims and incorporated by that committee into what is known as the omnibus bill. Therefore it has received consideration, and favorable consideration, by a committee of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It is for the very reason that it was put in with the other claims that it has not been reported and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope my friend in charge of the bill will not make the point of order.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, after line 13, insert:

Monument to Sergt. Charles Floyd: To enable the Secretary of War, in cooperation with the Floyd Memorial Association, to cause to be erected over the remains of Sergt. Charles Floyd, a member of the Lewis and Clark expedition, who died and was buried August 30, 1804, near the present site of Sioux City, Iowa, a fitting monument commemorative of that expedition and of the first soldier to lay down his life within the Louisiana purchase, $5,000: Provided, That the total cost and expense to the United States of erecting said monument shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire the Chair to decide whether that amendment is in order or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the point of order against it?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 87, after line 10.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, at the end of line 10, insert:

Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no ground sufficient in his opinion to support a motion for a new trial on an appeal of said cause.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a limitation. It was in—

Mr. COCKRELL. That is always put in with those bills.

Mr. ALLISON. It has always been put in.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEY. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the bottom of page 60.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 60 insert:

To the National Investment Company of Washington City, D. C., for arrearages of rent in connection with the municipal building, No. 464 Louisiana avenue, for the use of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $3,000.

Mr. HALE. Where does that amendment come from, Mr. President?

Mr. KENNEY. I should like to state—

Mr. HALE. Is it submitted as an estimate by the District Commissioners?

Mr. KENNEY. It is not.

Mr. HALE. Then, of course, I must make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted after line 17, on page 6.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, page 6, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to examine, adjust, and pay the accounts of the Cape Smyth Whaling and Trading Company for supplies furnished and services rendered in rescuing, housing, feeding, clothing, and caring for shipwrecked whalers in the Arctic seas in 1897 and 1898 until they were taken in charge by officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service; and the said Secretary is authorized and directed to adjust and allow said accounts upon the same basis as to prices as have been allowed by him for similar services and supplies subsequently furnished upon the request of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. HALE. Was this a matter in connection with the expedition of the Government in the northern seas?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state—

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will answer the question.

Mr. PERKINS. It was in connection with it. The amendment has been referred to the Committee on Commerce and favorably reported.

Mr. HALE. I do not care about that. It is not a claim. It is in connection with the service of the Government?

Mr. PERKINS. It is for supplies furnished to the Government, and only to overcome a technical objection of the Auditor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. After line 22, page 20, I move to insert:

Grading of S street: For grading of S street from Phelps place westward $5,000 is hereby appropriated, one-half to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. This is new matter, unless it has been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that I am informed that a bill has passed both the Senate and the House providing for the grading of S street and that it is in accordance with the wishes of the Commissioners that an appropriation should be so made.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator is correct and an act has passed providing for this improvement, and the Commissioners estimate for it, then I do not make any point. Is the Senator confident about that?

Mr. WELLINGTON. The act passed. I am confident of that. I am also confident that the Commissioners are willing to have the appropriation made, but there has been no definite estimate that I know of.

Mr. HALE. If the amendment goes in, I must notify the Senator that as it is to carry out an existing law, he must furnish to the committee of conference an estimate from the Commissioners.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I will state to the Senator that if that can not be done, I shall ask that it be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, at the end of line 18, insert:

The Secretary of the Interior shall make a thorough investigation of all warrants heretofore issued by the Cherokee Nation, drawn by the principal chief of said nation in accordance with the legal act of the national council, upon the school, orphan, or asylum funds of said nation; and if the said Secretary shall find that said warrants are legal and valid and not fraudulent and that the money received from the sale of the same has been expended for the support of the schools, orphan asylum, and insane asylum, he shall pay said warrants, respectively, out of the funds belonging to said nation in the Treasury of the United States which are designated as school, orphan, and asylum funds, not exceeding in amount the sum of $40,000.

Mr. HALE. I must make the point of order that that is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend, on page 22, after line 15, by inserting:

For the chair of pedagogy of Howard University, $1,500.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask if the amendment is in order?

Mr. HOAR. I hope my friend will waive that objection. This chair was established last winter by law, but there was an omission to provide for it. It is this colored university over here, which has a pretty hard struggle at best. I hope the Senator will not object. It is the chair for the instruction of students in pedagogy.

Mr. PETTUS. I think it should be examined by a committee.

Mr. HOAR. It will be examined by the conference committee. It has been referred to the committee. I trust my honorable friend will not insist on his objection. It is a very harsh application of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama make the point of order?

Mr. PETTUS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment. At the end of line 13, page 54, I move to insert:

That in the form provided by existing law the Secretary of the Interior may file and approve surveys and plats of any right of way for a wagon road, railroad, or other highway over and across any forest reservation or reservoir site when in his judgment the public interests will not be injuriously affected thereby.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order that that is legislation.

Mr. CARTER. I will state that it is merely a construction of existing law. I desire to explain directly to the Senate the importance of this amendment. There are two railroads in the course of construction in the State of Montana. One of them encounters one of these ephemeral and indefinite propositions known as forest reservations, and hundreds of men are compelled to quit their work because they have encountered that imaginary line.

The Secretary of the Interior holds—I do not think that is according to a wise construction, but still he holds—that a plat of a survey can not be filed over one of those forest reservations for a railroad. The same is true with reference to reservoir sites. Unless this amendment be adopted, very important public improvements will be stayed until the next meeting of Congress.

I believe this amounts merely to a matter of construction of an existing law. It was provided in the law relating to forest reservations that highways were to extend across the reservations without let or hindrance, but "highways" were construed by the Secretary of the Interior not to include railroads, and consequently the maps are not filed.

I do not think the point of order lies, strictly speaking, in consequence of the suggestion I have made.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator does not need the law, he is all right as it is; but I think this is legislation, and I make the point of order, as I feel constrained to do, not that I am hostile to the amendment, but as I am compelled to make it in all these cases.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in view of the importance of this matter, and the fact that the amendment does not carry any appropriation, and that the failure to enact any legislation at this session of Congress will involve very great hardships to individuals and communities, I will ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be inserted.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to appeal to the Senator from Maine to permit this amendment to go through?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. In view of the fact that these reservations were made without consideration and without examination, and that they stop great public works—

Mr. HALE. What is the public work that is stopped?

Mr. STEWART. The building of a railroad.

Mr. CARTER. There are two railroads there.

Mr. STEWART. This is nothing but a forest reservation.

Mr. HALE. Is it railroad legislation?

Mr. STEWART. No; it is to let railroads go through a forest reservation. The forest reservations ought to be abolished. They take up twenty or thirty million acres of land, which were set apart from maps and not from any examination of the country.

Mr. HALE. In the way that things come here we can not look up all of these matters. I do not know much about land matters myself.

Mr. STEWART. This is not a small matter. It is an important matter.

Mr. HALE. The more important it is, the more grave should be the consideration given it.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I do not feel that I know enough about forest reservations to understand what would be the effect of an amendment of this kind; but there are Senators here who do know, Senators who give attention to public-land questions, and there are lawyers here who know what would be the effect of this proposed legislation. If it is granting new and great privileges to a railroad company, they ought not to be granted on this deficiency bill.

Mr. STEWART. It is not.

Mr. HALE. There are lawyers here who will know. I do not know.

Mr. STEWART. Under the general law passed in 1875 all railroads could build over the public lands which are granted, and now these railroad projects are in process of construction. Here in the Department, without any examination of the case, between twenty and thirty million acres of land have been withdrawn and placed in reservations, and sometimes they withdraw whole towns. It is the most inconsiderate thing I have ever known.

The building of railroads over the public lands ought to be allowed and not be interfered with by such inconsiderate and obstructive orders as those which have been issued. It is doing nobody good, but is doing harm. To stop a railroad in a forest reservation is very detrimental to the public interests, and railroads can not hurt a forest reservation.

Mr. WILSON. I simply rise, Mr. President, to inquire if the Senator in charge of the bill has made a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. CARTER. There has been a point of order made, but I have requested unanimous consent for the insertion of the provision in the bill. There is no appropriation in it, and it permits a very important public work to proceed.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana that unless something is done it will be absolutely impossible to get any railroad across the State I in part represent. They have taken a block right out in the center across the backbone of the mountains, taking 8,000,000 acres of land, and we are there blocked, so that it is impossible to proceed in any direction whatever. If the same thing were to occur on the east of the Mississippi River, the people would not stand it and there would be a riot.

No greater outrage has ever been perpetrated upon a free people than that which has been perpetrated by the withdrawal of these lands without notice to our people. It is an infamous thing. It is retarding the growth and the development and the prosperity of that section of the country wherever the withdrawals have been made. It ought to be stopped. It is going to cost the people of the United States $50,000,000 to carry out this proposed scheme, and it will never amount to the value of a shoestring as far as saving any of the forests is concerned—nothing whatever. We ought to have the right to develop our country and to get railroads across it, but we have no such opportunity.

I will say to the Senator that this is not a new question. It has been brought up here in past years and debated time and time again, and it has been before the Appropriations Committee and before the Forestry Committee. We have had no opportunity to be heard. This amendment ought to be allowed and railroads permitted to be constructed, so that our section of the country may be developed.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Chair to state the request I presented for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent to be permitted to offer the amendment which has been stated from the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I hope the bill will now be passed, so that we can get it into conference.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 18, page 60, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $29,850.74, being the interest at 5 per cent per annum from June 9, 1884, to March 23, 1886, due the Western Cherokee Indians under the award of the United States Senate of September 5, 1859, on the principal sum of $212,326.94, found to be due them under the decision of the Supreme Court of June 6, 1884, is hereby appropriated, to be paid to the authorized agent of the council of the Western Cherokee Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks of the Senate number the Senate amendments to the deficiency bill, so that it may be printed by order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that the Army appropriation bill be now taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

WESLEY VAN OVER.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask that bills from the House of Representatives on the table of the President of the Senate be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has yielded to me for the purpose of making a report, which I present, with the permission of the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like first to have the bills from the House of Representatives laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 1778) for the relief of Wesley Van Over, late of Company C, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, and Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of that bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOG SIGNAL NEAR SABINE BANK, TEXAS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1114) for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a light house and fog-signal station on or near Sabine Bank, Texas, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

OHIO CENTENNIAL AND NORTHWEST TERRITORY EXPOSITION.

Mr. SEWELL. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill from the House of Representatives providing for the Ohio Centennial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill

(H. R. 12102) to encourage the holding of the Ohio Centennial and Northwest Territory Exposition at the city of Toledo, Ohio; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I wish to say that if the bill takes any time, I shall have to object to its consideration.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think it will take very much time. There will certainly be no discussion of it.

Mr. SEWELL. It is essential that the appropriation bills should be passed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FORAKER. I know that; but the bill can not take very much time, as we passed one just like it yesterday.

Mr. SEWELL. Very well; if it does not lead to debate, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to offer an amendment to that bill. I offer what I send to the desk as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall not offer the amendment if it will send the bill into conference. I tried to ask the Senator a moment ago if the bill would have to go to conference.

Mr. HANNA. If the bill should be amended, it will have to go to conference.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not desire that. I do not desire to inflict my own grievances upon anybody else, and I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. 414) for the erection of a public building at Tampa, Fla., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same with amendments. Strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

FRANCIS E. WARREN,
H. D. MONEY,

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the regular order, whatever it is.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Army bill is the regular order.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is very unfortunate. I have a bill which would commend itself in a moment. I have been waiting the whole afternoon to call it up.

Mr. ALLISON. I know no more important business than the Army bill. If the Senator has a more important bill than that, I should like to know it.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us proceed with the Army bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I hope we may now go on with the Army bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, which was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 4, to increase the appropriation for pay of officers of the line from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 7, to insert:

For pay of the company commissioned officers in each regiment of the special or immune regiments their salaries from the time each organized company reported at rendezvous as a company for service until said officers were commissioned; and for pay of the regimental commissioned officers their salaries from the time the regiment was mustered into service until said officers were commissioned, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such company and regimental officers shall be paid only from the time when they personally reported for duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of enlisted men," on page 4, line 20, after the word "of," to strike out "the line" and insert "enlisted men of all grades;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $13,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Hospital Corps," on page 5, line 11, to increase the pay of enlisted men in the Hospital Corps, from $493,800 to $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay to clerks and messengers at department headquarters and at Headquarters of the Army," on page 5, after line 14, to strike out:

Fifteen clerks, at $1,800 each per annum, $27,000.

Fifteen clerks, at $1,000 each per annum, $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 19, to increase the number of clerks at $1,400 each per annum from 20 to 30; and in line 20, to increase the appropriation therefor from $28,000 to $42,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 23, to increase the number of clerks at $1,000 each per annum from 85 to 100; and in line 24, to increase the appropriation therefor from $85,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to strike out:

Eleven clerks, at $900 each per annum, $9,900.

Eighteen messengers at $340 each per annum, $15,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 6, to increase the number of messengers at $720 each per annum from 50 to 68; and in line 7, to increase the appropriation therefor from $36,000 to $48,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, to reduce the total appropriation for pay to clerks and messengers at department headquarters and at Headquarters of the Army from $397,030 to $262,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the regimental sergeant-majors and regimental quartermaster-sergeants of artillery and infantry shall have the same pay and allowances as the regimental sergeant-majors and regimental quartermaster-sergeants of cavalry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the requirements of law relative to the reduction of the Army on July 1, 1901, shall not be held to apply to the officers of the Record and Pension Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 10, line 23, before the word "paymasters," to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy;" and in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-four" and insert "at $1,400 each, ninety-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of 70 paymasters' clerks, at $1,400 each, $98,000; paymasters' messengers, $15,000; traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks and expert accountant of the Inspector-General's Department, $30,000; in all, $123,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 16, to insert:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated, except the appropriation "for mileage to officers when authorized by law," shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, regular and volunteer, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 28, after line 11, to strike out:

For restoring the power house, machinery, and electric plant at the Rock Island Arsenal, which were destroyed by fire January 3, 1890, to be immediately available, $9,851.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 19, before the word "mustered," to strike out "hereafter;" and in line 24, before the word "mustered," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to make the clause read:

That all enlisted men in the Regular Army who enlisted subsequent to the declaration of war for the war only and mustered out of the service who have served honestly and faithfully beyond the limits of the United States shall be paid two months' extra pay on muster out and discharge from the service, and all enlisted men in the Regular Army who enlisted subsequent to the declaration of war for the war only and mustered out of the service who have served honestly and faithfully within the limits of the United States shall be paid one month's extra pay on muster out and discharge from the service from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said moneys to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to page 28, after line 4.

Mr. FRYE. Are we through with the committee amendments?

Mr. SEWELL. I hope the Senator from Alabama will permit the bill to be perfected first by the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. FRYE. We are not through with the committee amendments yet.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. SEWELL. On page 11, line 3, there is a clerical mistake in the bill. It reads $129,000, and it should be $143,000. I move to amend the bill in that particular.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to insert, on page 27, after line 2, the usual annual amendment, giving two old cannon to the Grand Army encampment with which to make memorial badges. I send the amendment to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 37, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to deliver to the order of Lewis Wagner, chairman of the general committee of the thirty-third national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., in September next, two dismounted condemned cannon used in the late civil war, to be used for the purpose of furnishing memorial badges commemorative of the holding of said encampment at Philadelphia, Pa.: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States through the delivery of said condemned cannon.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator who offered the amendment or who has it in charge—

Mr. HAWLEY. I offered it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not rise to oppose the amendment, but I should like to know why such legislation is necessary? Has not the War Department some authority of that sort now?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am glad to answer the question. The War Department has abundant authority to give old condemned cannon to Grand Army posts for preparing monuments, but this is just a little outside of that. The strict letter of the law does not permit to be done what the amendment proposes. The Department would be glad to do it, but it has not the authority.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire because I have one or two applications from home.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will find a law providing the course of action to be taken. There will be no difficulty in getting some old condemned cannon for monuments.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Adjutant-General shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general of the Army.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I object to that amendment to an appropriation bill as legislation changing the existing law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment is one that comes up duly, having been reported from the Military Committee, and I hope the Senator from Alabama will not make any objection to it.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator is mistaken when he says it has been reported from the Military Committee. The Military Committee has never acted on that as an amendment to this bill. If it has, it has acted on it merely individually, and not at a meeting of the committee; but even if it was reported from the committee, it is still liable to the objection which I have made.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to say that I hope there will be no question of veracity between the Senator from Alabama and myself.

Mr. PETTUS. There can not be any.

Mr. WARREN. In the first place, the bill is one that passed the House of Representatives. It then came to the Senate, and passed the Senate with an amendment. It went back to the House and the expectation was that it could be reached, but it has not been reached, and therefore the amendment was introduced in due course and sent to the Military Committee, and in due course the Military Committee have reported the amendment precisely in the same way that they have reported almost all other business for the last several days.

It has been impossible, of course, for Senators to be on the floor and at the same time in the committee room. Therefore upon a great many of these matters the committee has been polled. It is true that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] did not permit the use of his name in the polling of the committee, but it is nevertheless true that the amendment has been reported by a large majority of that committee, and comes in here exactly as other matters have come in, and exactly as the amendment which has just been adopted came; and inasmuch as it has passed both Houses in the form of a bill, I do not see that there ought to be any objection to it, and I do not think there should be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the specific point of order of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment?

Mr. SEWELL. I do not want the Senator from Wyoming to make any mistake. The bill has not passed the other House.

Mr. WARREN. It passed the other House before it came to the Senate originally.

Mr. SEWELL. No, the original bill was introduced in the Senate by me, and I think the Senator from Wyoming is mistaken.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may have introduced a similar bill. I remember distinctly the taking of the bill up in the committee.

Mr. SEWELL. I introduced the bill, and it passed this body.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it ever passed the other House.

Mr. WARREN. It passed the House and came to this body with an amendment making it applicable to the present Adjutant-General only. That is the position of it. It then came back. That was in the first session of this Congress.

Mr. SEWELL. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken in saying that it passed both Houses. It never passed the other House.

Mr. WARREN. That is my remembrance of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order made by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PETTUS. My point of order is that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. General legislation?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir; it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

So far as the statement of facts is concerned, I have no question about them; but they are not all the facts. A bill was passed by the House of Representatives, as I remember it, and it came to the Senate. The bill was passed here with an amendment to make it applicable to the present occupant of that office. That bill has never been acted on in this body, and it has never been, as I am informed, in the House of Representatives, if it is proper to speak of that body.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, it passed the Senate as we amended it in committee, and it went to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PETTUS. I said that.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. PETTUS. It went to the House, but that bill has never been acted on, and this amendment which is proposed here has never been ratified by the Senate in any way.

So far as the action of the committee is concerned, I insist that the committee has never acted on this proposed amendment. A committee can not act, as I understand it, without giving to the members of the committee an opportunity to be heard. There has never been a meeting of the committee at which this matter has been considered, and the Senator states correctly that he has applied to me—

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator recollect that a similar subject was acted on?

Mr. PETTUS. A similar subject was acted on, as I have said twice.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator know that all the business of the Military Committee for four or five days has been reported as this amendment has been, by polling the members of the committee?

Mr. PETTUS. I am not discussing that subject. I am discussing my rights as a member of that committee, and I have a right to attend the meetings of that committee and to be heard when it acts.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him was not this bill passed at the last session? I remember that we had it under consideration.

Mr. PETTUS. It was not passed in the shape it is here proposed. It was passed by the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. My recollection is that it was in effect the same.

Mr. PETTUS. No, it was not in effect the same.

Mr. FORAKER. Wherein does this amendment differ from that bill? I am merely asking for information.

Mr. PETTUS. It differs in this, that the bill which passed the Senate provided that Mr. Corbin should be Adjutant-General.

Mr. FORAKER. That was at the last session. Do you say the bill named him at the last session?

Mr. PETTUS. It did not name him, but it said the present occupant.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what this amendment is, as I understand it.

Mr. MASON. May I ask the Senator from Alabama a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. I understand the effect of the amendment is to promote General Corbin. Is not that right?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is that he shall receive the pay and allowances of a major-general.

Mr. MASON. I simply wanted to inquire if it was an amendment proposing to promote General Corbin?

Mr. PETTUS. It was. At the last session of Congress there was such a bill.

Mr. MASON. Does any one object to that?

Mr. FORAKER. It was a special bill, I believe.

Mr. MASON. I wish to know about it.

Mr. PETTUS. I can not hear two or three questions asked at the same time.

Mr. MASON. I want to know if anyone has objected to the reasonable promotion of General Corbin in view of his great services?

Mr. PETTUS. I think so, and if this amendment is going to be pressed it will have to be discussed. The purpose of the amendment, Mr. President, is simply to pass one man, and not a fighting man at that, over the whole line of brave men who have been fighting our battles.

Mr. MASON. I do not admit that.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PETTUS. I will allow the Senator to ask a question, but I will not yield for debate.

Mr. HAWLEY. You have debated it yourself.

Mr. PETTUS. Of course I have, for I have the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator is debating the merits of it.

Mr. PETTUS. And I am going to do so. I will permit a question if the Senator wishes to ask one.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to say that it is important that this bill should be passed at the earliest possible moment? The conference report on the river and harbor bill is to follow this, and it is absolutely necessary that we should get on with the business.

Mr. PETTUS. Perhaps it is.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator is going to occupy time, I shall have to object to it.

Mr. PETTUS. Perhaps it is, but I am not going to submit to this outrage upon the whole Army of the United States simply because this discussion consumes time.

Mr. SEWELL. The reason I have allowed the discussion to go on so far is that a bill similar to the amendment which has been proposed passed the Senate last winter. I myself introduced it. The Senator from Alabama opposed it very vigorously. The bill, however, passed and went to the other House. It was, therefore, in a position to be introduced as an amendment to an appropriation bill, because it has met the approval of the Senate.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator had attended to what was said by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and myself, he would have found that that matter has all been stated, and stated accurately. The bill was passed in a certain shape. It passed the House; it came to the Senate, and the Senate amended it by providing in substance that the present occupant of the office should be the man promoted; but this amendment as it is now proposed has never passed the Senate at all, so far as I am informed. A piece of it was passed.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be read again?

Mr. PETTUS. I can not prevent that.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator accept the amendment exactly in the form that it passed from the Military Committee in the first instance? Will he consent to its being considered in that form?

Mr. PETTUS. I will not. I shall make my objection to it then as I made it before.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether his antagonism is to General Corbin in person?

Mr. PETTUS. My antagonism is to the proposition that one man sitting in his office shall be promoted over the men who are doing the fighting of the country. General Corbin has already been promoted over what I believe are much better men.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to have the privilege of a word. The Senator from Alabama has really discussed the merits of the proposition, which is all right enough, and I want to say a single sentence, and that is all I wish to say. From my personal observation I believe there is not a man in this city who has done the work for six months past that General Corbin has done—not a man.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is that there is not a debatable question before the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. That is so.

Mr. WARREN. I hope I shall not be cut off by the point of order without having an opportunity of saying a word.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President, and I demand the opinion of the Chair upon that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts raises a question of order, which the Chair will decide. The Chair assumes that the debate has been going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to further debate on the subject.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a privileged report.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the question of order be first determined.

Mr. HALE. The report will only take five minutes. It is very important that it should get over to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will delay deciding the question which has been raised until the conference report shall have been acted upon—if there is no objection. The Chair hears none, and the report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 14, 15, and 23. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 25, 29, 30, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 50, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number named in said amendment insert "seventeen thousand five hundred;" and on page 1, in line 9, after the word "pay," insert the words "and allowances prescribed by law;" and on the same page, in line 11, after the word "list," insert the words "including the Admiral of the Navy, whose pay and allowances shall be the same as those received by the last General of the United States Army;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 26 of the bill, in line 15, after the word "honorably," insert the words "as such;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The act of June 10, 1896, authorizing the construction, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, of two submarine boats is hereby amended so as to permit the Secretary to contract for two submarine boats of the Holland type, similar to the submarine boat Holland."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Pay, Marine Corps: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on the active list, $34,900."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law, and the number of enlisted men authorized for the Marine Corps shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders, $112,548."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 4, 21, 22, 23, 24, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 55 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,

A. P. GORMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. BOUTELLE,

S. G. HILBORN,

A. J. CUMMINGS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee, or whoever is on the committee of conference, to explain just what has been agreed to by the conference committee and what has been disagreed to—what is left.

Mr. HALE. About all that has been done is to agree to uncontested points—the increases that became necessary by reason of the personnel bill and the fire at the navy-yard at Brooklyn—uncontested matters.

The Gathmann-gun amendment is disagreed to; the dry dock and all the provisions in relation to the increase of the Navy and in relation to armor. The conferees found themselves at a deadlock on those and have reported a disagreement. It is only sending the report over to the other House for action there. None of the controverted matters have been in any way touched upon in the agreement. The two Houses stand opposed to each other.

Mr. CHANDLER. As I understand, Mr. President—

Mr. SEWELL. I do not wish, being in charge of the Army bill, to be taken off my feet in this way by having Senators enter into a general discussion.

Mr. HALE. I have no idea that there will be any discussion. There ought not to be. I said, when I introduced the report, that it would not take five minutes. I should not have introduced it but for that. There is nothing in the report that involves controversy.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from New Jersey should know that there is not often discussion upon conference reports, but Senators do want to know at the time what has resulted. I understand that as to the Gathmann gun there is still a disagreement, and that as to the Holland torpedo boats the Senate amendment has been agreed to, with a provision that makes it absolutely obligatory upon the Secretary to build the two torpedo boats. Is that so, I ask the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. GORMAN. It is not true.

Mr. CHANDLER. There were some conditions annexed to the provision as it passed the Senate, and that clause has been stricken out.

Mr. GORMAN. The condition of the act of a year ago remains in force as it was. It gives the Secretary the same discretion, and no more.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, I will ask the Senator, what is the need of the provision, if the Secretary now has the authority to build the two boats?

Mr. GORMAN. I think absolutely none, and it does not change the condition, in my judgment.

Mr. CHANDLER. It leaves it still discretionary with him.

Mr. GORMAN. Perfectly so, as I understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments not agreed to and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

SARAH HAMILTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read: To the Senate:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 2d instant (the House of Representatives concurring) I return herewith the bill S. 3466, entitled "An act granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton."

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 3, 1899.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the Adjutant-General shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to transgress any rule, but I should like for a moment to address myself to the point of order, that I may cite some precedents. The compensation of officers of the Government has been changed repeatedly in appropriation bills. Governors of Territories and judges in Territories have had their salaries changed repeatedly. Where the law provided $3,600 for a judge, $3,000 for governor, an appropriation bill has reduced it to $2,400. It has also raised salaries at different times. I do not think the point of order should obtain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. The amendment is signed on the back by seven members of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to ask a question right here. Did the Military Committee yesterday have the amendment referred to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment was introduced. This particular amendment did not go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then clearly it is not in order on that ground.

Mr. WARREN. It is reported from a standing committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. But not referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day before being presented here. That is the rule.

Mr. LODGE. It is clearly out of order.

Mr. ALLEN. I trust the question will be submitted to the Senate, whatever it may be. I am not much of a military man, and I am not much of a hero worshiper. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was going to make a little speech if I did not interrupt the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. PETTUS. I do not remember whether this is debatable or not.

Mr. ALLISON. It is.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I wish to add a few more words. This is general legislation. It changes the rank of the Adjutant-General, and it not only changes his rank, but it changes his pay. I want to make an objection to it on the ground that the committee has never acted on the amendment, and that it has never been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as suggested by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. President, in reference now to this report that comes here, do Senators say that a committee of this body can make a report without allowing the members of the committee an opportunity to be heard? Certainly no such parliamentary law can ever be heard of in this country. It has been decided over and over again. In law you appoint arbitrators, and the arbitrators may be ten. Nine of them may call a meeting and give the other arbitrator no notice, and that award is absolutely void. Why? Because every member of the board of arbitrators has a right to be heard in the discussion of the subject, and an opportunity afforded him to convince his fellow-arbitrators that what they are doing is wrong. That has been decided thousands of times.

A committee! What is that? It is a body composed of the number of members which the Senate chooses to name, and there is no authority at all for a majority of the committee to act except when a meeting is called, and then if a man absents himself he surrenders his opportunity to be heard. But no committee can act lawfully or decently unless there is a meeting and an attendance. I know this has been done time and again. It is a common practice where nobody objects; but the Senator from Wyoming had notice that I not only objected to what was proposed to be done, but I objected to anything being done except it was in a meeting of the committee.

I know that the committee is polled, as they call it here; and when nobody objects to the polling, it passes as the action of the committee. But no committee can act without a meeting of which reasonable notice shall be given to all the members to be present. So I say this has never received the sanction of any committee of this body.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. Not for debate for a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. Not for debate, but to correct a statement made a while ago. I understood the Senator from Alabama to say that the amendment now proposed differs substantially from the bill as we passed it upon the recommendation of the Military Affairs Committee last July. I have that bill before me as it passed, as I recall—

Mr. PETTUS. And it contains exactly what I have stated. I hope the Senator will not interrupt what I am saying.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. PETTUS. Now, I will read this. It is exactly what I stated to the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. It is exactly what I stated.

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. FORAKER. Let us see where the difference is.

Mr. PETTUS. I decline to be interrupted. This habit of interrupting a Senator for the purpose of interruption when he is arguing a great question like this could never be done in a gentleman's parlor. Why should it be done in the Senate?

Mr. President, I stated that the bill as we passed it provided that the Adjutant-General should be a major-general. Now, what does this bill say? This is the bill as it is now pending in the House of Representatives:

That the present Adjutant-General of the Army shall during his term of office have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general in the Army of the United States.

That is all there is of it. This amendment does not say that. It does not say it at all. It says the Adjutant-General shall, and it does not say that it is limited to his term of office. It goes through all time. Mr. President, this matter has been considered very fully within the last year—

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the question now before the Senate for discussion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Two points of order, one raised by the Senator from Alabama and another raised by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ALLEN. Is the Senator from Alabama proceeding by unanimous consent or simply by the indulgence of the Chair to instruct the Chair?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes that the Senator from Alabama is instructing the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. Then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not want to discuss this subject out of order. If I am out of order, I want to quit. I propose to discuss it when I am in order.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Alabama a question?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly; if it is nothing but a question.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that I quite understand the Senator. Now, we have here a bill exactly as reported from the committee and exactly as it passed the Senate. Is the Senator willing that that shall be offered as a substitute for what I have offered?

Mr. PETTUS. How is that?

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator willing that it shall be offered as a substitute for what I have offered—the exact measure we passed?

Mr. PETTUS. I am not willing that this thing shall pass in any shape, form, or fashion, because it is a disgrace to the Army of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. That is the Senator's opinion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to decide the question of order raised.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to read the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is entirely familiar with it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make the point of order that this, if reported by a standing committee, was not referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day previous to its presentation here, and therefore on that ground it is clearly out of order. There can be no possible chance to argue that question, and I should like to have it ruled upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was in doubt in respect to the point raised by the Senator from Alabama as to whether or not this is general legislation. The Chair did not believe it was, and was willing to submit it to the Senate. Since that time the Senator from South Dakota has raised the point of order under the second section of Rule XVI, and it is said that this amendment, although authorized by the Military Affairs Committee, has never been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations at all. It is clearly out of order under that section of the rule.

Mr. SEWELL. Has the Chair taken into consideration that this has already passed the Senate in the present Congress?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No objection is made to it on that account. That is under the first section of the rule. The objection is made under the second section, that it adds a new item of appropriation and has never been submitted one day prior, or at all, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SEWELL. I trust we will now go on with the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed at the end of the bill to add the following:

That the present Adjutant-General of the Army shall during his term of office have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general in the Army of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. This amendment differs, as I understand, from the one which has just been disposed of under the rule and upon the point of order. This applies only to the present Adjutant-General, while the other, as the Senator from Alabama informed us a moment ago, applied to the office without any limitation, and therefore to any occupant, either the present or any successor of the present Adjutant-General. This is the one which was reported favorably, and which passed the Senate in the shape of a bill during the last session.

Mr. PETTUS. I raise the point of order which was raised by the Senator from South Dakota, that this amendment was not referred to the Committee on Appropriations a day before it is offered here. I also make the point of order that it does not come here with the recommendation of any committee at all at this time.

Mr. FORAKER. I think, in view of the fact that this was reported at the last session, as I stated a moment ago, by the Military Affairs Committee and then voted upon, that it is entirely pertinent and proper to offer it here as an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Ohio state to the Chair how this will avoid the second section of the same rule? It is in compliance with the first, but not with the second section.

Mr. FORAKER. I am willing to take the judgment of the Senate upon that question, and I hope it may be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. It has just been ruled out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. PETTUS and Mr. ALLEN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. There is some confusion as to how we shall vote. A vote in the affirmative sustains the point of order, and a vote in the negative has the contrary effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Those in favor will vote yea, those against nay.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). The Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] is detained from the Chamber by illness, and, as I am paired with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. As this is a parliamentary question, not a political question, I shall take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If the Senator from Maryland were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE]. I understand if he were present, he would vote "yea." I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN] is unavoidably absent and is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I do not know how my colleague would vote if present.

Mr. BACON. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. McLAURIN. I understand that votes are necessary to make a quorum, and for that purpose I break my pair and vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL. I will vote if my vote is necessary to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. HANNA. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 7; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the following amendment:

And provided further, That no franchises or concessions of any kind whatever shall be granted by the United States, or by any military or other authority whatever for which the United States is responsible, in the island of Cuba during the occupation thereof by the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, since that amendment was proposed a few days ago there has been so much in the newspapers about there being no occasion for it that I desire to read a few paragraphs from the Evening Star of February 10. It is an account of a new board that has been appointed, called the advisory board in some places and in others called the colonial board. It says:

The board appointed by the President to investigate and report upon taxation, franchises, and concessions in Cuba and Porto Rico is established in the Lemon Building. The handsomely equipped suite of rooms they now occupy on the second floor will be vacated to-day, and the board hereafter will use the third-floor suite, in which the war-investigating commission has been sitting.

So it goes on. It next describes the scope of the inquiry as covering all kinds of franchises, enumerating street railroads, electric lights, etc. I ask, in order that I may save time, that the portion I have marked may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, that will be the order.

The article referred to is as follows:

ROOMS OF THE BOARD.

The board appointed by the President to investigate and report upon taxation, franchises, and concessions in Cuba and Porto Rico is established in the Lemon building. The handsomely equipped suite of rooms they now occupy on the second floor will be vacated to-day, and the board hereafter will use the third-floor suite, in which the war-investigating commission has been sitting.

Mr. Curtis has not yet reported for duty, but his colleagues, Messrs. Kennedy and Watkins, were busy to-day with a number of clerks, classifying and filing applications for franchises and concessions and receiving personal calls in connection with these matters.

The board hopes to obtain the services of a competent Spanish-speaking clerk to act as translator, and to complete its force of clerks who will accompany the board in a few days. The start for Cuba will be made within a week or ten days.

THE SCOPE OF INQUIRY.

The scope of their inquiry comprehends all matters referred to them by the Secretary of War for investigation and recommendation. Only subjects related to civic administration will be considered, and the board will not touch upon anything relating to the military. These include questions concerning the judiciary, the assessment and collection of taxes; the granting of patents, the sale or gift of franchises, either local or interprovincial; railway grants, street-car line concessions, electric light and other municipal monopolies.

Upon all these the board will in due time report to the Secretary of War, but they have no power to do more than to formulate recommendations for the guidance of the President and Secretary of War.

PLANS OF THE BOARD.

General Kennedy, of the board, gave to a Star reporter to-day the following interview:

"At present we are called the advisory board, but I believe that in time some more suitable designation will be found. We are expecting to be joined at once by Mr. Curtis, the new appointee, and then we will organize and perfect the details of our work."

"We are hunting for a Spanish-speaking clerk to act as translator, but we find it hard to accomplish. I don't know how large a force of clerks will accompany us. The start will be made soon—within a week or ten days. We will go direct to Havana in order to avoid the sickly season. Then we will visit every port, large city, and province on the island. We believe that we will be at least a month or six weeks doing this, and afterwards the same time and care will be spent in Porto Rico. We have nothing to do with the Philippines, as the United States has not completed the occupation of those islands."

MANY APPLICATIONS FOR CONCESSIONS.

"Very many applications have been referred to us by Secretary Alger and Assistant Secretary Melklejohn, and not a few calls have been made by applicants in person. A few requests for grants of franchises and concessions are from American syndicates, but the majority are from corporations already established on the island. Nothing will be done with any of these until we have gone over the ground and carefully looked into the advantages or disadvantages of each."

Mr. HOAR. I most heartily concur with the Senator's purpose in offering the amendment. I desire to ask him what significance he puts to the phrase "for which the United States is responsible?" Would it not be well to strike out those words and say "no franchises shall be granted by the United States?"

Mr. FORAKER. Probably so; but I wanted to make it explicit, for the United States is maintaining a military occupation there now.

Mr. HOAR. It makes it less explicit with those words in. I think it would be made stronger by simply saying that no franchises whatever shall be granted by the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object to striking that out, but I say no franchise shall be granted by the United States or by any authority for which the United States is responsible, having reference to those put in authority over the provinces there.

Mr. HOAR. But suppose some court or public official should say that a franchise granted by the United States incurring no further responsibility to maintain it or to do anything about it is not a franchise for which the United States is responsible. That would be a chance to destroy almost entirely the Senator's purpose.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that an absolute statement that no franchises shall be granted clinches it. That is my proposition.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President—

Mr. FORAKER. Let me have the amendment so amended.

Mr. SEWELL. I have something to say about it.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the Senator proceeding. I wanted to amend the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I understand there have been no franchises granted. If there had been, this amendment has nothing to do on a pure and simple appropriation bill to pay the officers and men of the Army and furnish supplies. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. In answer to that—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon what ground is the point of order made? On the ground that it is not relevant?

Mr. SEWELL. On the ground that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Ohio will fix the amendment as he wants it before it is debated.

Mr. FORAKER. I agree to strike out, if I may have consent, from the amendment as I offered it the words "for which the United States is responsible." The amendment will now read:

That no franchises or concessions of any kind whatever shall be granted by the United States, or by any military or other authority whatever, in the island of Cuba during the occupation thereof by the United States.

Let it be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill insert:

And provided further, That no franchises or concessions of any kind whatever shall be granted by the United States or by any military or other authority whatever in the island of Cuba during the occupation thereof by the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SEWELL. I now object to the amendment on the ground that it has never been committed to a standing committee or reported from one of the standing committees of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. But the point of order does not apply, because the amendment does not increase the appropriation or make a new item.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a mere limitation on the military authority, for which millions of dollars are appropriated in this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of relevancy the Chair will submit to the Senate. Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The amendment seems to be in order. It is declared to be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, it seems that this amendment is based on a report published in the Star of this city.

Mr. FORAKER. And numerous other papers contain similar reports.

Mr. BURROWS. I allude only to what the Senator referred to—the Star. If I remember correctly, some time since a resolution was passed calling upon the War Department to report whether any franchises had been granted to any parties in Cuba. That report declares that none had been granted. I desire simply to state that in communication with the War Department to-day I was informed that no franchises had been granted in those islands to anybody, and more than that, that an order had been issued by the War Department that none must be granted.

Mr. MORGAN. I think this is very dangerous legislation. I ask the lawyers of this body, who are supposed to understand the meaning of legal phrases, what is a franchise? Well, a corporation is a franchise. An authority to sell whisky is a franchise. An authority to vote is a franchise. There is a vast multitude of licenses and other indulgences that are classed by the law writers as franchises.

Now, the time is rapidly approaching, I trust it is very close at hand, when the Government of the United States, represented by the President, the President exercising in Cuba and other places his military power, will be able to make a transfer of the military rule, of the dominion there, into the hands of civil power; but in order to do that it is very obvious that at some time or other there must be an ascertainment of public will in respect to the change of government from the military to the civil form, the military form being in the hands of the United States, the civil form being in abeyance at the present time.

It is intended to be ultimately vested in the people of Cuba, according to such expression as they may see proper to make in that behalf. It is therefore inevitable, under our system of procedure at least, and under all the conceptions we have of free government, that when this transfer is to take place it must be done by a plebiscite or by some form of vote, and the President of the United States, as a military commander, must, at some time or other, by some agreement or arrangement he may make with the civil authority there, say: "I will prescribe to you a form of voting. I will confer upon certain persons here the franchise to vote upon this question of the changing of civil government. I will not confer it upon women, I will not confer it upon aliens, I will not confer it upon those who have borne a bad moral character, by service in the penitentiary or otherwise, or upon persons who can not, for instance, read or write. I will prescribe the qualifications of the voters by a plebiscite that is to take this military government out of my hands and place it into the hands of the people." Now, there is a franchise. It is an express franchise, given to the individual man.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President—

Mr. MORGAN. This amendment, as we have it here now, forbids the President of the United States to do that. So I think it is a very dangerous piece of legislation.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. More than that, Mr. President, it is premature. It is unnecessary for us at this moment of time, and particularly in the agitated state of public sentiment in the island of Cuba, to commence making provisions of law which are to control those people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear the question. I can barely hear myself.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. MASON. That is all right. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I will wait until the Senator concludes then.

Mr. MORGAN. If any Senator wants to ask me a question, all right.

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask the Senator a question, if it does not interrupt him.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, what is it?

Mr. MASON. The question is simply a mere matter of practice or law. Do you state that under the resolution by which we took possession of the island of Cuba any commissioner of the United States or the United States itself can grant a perpetual franchise that will be binding upon the people of Cuba?

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all. But there are franchises which the President of the United States can confer upon them, and which nobody else can confer. This franchise includes all those privileges, rights, opportunities, or whatever they may be, that will—

Mr. MASON. As I understand the amendment, it only seeks to make the limitation up to the time we part with the island of Cuba. What objection can there be to it?

Mr. MORGAN. That is very true, but my argument refers to the time, method, and manner of parting with Cuba, the way of getting rid of it and getting this authority out of our hands, which in its character now is military, and getting it into the hands of civil power.

Mr. MASON. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, he only seeks that there shall be a limitation which shall expire with our parting with the military title of Cuba. Do you seek anything different from that?

Mr. MORGAN. I think I do. I think I see enough in the meaning of the word "franchise" to put us in a very bad position.

Mr. MASON. I simply wanted to understand the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it would put us in a very doubtful attitude on this question, and I say it is premature. We recognize the fact that in the island of Cuba there are quite a number of people who are more anxious to cut each other's throats than they are to do any benefit to mankind.

Mr. MASON. Do you mean among the major-generals or the brigadier-generals in our Army?

Mr. MORGAN. I am talking about those members who often are talking in assemblies. What is the assembly called there? I forget now.

Mr. MASON. You mean Cubans and not Americans?

Mr. MORGAN. I mean Cubans and Spaniards. I passed through this, Mr. President. It is not a strange sensation or experience, either, to me. I have seen the time when my State was required to give obedience to military rule, and that when a war was not prevalent in the United States—when it had been closed; but it was a necessary movement.

It was necessary in order to keep men from doing violence to each other. It is the hardest task we have, and about the only one we have in Cuba to-day, to prevent those men from cutting each other's throats, resulting from the difficulties that occurred during the war. It is the natural state of the human mind after a great war is over to seek vengeance, and we are there not only as peacemakers, but we are going to have peace there if we have to fight for it.

Mr. MASON. You are going to have peace if you have to fight for it?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; we are going to compel it. We do not intend to permit, and we can not decently and with self-respect permit, any of those men to cut each other's throats in that country and destroy property and the like of that while we are exercising territorial dominion there.

Now, that being so, we had better let this matter alone and let the President of the United States go on and exercise his proper power under the laws of the United States, for those are the laws that regulate his conduct there. I grant you the Constitution of the United States restrains him, because he is an officer of our Government, but the basis of legal procedure that the President of the United States is authorized to act upon in Cuba are the laws of nations, and under the laws of nations he has got the right as the Commander in Chief there of the military forces of occupation to prescribe the methods and the instrumentalities through which civil law shall be administered.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I understand the Senator from Alabama to say that the United States have military occupancy of the country.

Mr. MORGAN. We all know that.

Mr. CAFFERY. And I know you all know it. I say I understand you to say so.

Mr. MORGAN. I do say so.

Mr. CAFFERY. I want to know from the Senator whether that military occupancy gives the United States the sovereignty over the island?

Mr. MORGAN. Now we have got to the old debating-society question about what is sovereignty, how it is to be divided up, and how many different elements exist in sovereignty.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not ask about what sovereignty is, but who has the sovereignty?

Mr. MORGAN. It is the power of ruling without appeal. That is the sovereignty. That man or that body of men who have the power to rule without the right of appeal from that authority to some other power is sovereign. He may be a military sovereign or he may be a civil sovereign. The sovereignty of the United States is existent in the island of Cuba to-day, and it has a representative there in the major-general who is in command particularly; but the flag that floats there signifies the supremacy of the Government of the United States over any other government that is in Cuba, or that ever has been there.

That is our situation in regard to the matter of sovereignty. Whether we can define it or not, we have an emblem there that expresses it. That flag expresses the whole thing. Under that flag General Brooke commands in a military way, and he does what you did with us in the South. He employs the civil establishment in that country for the purpose of preserving peace, law, order, property, life, and liberty to the extent that it is granted to the people there, and it is a perfectly just thing in him to do it.

It is sanctioned by all the international law and sanctioned also by our example through many years here, while the controversy waxed so warm as that men could scarcely contain themselves when talking about it on this floor and out amongst the people. But now the sovereign power is there; I do not care whether you call it military power or civil power; it makes no difference what you call it. The right of rule without appeal is there, and that is in the hands of the United States.

Now, we want to get rid of it. We assumed it for a certain definite, fixed, and announced purpose. We have never in the slightest degree cast a suspicion upon our purpose and intention of carrying it into honest and sincere effect and operation, and the quicker we can do it the better for all concerned. But it is dangerous to do it to-day. When the assembly of Cuba makes a question with General Gomez about his receiving through the United States, if you please, $3,000,000 to be paid into the hands of the Cuban soldiery through the United States instead of receiving it directly and in virtue of their own right out of the treasury of Cuba—when they make a question of that kind with General Gomez and get into a great tumult about it, almost as bad as the French Assembly, and when things of that sort go on in Cuba, we had better take a firm stand here and not make bows and coupes to them, and say to them: "Obedience to the law is the first duty you have got to learn, and until you have done that and have accomplished it to such a satisfactory extent that we can see the life, liberty, and property of Spaniards, negroes, or anybody else reasonably safe in Cuba we are going to hold our dominion over you."

Now, I do not care about entering into definitions or distinctions or finespun theories about this business. It is the practical, everyday duty, and I want the President of the United States to have, unabridged by the action of Congress, all the power that he possesses under the laws of nations, to rule in that land until we get ready to turn the authority over to those people. I think the amendment is unfortunate in having the word "franchise" in it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, what is the necessity for this action by Congress? If I believed that there was any disposition or intention on the part of the Administration, or anybody connected with it, to issue or grant any corporate privileges in Cuba, I would vote for this amendment. But, Mr. President, I do not believe it. Everything that has been done by this Administration and by anyone connected with the Administration from the time we began military occupation in Cuba to this time disproves any insinuation that there is any such intention.

Now, Mr. President, a resolution was sent to the War Department to know whether any corporate privileges or concessions had been granted. The reply to that resolution was that there had been none. There has been an order issued by the War Department to the authorities in Cuba directing that there shall be none granted, and I think I am justified in saying that there is no intention of granting any by the President, by the Secretary of War, by the advisory board, or by any persons in authority in Cuba.

That being the case, we are asked, on the authority of an irresponsible newspaper statement, to gravely pass an act here that no one shall have authority to do that. There would be just as much propriety in putting on at the end of this bill a provision that no officer should squander any of the money which is appropriated in the bill. To pass an amendment of this sort is a direct charge or an insinuation that somebody intends to do it, and therefore I propose to vote against it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there seems to be an undue sensitiveness about this amendment, and running through all these speeches there is an intimation that something is insinuated which is of a character that will reflect upon somebody by the mere offering of it.

Mr. President, I disclaim any such intention. We have a right, it seems to me, to speak upon such a subject as this without having any improper motive attributed to us. I resent the insinuation that there is any improper motive to be attributed. As a full justification of the action of presenting the amendment I call attention again to the newspaper article that has already been put in the RECORD, and I desire to read very briefly from it.

It will show that this action is not premature, as was said by the Senator from Alabama, and it will show conclusively that those having authority with respect to Cuba have expressed an intention to grant franchises in that island. There is not any question about the truthfulness of this statement. Nobody ever denied anything contained herein. This is only one, as I said a while ago, of a number of statements and a number of interviews. What I shall read in a moment comes from an interview with the president of this advisory board. He states here all the duties of that board, and I do not know where else to learn them. You can not go to any statute and find what are the duties of that board.

There is no statute by which that board is created expressly. There is no statute defining the power of that board. It is a board appointed by the President in the exercise of the power belonging to him while a military occupation is being maintained in these various islands. It is a board not appointed by him with the advice and consent of the Senate. We know of its existence, we know of its power only as the board itself has seen fit to proclaim it. Now, here is what the president of this board says. I submit it is sufficient to show that this legislation is not premature and not without excuse, if it be at all appropriate legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the date of that article?

Mr. FORAKER. The 10th day of February. It came out in the paper just about the time, I think, that the answer was made to the resolution which was passed by the Senate asking for information on this subject. I do not remember that the answer to that resolution went any further than simply to say that no franchises have been granted heretofore. I did not know that anybody claimed that any had been.

The question is not as to the past, Mr. President, but it is as to the future. When we find those exercising authority by appointment of the President proclaiming their intention in this regard, it is time for the Senate of the United States, and the Congress of the United States, to express an opinion on the subject, if it have any opinion to express.

Here let me call attention to the fact that we have been invited by the President himself to legislate in regard to this matter. In his Boston speech he announced not only to the Congress of the United States, but to the whole country, that the responsibilities of the war were now to pass to Congress; that it was for Congress to say what should be done in those islands. He shifted from himself all responsibility in regard to them. It seems to me, therefore, if a question arise with respect to any one of those islands and we want to express a policy in regard thereto, it is certainly our right to do so without having somebody impute to us a motive that is offensive.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator so innocent that he supposes because of general declarations all of the subject of these outlying possessions are to be left to Congress, there is to be any legislation to that end? Does he not know that while that has been the general declaration, whenever any attempt is made for action on the part of Congress, it is opposed and contravened and stifled?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know to what particular attempt the Senator from Maine refers. I do know, however, that when this matter is proposed there is opposition. I do not see why there should be. But now let me read from the article.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that I am surprised he does not see the programme is the other way; that there is to be no act on the part of Congress; that Congress is to adjourn and let every attempt which has been made to make a declaration of policy by Congress be opposed and thwarted and destroyed.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not expect to have occasion to go so far as that, and I should very much regret to think that there is a disposition on the part of the Administration to prevent Congress announcing a policy with respect to these islands.

Now, Mr. President, let me not be diverted from reading here as a justification for the offering of this amendment further from the interview.

The scope of their inquiry—

Speaking of this board—

comprehends all matters referred to them by the Secretary of War for investigation and recommendation. Only subjects related to civic administration—

I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to that—

Only subjects related to civic administration will be considered, and the board will not touch upon anything relating to the military. These include questions concerning the judiciary, the assessment and collection of taxes, the granting of patents, the sale or gift of franchises, either local or inter-provincial.

Now stop and think, Mr. President, what is meant by an "inter-provincial" franchise. It means the granting of a franchise to build a railroad or some other kind of highway. I imagine, across that island; and if so, then I am opposed to the United States entering into any such business in the island of Cuba, where our occupation is to be temporary.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is not reading from his amendment, but he is reading from a newspaper.

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose I have a right to read what I see fit to read.

Mr. MORGAN. All right. But when you come to inform the Senate on the question as to what your amendment means, the newspaper article will not furnish the explanation.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I am not talking about that. I am to be the judge as to what I shall say in my remarks to the Senate. I am speaking now, not of my amendment, but I am speaking for myself; and I am undertaking to speak to the Senate upon that which moved me to offer the amendment, in answer to the claim of the Senator from Alabama that it is premature and uncalled for.

Mr. MORGAN. As to being a judge, we are all judges for that matter, and we are judging the Senator's amendment, not by a newspaper statement, but from what the Senator says.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator declined to permit me to interrupt him a moment ago unless I should confine myself to a simple inquiry. I did not want to take very much of his time, but only wanted to call attention to this, and he would not give me the opportunity, and so I want to do it now:

Local or interprovincial—

Now, listen—

railway grants, street car line concessions, electric light, and other municipal monopolies.

In other words, if that kind of a programme is to be entered upon, it means that the United States will not get out of Cuba in a hundred years.

Mr. HALE. Of course it will not.

Mr. FORAKER. And never will get out of Cuba. I hope, for one, to see the United States withdraw from that occupation and let the people of that island establish an independent government of their own, as we have promised, and I hope it can be done at no distant day.

Now, further this interview says:

At present we are called the advisory board, but I believe that in time some more suitable designation will be found.

"In time." How much time? This year or next year? This is the president of the board who speaks. Is he not one in authority?

We are expecting—

Now listen to this—

We are expecting to be joined at once by Mr. Curtis, the new appointee, and then we will organize and perfect the details of our work. We are hunting for a Spanish-speaking clerk to act as translator, but we find it hard to accomplish. I do not know how large a force of clerks will accompany us.

This is to Cuba. He made that statement before starting to Cuba:

The start will be made soon—within a week or ten days. We will go direct to Havana in order to avoid the sickly season. Then we will visit every port, large city, and province on the island.

I have read enough to show his declaration as to the power his board is to exercise. Are we not entitled, Mr. President—

Mr. MASON. What is the title of the board?

Mr. FORAKER. The "advisory board," he says they are called now, but some time in the future he hopes to get some other name which will be more suitable.

Mr. STEWART. Who is the president of the board?

Mr. FORAKER. The president of the board is Gen. Robert P. Kennedy, of Ohio, a man of intelligence, selected by the President to be the presiding officer of this board. Is he not to be presumed to understand the powers which the President wants him to exercise?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am sorry to hear the Senator from Ohio say that the president of that board is a man of intelligence after he reads that statement, if it be true that it is an interview with him.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President, I do not mean to criticize General Kennedy. I assume that he was speaking according to his instructions, and for that reason I do not think there is anything to justify what the Senator from Connecticut has said. General Kennedy certainly understands, or should understand, what he has been chosen to do.

Now, listen further as to the character of these franchises. He says:

Very many applications have been referred to us by Secretary Alger and Assistant Secretary McKeljohn, and not a few calls have been made by applicants in person. A few requests for grants of franchises and concessions are from American syndicates, but the majority are from corporations already established on the island. Nothing will be done with any of these until we have gone over the ground and carefully looked into the advantages or disadvantages of each.

There is an officer of the Government—I suppose he is an officer, and that he has taken an oath, and no doubt is drawing a salary and has all the muniments of office. There is the president of this board telling us that the board at an early day is to start to Cuba and these various islands.

I am told by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] who sits near me that the board has already gone. I do not know whether that is the case or not, but I have a right to assume, when we read this in the newspapers and see no contradiction of it, that the board is expected to exercise the character of power here described, and that the board is at an early day to set about doing it.

I desire to protest against it, and I think the effective way of protesting against it is to legislate against it; to legislate that we do not want the granting of any franchises, either interprovincial or otherwise, in the island of Cuba. We want to pacify the island, then recognize a government established by the people of that island, and then bring our troops home; and the quicker we can do it the better I think it will be for us, and the better for the island, too.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, one word further, and then I will yield with pleasure to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator from Alabama made a strong point in definition to show that the word "franchise" was so broad that it might prevent the conferring of the elective franchise. I do not know that that is contemplated. But however that may be, all the difficulties suggested by the Senator from Alabama on account of his definition of the word "franchise" can be obviated by putting one word in this amendment, as he will agree with me, and that is by saying "property franchises or concessions." I will ask consent to put in this amendment, before the word "franchises," the word "property." Then it will read "property franchises."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be modified in the manner suggested by him.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not intend to say a single word in regard to this amendment. I intended simply to vote for it; but I must decline to be put in the position in which I think the Senator from Connecticut puts those of us who support the amendment. I can not see that that amendment reflects on any human being. We are told that no franchises have been given, and none are to be given. Very well; then we are carrying out in a statute the declared policy already agreed upon.

Mr. President, it seems to me of the last importance that Congress should say by statute, and say to all the world, that while we are holding these islands by military authority, we are not going to have them exploited for commercial purposes. I do not believe in hampering the President in the slightest way, either in the military or the political department with which he is engaged.

I should object very much at this time, on our insufficient knowledge, to interfere with him; but the story has gone abroad from the interview, which has been read here, with the chairman of the advisory commission, from which it appears that men are running eagerly forward to get franchises in Cuba. If the country is still in that unsettled condition, as I believe it is, and it is necessary to maintain military rule there, it is not in a fit condition for a board or a commission or anybody else to enter upon the granting of franchises.

I want, Mr. President, above all things, that whatever islands we hold or whatever islands we part with, when we start the government of those islands we shall be free, absolutely free, from the slightest suspicion even that there is jobbery or corruption or that we are trying to get into those islands to exploit for the benefit of individuals or of corporations. It will be time enough when Congress is thoroughly informed to make suitable laws in the islands which we retain for the establishment of corporations and the granting of franchises. It is not the time to do it now.

I believe, Mr. President, that we are carrying out the policy of the Administration, that we are strengthening the hands of the Department and of the President, when we put firmly into the statute law the declaration that there shall be no granting of commercial franchises and concessions until a legally ordered government, a constitutional government, either under our auspices or the auspices of the people themselves, is established in Cuba or in any other island that has passed into our hands.

I want to see this amendment go upon the bill, because I want to say plainly to all the world and to all speculators and to all adventurers who are trying to get concessions or franchises there that that business is not going on while we hold military authority; that it is not to be done until those people have a legal, constitutional, and proper government. I think that is a just and a righteous action for the United States to take.

I object, Mr. President, to having it suggested that those of us who believe in the establishment of this policy are therefore opposing the Administration. Who is there here that says we are opposing the policy of the Administration because we forbid franchises and concessions to be granted by commissions or by the military authority?

We are told in one and the same breath that that is the precise policy of the Administration, and yet that it is a reflection upon somebody because we embodied that policy in a statute. That is just the place it ought to be, Mr. President—in a statute—so there can be no question anywhere as to the attitude of the United States—not merely as to the attitude of the Administration, but as to the attitude of Congress, which has its own responsibility in these matters, and which is just as much entitled to have its opinion on a case like this as anyone else, and it is as important to deal with that now as it is, in my judgment, to leave to the President absolute freedom in all military and political matters.

Mr. FRYE. I yielded the right of way on the conference report on the river and harbor bill in order that two bills, the deficiency and the Army appropriation bills, might be disposed of. Now, it is working along into the night, and the river and harbor conference report is a very long one. If there is any desire on the part of the Senate that the river and harbor bill shall become a law, I trust there will be no more debate on these amendments.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say only a word. It is difficult for me to see the theory upon which this amendment is either proposed or defended. Our occupation of Cuba is, of course, a temporary occupation. No one has any warrant for the assumption, I think, that it is intended to be otherwise than a temporary occupation. It is a military occupation. It is an occupation from the standpoint of duty in time of war.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] stated the law as it undoubtedly is when he said that all the power which the President of the United States has in Cuba to-day is a power which he does not derive from Congress, but which he derives from the Constitution, which declares him Commander in Chief, and his power as Commander in Chief he obtains from the laws of war.

We can not legislate for Cuba. Even if the treaty with Spain were ratified Cuba could not be legislated for by Congress. The sovereignty of Cuba is not proposed to be ceded to the United States. The only power we have there is military power, which, under the declaration of Congress, no man can or will dare to turn his back upon, nor will Congress turn its back upon it, for it would be dishonoring the military power of the United States in that island.

The President does not derive, as I said before, his power as a military commander from Congress, nor can Congress take away from him any of the powers which, as Commander in Chief under the laws of war in time of war, he is entitled to exercise. There may be franchises, I do not know but franchises essentially of a temporary kind, to be exercised under the control of the military power, which might be of interest to the health of the community.

I can imagine a variety of circumstances under which a mere temporary grant of franchise under military control ought to be granted, but I have not heard it contended here, though I suppose it will be, that it is in the power of a military commander there, or in the power of the President of the United States, as the Commander in Chief, deriving his only power in Cuba from the laws of war, to grant any property franchise which will outlive our occupation.

The President speaks for himself better than anyone else can speak for him. It is not an entirely dignified thing for Congress to gravely and deliberately legislate upon a newspaper interview. It has not been the habit of Congress; and while I do not challenge in the slightest degree the purpose of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], I do think that the adoption of this amendment casts inferentially an imputation upon the President, not from anything said in advocacy of it, but from the amendment itself.

The President has been quite careful to look after the future interests of the people of Cuba so far as franchises are concerned. There is a legislative body, so called, in Cuba, under a law of which there was an advertisement for the sale of franchises. The President stopped it. We find in an order signed by him, addressed to General Wade, under date of December 12, 1898, this language:

It is manifest that a power which has lain so long unexercised, and which it is now proposed to exercise within two days of the final evacuation of the island by all the Spanish forces, involving, as it does, the granting of franchises of enormous value, and the attempt to commit the future government of the island of Cuba to very heavy money obligations in the way of interest guaranties, can not be permitted to be exercised without impairing very seriously the interests of the people and government of the island of Cuba, for whom, at the present time, the United States stands practically in the relation of a trustee.

In that the President repudiates the idea that there is legislative power there, that there is any government there, which has the power to grant property franchises. He further says:

It can not be permitted that the persons nominally representing the remnants of Spanish government there shall in this manner sell the franchises of the country and commit the future government of the island to obligations of such importance.

So in the interest of that people he puts his foot promptly upon the attempt of an alleged local government in Cuba to complicate the future of that island, its government, its people, and its interests by the granting, during our military occupation there, of property franchises.

Mr. CAFFERY. Does not that paper say that the franchises are to be given, or to be offered, by the representatives of the Spanish Government?

Mr. SPOONER. They claimed to do that, and the President stopped it.

Mr. CAFFERY. And not by the Cuban government?

Mr. SPOONER. Not by any Cuban government or any other government. This was attempted to be done within two days of the final evacuation of Cuba by Spain, and it is hardly to be supposed that the President of the United States, caring for the interests of that people in that way, protecting them, as he properly did, against the attempt of the Spanish representatives in a so-called government, would complicate the future of the island by any improvident granting of franchises, or would allow the military commanders of the United States to do that if they had the power, which they have not.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the order issued by the President on the 22d day of December with reference to this matter? He has it in the document from which he is reading, I have no doubt.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. That certainly authorizes the municipalities to grant franchises, with the approval of the commanding officer in Cuba and the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPOONER. Not until submitted to the Secretary of War or submitted to the President.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose my friend does not claim that the President or any military commander could grant franchises which would outlive our military occupation?

Mr. TELLER. That is a very grave question. I think such franchises could outlive our military occupation. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the New Orleans case on that point.

Mr. TELLER. In that case it was held that a military commander could make a franchise without limit, if I remember.

Mr. FORAKER. I so understand.

Mr. CHILTON. The decision does not absolutely say that.

Mr. TELLER. It is not an absolutely analogous case to this on the principle laid down.

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. CHILTON. In the New Orleans case a military commander had granted a franchise for ten years, and it was held that that franchise was valid on the theory that his power was not absolutely limited to the military occupation, but that he had a right to a reasonable exercise of his power. So it was held that that was a reasonable exercise of the power at that time.

Mr. SPOONER. That was as to a part of our own country—

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that.

Mr. SPOONER. As to which this Government had a right to legislate, and over which it had jurisdiction.

Mr. CHILTON. I think we can legislate in this case so far as our military commanders are concerned.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I think the statement made by the Senator from Texas is correct, following the statement made by the Senator from Minnesota some days ago, that a franchise may be granted which extends beyond the military occupation. I will say to the Senator, with all due respect to his judgment as a lawyer, that that is the law. That is the reason for the offering of this amendment. If there was no intention to extend any franchise beyond our military occupation, what objection can there be to the amendment?

The junior Senator from Massachusetts has stated it correctly. What sense is there, what common honesty is there, in our people occupying the island of Cuba and selling franchises, according to the statement made by Mr. Kennedy, the chairman of this special commission, to pass upon the street car and electric lights, etc.? If it is not the intention, he can not object; if it is the intention, we ought to object.

I am very much pleased with the statement by the junior Senator from Massachusetts that the passage of this resolution is not intended to offend, and can not offend, the President of the United States. One of the favorite arguments of distinguished gentlemen on this floor when they want to defeat a bill is to say: "If you pass this bill, you offend the President;" and the next Senator who speaks will say: "If you defeat this bill, you offend the President."

Mr. SPOONER. I have not said that.

Mr. MASON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had not referred to the Senator from Wisconsin, except when I replied to his suggestion as a lawyer.

I say this is the law, and I say I believe you will admit it to be the law that, following the decision in the New Orleans case referred to by the Senator from Texas a moment ago and by the Senator from Minnesota a few days ago—the decision of our own courts—that franchises granted during military occupation would be continuing franchises.

Mr. President, I am for this amendment. I had not intended to take a moment of the time of this body at this late hour. A Senator near me suggests that he wishes that I would not. I will say to him I am sorry I have to do so. I am exceedingly sorry at this hour that we have to indulge in law lectures. I say now I am for the amendment because we have no right to traffic in the franchises of those people.

The streets of their cities, as well as the rivers and hills of their country, belong to them, and we have no right to grant franchises for street cars or railroads, steam or electric, no right to grant franchises for gas companies, no right to traffic in the future of those people; but, following the suggestion of the junior Senator from Massachusetts, we ought to offer them a free country, including their soil, and including everything that God Almighty has left within their reach, and including franchises to use their streets, the right to condemn, the right to use and exercise the law of condemnation.

Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss this amendment further, unless it becomes absolutely necessary, in order to enlighten those people who are so very anxious to leave these questions to Mr. Kennedy and his board, the appointing of which did not excite the most profound confidence among the people. There was no occasion for the appointment.

General Alger had conducted his office like an honest man; and when the clouds shall have rolled away, it will be shown to the people of this country that he has been clean handed, not only in the administration of the War Department, but that he has never attempted to grant franchises, and he has never, in his Department, attempted to impose anything improper on the people in Cuba. When this distinguished gentleman, Mr. Kennedy, states that franchises are to be granted for street cars and steam-car lines and lines of electric cars he offends the good judgment and common sense, not only of the Administration, but of the people of this country.

Mr. SEWELL. I hope we shall have an opportunity of passing the Army bill in the course of the next few hours.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is before the Senate. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is paired with my colleague [Mr. CLAY], that we exchange our pairs, so that he and I may vote.

Mr. LODGE. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. BACON. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague is absent on account of illness. He is generally paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent from the Chamber. I therefore withhold my vote. Were he present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). The pair I have already announced, my regular pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN], still continues, but I have a special agreement with him that I may vote on this question. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I do not know that I am at liberty to vote in his absence. If any gentleman can tell me, one of his neighbors, how he would vote, I shall be glad to know. If not, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is generally paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who votes "yea," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea" if present. I transfer my pair and will vote. I vote "yea." I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SULLIVAN], who is unavoidably absent, would, if present, vote "yea." He releases his pair.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY. I am informed that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], if present would vote "yea." I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK. I am informed that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], if present, would vote "yea." I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). Since announcing the transfer of my pair, my colleague has voted. Therefore I will have to withdraw my vote, the junior Senator from Rhode Island not being thus protected.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber, and I was requested to announce that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 11; as follows:

So the amendment proposed by Mr. FORAKER was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to expend $90,000 in constructing buildings of brick or stone for a permanent post at Fort Meade, S. Dak., said post when completed to have a capacity for one regiment of cavalry.

Mr. SEWELL. I object to that. It is not brought properly before the Senate. It does not come from any committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Does the Senator from New Jersey make the point of order?

Mr. SEWELL. I do.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This was introduced and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but not reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 4, on page 29, it is proposed to insert:

The President is authorized to appoint four brigadier-generals in the Regular Army in addition to those now authorized by law, each of said offices to cease and terminate as they become vacant.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment upon assurances from the highest authority—

Mr. HALE. It is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SEWELL. Under ordinary circumstances I would not object to it, but—

Mr. MORGAN. Let me finish my remarks.

Mr. SEWELL. But I do not want to load this bill down. There is no estimate for it nor is there a recommendation for it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the floor.

Mr. SEWELL. It has not been to any committee, and therefore I will have to make the point of order on it.

Mr. MORGAN. The point of order is not well taken. From line 17 down, on page 28, down to line 4 on page 29, there is new and general legislation in this bill. It is very true that that new and general legislation came over from the House of Representatives, but the rules of the Senate protect us against a suggestion of the House as much as they do from a suggestion made by a Senator or a committee in regard to new legislation. Our rule is not worth anything at all if the House can violate it at its pleasure or if the Committee on Appropriations can violate it at its pleasure. The rule must be just as good for one man and one committee as for another.

Now, here is new legislation upon this bill and general legislation, and I propose my amendment as an amendment to that new and general legislation. If that stays in the bill, then my amendment is in order, because it is an amendment offered to a proposition that is new and general. It is a phase of the question which is not usually made here. We bow in submissive obedience to the will of the House, whenever they choose to put on anything that is now or general in legislation, and because they have put it there we even deny ourselves the right to amend it.

Now, no proposition can come here from the House of Representatives that is not amendable, and the objection made here that this is new and general legislation is not well taken. There might be an objection, perhaps, on the ground of its increasing the expenditures of the Government, but this is a case where, I think—in fact, I know, if I know anything of the sort or can know anything of the sort—that the four brigadier-generals are just as necessary to the Army of the United States, in its present condition and in the condition in which it is left by the legislation of this session of Congress, as the additional regiments are.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will say that in the organization of the Army there are six brigadier-generals allowed for the regular establishment, three major-generals, and any number of brigadier-generals and major-generals of volunteer forces that the President may direct, limited only to 4,000 to a brigadier-general and 12,000 to a major-general.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the question comes down to this, whether we can legislate to put any brigadiers in the volunteer service and can not legislate to put them into the regular service.

Mr. SEWELL. That is the law on which this bill is drafted and supported. Now, if you can add four brigadier-generals in the regular establishment, you can add a dozen major-generals, or anything else you please. You have the power to do it if both Houses will vote for it.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that there is any distinction in the law between the regular and volunteer service—none at all. We certainly have reduced the brigadier-generals in the Army as now organized, both regular and volunteer, to such a proportion that the Army is not safe; it will not have the proper command.

I think if these four brigadier-generals were put into this bill it would be a very happy thing for this country.

I can conceive, I think, the gentlemen to whom these honors would fall and upon whom these duties would devolve, and in that conception I would have more of the real, genuine, honest brotherhood in this country than I can find in any other provision that can be put on any statute.

We have started out very well, and we have got to a point now where every man North, South, East, and West is equally concerned in the honor which has been won by men who were in the Confederate army and by men who were in the Union Army alike, and there has been established in this country a substantial, genuine, honest, practical brotherhood of men which did not exist one year ago. Whenever we can break down those barriers, when we can get the debris of the past out of our pathway, we shall have a very much higher and stronger movement than we have ever had before. I do not think the Senate ought to make very sharp points upon a great proposition like this.

I do not feel at liberty to speak about this matter as I would under different circumstances. I am not a representative of the President of the United States, or his Administration, or his party. As a Democrat I antagonize every inch of ground he stands on, but I have very great respect for what I conceive to be, and what I am well informed are, his wishes—that this army shall be so increased in the particular I have mentioned in the amendment, and that he shall have the opportunity of continuing that good work which has brought about so much of respect and confidence between the people of the different sections of this country.

All I can do is to lay it before the Senate and let the Chair rule upon the question raised by the Senator from New Jersey in charge of the bill as to whether the amendment is in order. I suppose if it is in order it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GEAR. At the end of line 16, on page 23, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after line 16, on page 23, the following:

That the Secretary of War is authorized to accept, on behalf of the Government, for military purposes, 400 acres of land within 5 miles of the corporate limits of Des Moines, Iowa, provided in his judgment it is suitable for an army post.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know whether the Senator in charge of the bill accepts the amendment. I just offered the following amendment, and the point of order was raised against it.

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to expend $60,000 in constructing buildings of brick or stone for a permanent post at Fort Meade, S. Dak., said post, when completed, to have a capacity for one regiment of cavalry.

Mr. SEWELL. I objected to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota because it required an expenditure of money. I do not object to this amendment, because it applies to a free gift to the Government.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is not legislation? It is not amenable to the rules?

Mr. SEWELL. It is a free gift to the Government.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

That the act of January 12, 1899, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to authorize the payment to the legal heirs or representatives of the officers and enlisted men who died or were killed or who may die in the service the extra pay provided for in that act for officers and enlisted men who have been or are mustered out.

Mr. SEWELL. Let it be read again. I wish to hear it.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator proposing the amendment if that is necessary under the law, and just what is sought to be done. I ask for information only.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think it is necessary in order to put the relatives of those whose lives have been sacrificed in this war on a par with those who have returned home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900."

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I submit the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, and after having read the Nicaragua Canal amendment, inserted as section 3,

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who has the bill in charge, to state very briefly what that proposition is. It is difficult to understand it in the way it is read. I wish to know whether the President is authorized to construct the canal in any way without first reporting back to Congress.

Mr. FRYE. Not at all. If the amendment had been read through the Senator would have seen. It was not read through.

Mr. TELLER. I thought it had been read.

Mr. FRYE. No; it was not read through.

The Secretary read the proposed sections 4 and 5 of the Nicaragua Canal amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask—

Mr. FRYE. There is one more section.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On this same subject?

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

The Secretary read the proposed section 6 of the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. That is all of it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Do I understand that the President is limited in his authority to such investigations as will lead to the construction and ownership of the canal by the United States alone? That seems to be the language of the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. That is the language of the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is the purpose?

Mr. FRYE. Ownership.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is the purpose of it?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; that is what it is.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, and was interrupted by Mr. MILLS. I should like to have some explanation of what is stricken out. We can not understand anything about the bill the way the report is being read.

Mr. FRYE. The last dozen leaves have been simply a renumbering of the sections made necessary by changes in the bill—section 11 changed to 13, and 9 to 14, and so on. It has nothing to do with the bill other than that.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 23, 27, 28, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 40, 43, 45, 48, 53, 55, 72, 76, 77, 79, 81, 118, 121, 131, 133, 138, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 158, 159, 161, 162, 166, 172, 173, 174, 175, 177, 181, 197, 198, 200, 201, 203, 208, 209, 212, 213, 218, 219, 232, 247, 248, 249, 290, 303.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair)
The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. FRYE. I do not wish to make any statement about the bill, because I do not wish to take the time of the Senate, but I will try to answer any question that any Senator may desire to ask me in relation to it.

Mr. QUAY. I would be glad if the Senator from Maine would inform me what disposition was made of the project for the deepening and improvement of Delaware River to a channel of 30 feet.

Mr. FRYE. The project to obtain 30 feet was recognized; an appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars was made; and a continuing contract was provided for to a limited amount, not to the full amount.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that we pursue the usual course, which is the most convenient one, that the report be read through without interruption, and then if any Senator desires information—

Mr. FRYE. It has been read through, as I understand it.

Mr. HOAR. I thought it had not been completed.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to inquire what disposition was made of amendment 215, and likewise amendment 216.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator state what they are?—generally, I mean.

Mr. CARTER. They relate to the landing at Judith and the repair of the levee at Fort Benton, in Montana—Missouri River improvements.

Mr. FRYE. There was no change made at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Secretary to turn to page 54 and inform me as to the amendments there. I would ask the chairman, but he can not remember, of course, all these little items. There are several amendments, 152, 153, 154, and so on.

Mr. FRYE. My recollection is that there was not any change made in the bill as to those items.

Mr. ELKINS. Those are in.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think in any North Carolina item any change was made whatever in the bill as it passed the Senate. They are very small amounts.

Mr. BUTLER. They are very small amounts. We were very modest.

Mr. FRYE. Unusually modest for North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Unusually modest in comparison with our needs and what we were justly entitled to. Has the Secretary turned to the items?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the House receded from its disagreement to all those items.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the Secretary to look especially at amendment 187 and see if that is changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the House conferees receded. That item stands in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the chairman for standing by us in our modesty.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to inquire what disposition was made of amendments 218 and 219, the first relating to the construction of certain reservoirs in the State of Wyoming, and the second relative to the making of certain surveys, having in contemplation the further prosecution of work.

Mr. FRYE. Both those amendments were disagreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, realizing the enormous burden of labor the chairman of this committee and those associated with him upon the committee have contributed to the perfection of this bill, I undertake at this late hour of the last day of the session with great reluctance to challenge the attention of the Senate for any time at all upon this report. Only a deep sense of duty to the section of country from whence I come constrains me to again direct attention to the necessity for serious consideration of this question of storage reservoirs.

What is the question here presented, Mr. President? From the acquisition of the Louisiana Territory, or soon thereafter, the United States have steadily contributed to the building up of mud banks upon the Lower Mississippi River for the purpose of preventing the inundation of the surrounding country by the constantly recurring floods. Experience has shown that these mud banks or dikes are but as ropes of sand to stay the irresistible flow of the torrent of waters poured into the lower valley each flood season. Sometimes, indeed, it occurs that the country is shocked at the appalling loss of life and destruction of property occurring in the Lower Mississippi Valley by reason of the freshets that spread out to the foothills from the banks of the river. It would surpass the comprehension of anyone in this presence to-night to fairly attempt to understand the enormous amount of money that has been invested from the beginning in the building of dikes or levees along the banks of the Mississippi River.

Some years ago, inspired by a wise policy, I believe, and clearly within the limits of constitutional authority, certain lakes or reservoirs, if you please, were created at the head waters of the river. The constitutional fiction was met upon the theory that the reservoirs constructed in the vicinity of Lake Itasca, in the State of Minnesota, would hold up the waters during the season of freshet and heavy rainfall and that in the dry season of the year those waters might work down into the channel of the stream and furnish a steady flow of water for the purposes of navigation.

The building of the reservoirs in the State of Minnesota was constitutional, and yet, Mr. President, the impounding of waters within that State was but the submerging of a succession of swamps. The impounding of water in that section of the country was like carrying coal to Newcastle, according to the ancient suggestion. The water was not needed there. It was supposed to be needed during the dry spell in the river below.

Now, after the lapse of some years, invoking this same principle of constitutional authority, we come into the Senate and ask that reservoirs be built at the head waters of streams in the arid region of the United States where the water will constitute, when impounded, a benediction to all the country round about, where the water thus impounded, while being restrained as a destructive agent from the Lower Mississippi Valley, may be utilized to make the desert blossom as the rose.

It is suggested, in reply to this seemingly just and proper application of a principle heretofore applied, that the land surrounding the reservoirs in the arid region might possibly be benefited by the presence of the impounded water which could be allowed to percolate out through the soil, quicken it into life and activity, and cause it to produce crops.

Mr. President, there is not a constitutional objection that can be urged to the proposition presented in these reservoir amendments which could not with equal force have been urged against the construction of reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi. So the constitutional aspects of the case may be for once and all set aside.

What, then, is the reason to be urged, or suggested, or advanced in any form for denying to the States in the Rocky Mountain country the pittance of an appropriation provided for in these two amendments, the whole sum not exceeding $150,000? To be entirely frank about it, the opposition is based upon the theory that this appropriation is but the entering wedge to a general policy. I would spurn the advocacy of these amendments for the mere sake of getting an unnecessary appropriation for my section of the country for $150,000 or any other sum. It is true that this is the inception of a policy which we ask Congress to approve; and it is for that reason that we insist upon its consideration now.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact, that great region of country, the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, extending from the Canadian line to the Mexican border, little known and little understood to-day by a majority of our people, is destined within the experience of men here present to-night to be relied upon to furnish the bread for the American people, to say nothing about the export of flour and wheat.

There is a great national proposition involved here in the line of policy. Senators will recall that the wheat-producing properties of the soil of all the older States have steadily become exhausted. New England no longer pretends to be a wheat-producing country. Pennsylvania has ceased to be a factor in the market. The soil of Ohio has been seeded down to grass. Indiana produces about 8 bushels per acre on the average; Illinois about 10. The production per acre in Iowa has steadily decreased. The production in Minnesota, with the far-famed valley of the Red River of the North as a part of its soil, has been reduced to about an average of 12 bushels per acre of wheat. How long will it be, Mr. President, with this continuous exhaustion of the wheat-producing properties of the soil of the older States, until we may be compelled to go to the irrigated fields of India to get the bread to feed our people?

When you reach the arid region you find by the concurrent testimony of all persons of experience, supplemented by the information collected by the Census Bureau, that the average yield of wheat—a failure never occurs—amounts to from 30 to 50 bushels per acre. I know of patches of ground in the State of Montana upon which wheat has been steadily grown for the last fifteen years without alteration of crop, and each and every year the crop has yielded over 30 bushels per acre.

Viewed from the standpoint of the people concerned in feeding themselves, it is a matter of supreme moment for Congress to look to some scheme for the reclamation of our arid lands.

England, Mr. President, wise and long-sighted in policy, has steadily progressed in reclaiming the arid plains of India, until to-day the Liverpool market in wheat is contested by the people of India with the people of the United States. The India wheat is to-day coming into the Liverpool market from a soil that twenty-five years ago was as barren as the desert of Sahara. If it is a wise policy upon the part of Great Britain to add to the wealth of the nation, to supply the bread needed by the people by reclaiming the arid lands of far-off India, may it not be wise for us to give timely attention to the great national resource upon which must depend our living in the future?

Mr. President, the frontier has disappeared in the United States. Our people are talking of going beyond the borders of the mainland in quest of homes and opportunities. This need not be so if this Government, utilizing the forces at its command, will but render it possible for the citizens of Connecticut and Massachusetts and Maine and all the older States who seek homes for themselves to go out upon the great slopes of the Rocky Mountains, and there make homes on which they can rear their families, upon which they can raise the subsistence which will finally be crystallized into the schoolhouse, the church, the well-kept highway, and all the agencies of a well and splendidly ordered community.

Mr. President, why should this departure not be made? I venture to say that there is not in the Chamber to-night, nor, going beyond that, in the capital of the country, an individual who can, in the face of the construction of reservoirs in Minnesota, urge a constitutional objection to the proposition. No one will for five minutes undertake to argue against this proposed appropriation upon the merits. The question is in all its aspects easily understood. During certain seasons of the year the rapidly melting snows on the mountains rush down in torrents to the valleys below, swelling the streams, and the contributions of all these streams will finally result in the inundation of the Lower Mississippi.

We propose now, Mr. President, to inaugurate a policy whereby this mountain torrent will be stayed on its course; that its mission of destruction shall be turned into a mission of mercy; that the force which would in the Lower Mississippi destroy will be chained and compelled to become a producing factor in Wyoming, Montana, the Dakotas, and all the States along the line of each and every stream.

If in the end it requires $50,000,000 to complete the contemplated system, well and good. The Government owns the major portion of the land to be reclaimed by the impounded water. Land that to-day is valueless will, if we may judge of the future by the past, reach a market value of from ten to one hundred dollars per acre. Judged in the light of a governmental speculation, if you please, this is a most enticing field.

I think this conference committee may well return to deliberate, and, after mature deliberation, return to this Chamber with these two amendments unchanged, unimpaired, and left in full force to go upon the statute books of the country. We ask nothing more than this at this time. Of the thirty-odd million dollars to be carried from the Treasury through this bill, the great empire extending from Canada to Mexico and from the Missouri to the Sierra Nevada Mountains, is here like a pauper seeking a pittance of a hundred and fifty thousand dollars to prosecute surveys and begin the construction of the proposed system of storage reservoirs, and this conference report strikes out the pittance embraced in the amendments.

The position, Mr. President, is in itself humiliating. I observe in the bill an appropriation for a stream called Pull-and-be-Damned [laughter], and another appropriation made for Old Man's Creek. The exact amount embraced in these respective appropriations I do not know, nor do I care to recall. No one pretends that any public good will result from such appropriations.

With all the questionable items this bill contains, I am not prepared to see it pass with the honorable, just, meritorious, and constitutional proposition presented by these amendments stricken out. For the time being, I yield the floor to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

Mr. MANTLE. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. MANTLE. This is a very important matter, and I think we ought to have a quorum of the Senate present to hear the statements made regarding it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

GEORGE L. SHOUP,
THOMAS H. CARTER,
S. R. MALLORY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

V. WARNER,
HENRY R. GIBSON,
JOHN W. MADDOX,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MILLS. Some one ought to explain the report. The Senate can arrive at no knowledge of the changes which have been made from the reading of that paper. There are extensive changes which have been made from one end of the bill to the other, and I think there ought to be some explanation of them. I know nothing about them.

Mr. FRYE. If there is to be any discussion, I shall have to object.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think the Senator from Maine will undertake to do that. This is the criminal code for Alaska. I was present the other evening when it was read through from beginning to end, and I am as diligent as anybody when I apply my mind to a legal document. I assure the Senator there is nothing in it that is objectionable. It has been taken largely from the criminal code of Oregon, and it contains no provision to which any Senator, I think, ought to object. It has been canvassed over and over again by very able Senators. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. ROSS], a new Senator in this body, has been over it, I think, from beginning to end. It would be a great pity, Mr. President, if this code were not enacted into law at this session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not know just how this conference report has been made as to language, but I know that most conference reports start out with the statement that "after full and free conference," and then the report goes on to relate what items have been agreed to and what have been disagreed to.

NOT A FULL AND FREE CONFERENCE.

Without reflecting in the slightest manner upon any Senator serving on the conference committee, for I have confidence in everyone, I yet believe that practically this bill has not been in fair and free conference. I do not know that I understand the meaning of the words "conference," "conferees," etc., but I have supposed that when gentlemen are selected to assemble at some given point and deliberate upon a subject, they are to open up all the disputed points and consider them fully and fairly and freely; that to confer was to consider in amity and without prejudgment as to any single item; that no previous prejudice would be allowed to enter and no prejudiced conferee allowed to sit as a juror in a case when his prejudice unfits him.

I am informed that a part of this conference committee refused to even consider some of the river and harbor bill amendments. I have tried to find upon what grounds they refused the consideration of these particular amendments which have been called in question and discussed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], and which refer to the building of certain reservoirs and making preliminary surveys of sites for others, as follows:

Reservoirs at the head waters of the Missouri River: For construction along Piney Creek, Wyoming, of three reservoirs, in accordance with the recommendations submitted in House Document No. 141, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such work and materials as may be necessary for the completion of such reservoirs, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $155,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That these reservoirs shall be emptied, as near as may be, each year between June 30 and September 30, the discharge of stored water to be under the direction of the State engineer or other State officer especially designated for the purpose by the State wherein such reservoirs are located.

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary surveys or examinations to be made of one or more reservoir sites in each arid and semi-arid State, and report upon the cost, practicability, and desirability of constructing such reservoirs and other works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods, overflows, and erosion of river banks and levees, and for the reinforcement of the flow of streams and raising the water line therein during drought and low water, and to utilize the water so stored where practicable for irrigation, mining, or domestic purposes while it is in transit to replenish the streams during the season of low water, and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section.

It is said that certain conferees from another place maintain that these amendments have no proper place on the river and harbor bill, but we have no arguments, we have no facts submitted, we have nothing except the ipsi dixit of three men, or really of one man, to sustain the claim.

Mr. President, I have proceeded heretofore, in the interest and efforts I have given the matter, upon the theory that the subject was germane to the river and harbor bill, and I believe so yet. If there is any other side to the case, I am ready even now to hear it and be governed by it, and I challenge those who oppose the amendments adopted by the Senate and rejected by the House to show why they are not germane. Certainly money has been appropriated heretofore for the building of reservoirs in the interest of navigation, etc., and that is what one of these amendments calls for. Certainly money has been appropriated heretofore for examinations. That is what the other one of these amendments refers to.

IT IS GERMANE.

We have the Government reports, official documents, which show that investigations have heretofore been made, and that following those investigations appropriations have been made for the avowed purpose of building reservoirs to raise the water at low tide in the interest of navigation, and that such reservoirs were accordingly built.

We know that river and harbor bills, from time immemorial, or ever since they have become a factor in our legislation, have carried money for the repression of floods, money for dams, levees, dikes, and works of various kinds to confine within certain safe limits the floods of various rivers. So I am unable to see, and I have heard no statement which convinces me, that this is not absolutely germane and properly introduced on a river and harbor bill.

As evidence of this I quote as follows from the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, part 2, 1892:

AS TO LOW WATER.

The low water of 1891 was a remarkable one, lower than that of 1864 (which was the lowest on record prior to 1891). (Page 1760.)

As regards the low water of 1864, it may be said navigation was almost wholly suspended, the very lightest boats being unable to reach St. Paul. In 1877 the situation was nearly as bad, there being but very few boats which tried to run. (Page 1760.)

On account of very low water prevalent during a great part of the season the amount of business done by the raft boats was much curtailed, as also the rafting of logs from Minneapolis down the river. (Page 1762.)

AS TO CANALS.

Operating and care of Des Moines Rapids Canal for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892.—The canal was open to navigation 234 days and closed 132 days. Navigation closed November 20, 1891, and opened April 1, 1892, though a few boats passed through the canal after and before these dates during the period that the canal was formerly closed to navigation.

Extremes of low and high water have occurred during the fiscal year. From July 1, 1891, to the close of navigation, one long-continued low-water period prevailed, the river reaching, on October 1, 1891, the unprecedented low stage of 0.25 foot below the low water of 1864, the lowest previously recorded stage during the season of navigation and when not influenced by ice gorges. In 1892 the canal opened with a stage at the lower lock of 4.9 feet above low water of 1864, and the river continued to rise, the stage on June 30, 1892, being 12.3 feet above low water of 1864, this stage being only 1.7 feet and 0.3 foot less than the highest stages in 1851 and 1888, respectively. (Page 1777.)

Business of the canal.—Low water during the first half of the fiscal year caused all traffic to pass through the canal. During most of the latter half of the fiscal year the water was so high that hardly any boats came through the canal. (Page 1779.)

SNAGS AND WING DAMS.

In the report of February 8, 1875, upon part of the Mississippi routes to the seaboard is a plan of improvement to afford 3 to 5 feet depth in the canal by removing snags, bowlders, and bars, and confining the low-water discharge to widths practicable for navigation by means of wing dams where necessary. In 1889 the estimate was increased. (Page 1816.)

MISSISSIPPI RIVER RESERVOIRS.

The three completed reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River above Grand Rapids may be relied upon henceforth to provide sufficient water and depth for steamboats on the river at and above Brainerd. (Page 1817.)

The reservoir project is the outcome of surveys and examinations in 1869, 1874, 1878, and 1879, the results of which are published in appendixes to various annual reports of the Chief of Engineers. (Page 1818.)

From the results of the surveys and examinations just noted and further examinations in 1880, the first cost of constructing 41 reservoir dams in Minnesota and Wisconsin was placed at $1,800,083, exclusive of that of land damages, which could not be given in advance. (See page 1871, Appendix W, to Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1881.)

The project for this improvement was inaugurated in 1880 by an appropriation for the construction of a reservoir dam at Lake Winnibigoshish, made by act of Congress approved June 14 that year. For the reasons given in the Annual Report for 1886 the work of construction was commenced and has been continued in Minnesota.

The project has for its object the construction and maintenance of reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River, in the State of Minnesota, for the purpose of collecting the surplus water, principally from the precipitation of winter, spring, and early summer, to be systematically released so as to benefit navigation upon the Mississippi River below the dams and as far down as Lake Pepin. Reduction of heights of floods in localities immediately below the dams is expected to obtain to some extent, but control of extended floods or freshets is not expected.

There are four completed reservoirs, viz:

At Lake Winnibigoshish, completed in 1883-84; capacity, 45,800,000,000 cubic feet.

At Leech Lake, completed in 1884; capacity, 30,000,000,000 cubic feet.

At Pokegama Falls, completed in 1884, lift of dam increased in 1889; capacity, 4,700,000,000 cubic feet.

At Pine River, completed in 1886; capacity, 7,500,000,000 cubic feet.

Rules and regulations to control the use and administration of the reservoirs were formulated and approved by the Secretary of War February 21, 1889, as authorized by the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888. Gaugings of the Mississippi River at St. Paul, to determine the effect of reservoir water, have been made to a limited extent during the past three years. They form the subject of a separate report.

During May and June, 1891, men and materials for constructing the Sandy Lake Dam were assembled. (Pages 1818-1819.)

The beneficial effects resulting in previous years from the operation of the completed reservoirs have been maintained. (Page 1822.)

The benefit of the reservoir volume extended over some 425 [390] miles of river below Grand Rapids, the rapids being 388 [353] miles, by river, above St. Paul. Of the 425 [390] miles 200 [165] are navigated by steamers.

The increase in channel depth at St. Paul due to the release of the stored-up water undoubtedly averaged for the eighty-six days 1 foot to 1½ feet. (See Appendix Z, Annual Report, 1888.)

The increase in channel depth at St. Paul due to the reservoir water undoubtedly averaged 1 foot during the low-water season of 1888. (See Appendix B B, Annual Report, 1889.)

The effect of the reservoirs on the navigable depth of water in the channel of the Mississippi River above the Falls of St. Anthony is not as conclusively shown as it could be. A series of hydrological and meteorological observations on the Mississippi and the principal tributaries above St. Paul, extending over a period of several years, would furnish information not only of great practical value in the operation of the reservoirs, but would also be of scientific value in connection with the loss of river water by evaporation and filtration, and in the progression (and even dispersion) of a flood wave. A commencement in this direction has been made by the provision for gaugings at or near St. Paul, but the money available for the purpose is inadequate for thorough work, and is only applicable near St. Paul. It is estimated that the sum of $15,000 per annum can be profitably expended in hydrological and meteorological investigations during a period of four years. (Page 1823.)

It is unfortunate for the reservoir question that so little of the river above St. Paul is navigable, for on that portion, naturally, the greatest effect of the water from the reservoirs has been exhibited. At Grand Rapids, in 1889, during the discharge there was a rise of 5.2 feet, and at Aitkin, 165 miles below, a rise of 3 feet and a proportional rise to the Falls of St. Anthony. This effect, as may be noticed on the gauge sheet, was continued during the entire discharge. Of this portion of the river, only 165 miles is at present operated on by steamboats, and consequently the resulting benefits have not been appreciated to the full extent.

The results from the reservoirs may not seem very large, but when it is considered that what has been done has been accomplished by the construction of only four reservoir dams, and that storage operations have so far been carried on through four years of unusually low water, the results are encouraging, if not phenomenal.

The greatest accumulation at any one time was about 35,000,000,000 cubic feet in 1885; with that accumulation the two main reservoirs were just about half full. With the reservoirs full (and there is no reason to suppose but that they can be easily filled when the rainfall gets back to its normal condition), there is every reason to believe that everything that has been claimed for the system, as far as built, will be realized.

ONE REASON WHY SOME OPPOSE.

In Wisconsin the lumbermen were at first very enthusiastic on the question of Government reservoirs; but of late years they have, however, obtained control of most of the important streams, and it is believed that, recognizing the fact that their interests can not help being more or less antagonized by the retention of water for the benefit of navigation, they are now to a great extent opposed to their construction. In all probability this opposition is the cause of the work not having been started in that State. (Page 1830.)

Reservoirs have been heretofore provided for in river and harbor appropriation bills.

GAUGING MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT OR NEAR ST. PAUL, MINN.

The Board of Engineers, to whom was referred the project for the application of $37,000, appropriated by the river and harbor act of August 5, 1889, for reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River, recommended in their report, dated May 24, 1897: "That such gaugings be made at or near St. Paul, during the annual operation of the reservoirs as shall determine accurately the discharge at that point at critical periods." (Page 1692, Annual Report Chief of Engineers, 1887.) (Page 1849.)

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
St. Paul, Minn., February 24, 1891.

GENERAL: In compliance with the act of Congress, September 19, 1890, I have the honor to report the result of a preliminary examination of "Red River and tributaries above Fergus Falls and Crookston and of Big Stone Lake, with a view to improving navigation thereon by the erection of suitable dams, or by such other means as may be deemed best, together with an estimate of cost."

I interpret the foregoing as calling for an investigation of the question of improving the Red River of the North by means of reservoirs at Big Stone Lake, and on the Otter Tail and Red Lake rivers, and have made the examination accordingly. (Page 1855.)

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. JONES,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

(Through Col. O. M. Poe, Corps of Engineers, division engineer, north west division.)

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
St. Paul, Minn., January 11, 1892.

GENERAL: I have the honor to make the following report upon the survey of Red River and tributaries above Fergus Falls and Crookston, and of Big Stone Lake, with a view to improving navigation thereon by the erection of suitable dams, or by such other means as may be deemed best, together with an estimate of cost.

SURVEY AND PROJECT.

Its object was to gather data from which I might determine whether sufficient watersheds and holding ground were available to afford water enough during low stages of the Red River of the North to make the said river navigable without other works for improvement. For this purpose two localities for holding large bodies of water conspicuously offered themselves: (1) Red Lake, (2) Lake Traverse. (Page 1863.)

It is thus reasonable to expect that the two reservoirs above described will furnish sufficient water to render the Red River continuously navigable during the whole open season from the Rabbit River dam to Lake Winnipeg. And, further, by placing a lock in the Rabbit River dam navigation would be extended to the head of Lake Traverse; and, still further, measurements taken by Mr. Davenport in 1882 show that Big Stone Lake is only 7 feet below the level of Lake Traverse. Hence, if we place a dam across the outlet of the former and cut a short canal between the two, navigation would be extended to the foot of Big Stone Lake, thus creating a water transportation line 615 miles in extent, without counting Lake Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan River.

It is probable that the creation of these two reservoirs would relieve the Red River Valley from a considerable portion of the effects of floods.

There is still another aspect to this matter. The stored-up waters in Red Lake distributed uniformly during the open season through Red Lake River would render it navigable for small craft. (Page 1871.)

That is to say, something like 1,000 miles of transportation line would be created, at a cost not exceeding $1,000 per mile. (Page 1873.)

During the year 1891, when the Mississippi River fell to a zero stage at points just below the influence of the reservoirs on its head waters, these reservoirs maintained a stage of about 1.5 at St. Paul. (Page 1893.)

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. A. JONES,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

EFFECT OF THE RESERVOIR WATER.

The Board of Engineers, in their report dated May 24, 1887, and printed on pages 1661-1698, Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers, 1887, express this opinion:

"As far down as the mouth of the first considerable tributary, the St. Croix, it is therefore not unreasonable to suppose that navigation may be benefited nearly in proportion to the effect upon the St. Paul gauge, i. e., from 1 foot to 18 inches of low-water stages.

"The two plates published opposite page 2305, Annual Report 1895, and the plate accompanying this year's report upon gauging the Mississippi River at or near St. Paul, Minn., show the dates for releasing water and the effect of the reservoir water upon the Mississippi River at St. Paul during the low-water periods of the years 1893-1895. The three records indicate that a rise in the river at St. Paul commences in seven or eight days following the release of water from the distributing reservoir at Pokegama Falls, and in about five days thereafter the full effect is felt. The mean time is therefore ten days. The rise on the signal service gauge, St. Paul, due to the reservoir water in 1893, was 1 foot; in 1894, 1.3 feet; in 1895, 1.2 feet." (Page 1842.)

CASE PROVEN.

So, Mr. President, it is not only strictly germane but usual to appropriate money in river and harbor bills for the construction of reservoirs.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it seems to me, judging from precedents in legislation, that when a subject is of importance enough to interest more than one-third of the States of this Union, when an amendment, or we will say two amendments, bearing upon the same subject are being considered carrying only $100,000, and a possible expenditure of $265,000 all told, the item ought, in good faith and good policy, to pass. Only $100,000 can, under this bill, be expended until we meet again, and we can then give it our further consideration and the appropriations be limited as to what we do hereafter.

Only the insignificant sum of a possible maximum of $265,000 is at issue, and in this the most vital interest is entertained by 17 States and Territories of the Union. It seems to me that when 17 States and Territories are interested in an item of $100,000, or even $265,000, it would be kindly, it would be just, and it would be dignified as well, and further, it would be good legislation, for the conferees to agree to the amendments, or in case the appropriation could not be settled upon, to report a disagreement to the Senate so that Senators may know what is going on in that committee, and whether or not some arrangements can be made to amend the original amendments; or whether or not the sense of the Senate shall not be taken upon the amendments and the whole subject-matter.

I am not quite willing, Mr. President, to sit here and listen day after day to conference reports being read, in which the stereotyped language appears, "after full and free conference," unless such words express the truth. I am not willing to admit that there has been a free and full conference on this river and harbor bill.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

B. F. PARLETT.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill of the House of Representatives for the relief of B. F. Parlett.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 11577) for the relief of B. F. Parlett, collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, some years ago, under an act of Congress to that effect, I had the honor of being appointed a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution. I desire now to resign that appointment at the hands of the President of the Senate, and I ask him to take such action as is appropriate in the premises.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless there be objection, the resignation of the Senator from Delaware is accepted.

The Chair appoints Mr. LINDSAY Regent on the part of the Senate of the Smithsonian Institution, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes relative to that institution, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Senator from Delaware.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN LAWS.

Mr. LODGE. I present for present consideration, from the Committee on Printing, a resolution which provides for an additional print of some bills for which there is a great demand, and copies of which the clerk in the document room tells me are exhausted.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 additional copies in law form of the "Act to provide for the taking of the Twelfth and subsequent censuses;" "An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes;" "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States;" "An act for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes;" and "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

PAY OF STENOGRAPHERS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographers employed to report hearings before the Committee on the District of Columbia, upon matters referred to said committee, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Nevada subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported favorably the foregoing resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was about to say when interrupted, and I will repeat it so as not to lose the trend of my remarks, that we are in the peculiar position of being called upon to consider a reputed report from a conference committee as to which I assume the usual announcement is made that "we have had full and free conference." Yet we find a subject as to which 17 States and Territories out of 50, a little more than one-third, are a unit upon, one certain amendment in the bill that calls for a hundred thousand dollars only, which has not been considered or been the subject of true conference.

Mr. President, last year was perhaps one of the greatest history-writing years in the annals of our Government. More momentous and important occurrences happened during the last twelve months than in any other year. But, Mr. President, in all this remarkable history that we have made in the last year there is not a single item so remarkable as this one, whereby a conference committee undertakes to report here, without first reporting a disagreement, upon a subject which shuts out seventeen States and Territories from the benefits of an amendment amounting to only a hundred thousand dollars. There is not a precedent for it in this year or in any other year, in this Congress or in any other.

I have submitted here, sometimes unwillingly, it is true, to one-man power when it established no new precedent, but it seems to me that now when we are nearing the end of the session I can not without further protest record myself and sign my name, so to speak, to the articles of a new principle and thus establish it as a precedent, one in which we would not only write new history, but, in my judgment, history more dangerous than any page ever recorded in legislative doings, i. e., that conference committees need not confer, that majorities can not rule, but that the House portion of a conference committee may arbitrarily dictate and proclaim that certain matters shall not go to conference but can be foreclosed against without even reading.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE'S ACTION CAN NOT BE DEFENDED.

I think I am justified, after the many days of silence that I have indulged in as a member of this body, and after assenting to many new and important things, to ask that we do not at this time undertake to establish this dangerous precedent. It can not be defended. No member of the conference committee will attempt to defend such action.

It is reputed that so far as one side of this alleged conference is concerned—the one which comes from the other part of the Capitol—that notwithstanding a majority of the whole conference committee is ready to consider this subject further, one man, and one alone, and he not the presiding officer of the House of Representatives—one man out of a body of 356 men—proposes to say to the Senate of the United States: "You shall be pulled down to the bull ring. There shall be one-half nearly of the United States in area declared practically outside the Union. You shall have no part or lot in this appropriation bill entitled: 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.'"

PERSONNEL OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. President, there are a great many remarkable things connected with this case. I am led to look over to the other end of the Capitol as well as in the Congressional Directory and see who are in charge and who are members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, this great committee, which, in conjunction with the committee of the Senate, proposes to aid the commerce and trade of the country. I find that the committee is composed of seventeen men. I observe that one-half of the United States—the western half—is conspicuous by the absence of any of its Representatives upon that committee. Is it because there are not members enough numerically allowed that committee to give to each State a member? Grant it. Is it because there are not good men enough in one-half of the United States to allow that half a member? I deny it. Is it because in spreading out over the country they have reached as far as they can, starting from the Atlantic and going West, as the star of empire ever takes its way? And have they reached the western limit within which good men can be found competent to serve? Have they exhausted the committee places by recognizing each State with a member as far as they go, and therefore can not go any further? Nay, Mr. President. We find they were crowded. They had to crowd them all into the Eastern States. Here is New York with two members upon that committee—two men from one State. The others are grouped, not particularly upon the seacoast, it is true, but all of them east of the Missouri River.

PROVIDE FOR THEMSELVES.

Mr. President, I do not want to say that these gentlemen have been partial to themselves and to their States, but there is one thing very remarkable in considering this committee and its work, and that is, first, that 30 States, including, of course, the neglected West—exactly two-thirds of the whole number in the Union—have only about $6,000,000 set apart for its benefit. The other one-third has something like $25,000,000, and it is remarkable that the $25,000,000 falls pretty largely into the States which have Representatives of the House on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. In fact, the larger share of this $6,000,000 as well as to States represented on the House committee. A grab game, surely!

CORPORATIONS AND TRUSTS.

Mr. President, we hear a great deal of corporations and trusts. You can not get a man upon this side of the Chamber or upon the other, nor can you find a man who belongs to a third political party or a compromise party, who will admit, if the question is put to him, that he is an upholder of trusts or corporations that seek to monopolize. They all deny it. Go over, if you please, and take a seat in the gallery of the House, or go on the floor and listen to the debates there, and you will hear from time to time remarks concerning trusts and corporations that are always uncomplimentary to them. I do not know that I ever heard a man stand in the other end of this Capitol and defend corporations and trusts.

I do not recall now any Senator who has upon any occasion risen in his place for the purpose of defending trusts as such, or corporations as such. It may be true that different Senators have at different times defended this or that corporation in some particular manner, and I hope the time will never come when those Senators will not individually and as a part of the Senate be willing to say that a corporation has just the same rights as an individual. I hope we shall always maintain equality as between all citizens and under all circumstances. I believe that corporations are necessary. I believe that labor and capital have equal rights.

THE WORST ONE YET.

But here, Mr. President, we have an example, in my judgment, of a most gigantic trust, the most gigantic combination that it has ever been my privilege to see or to hear of, a trust or combination by which a committee of sixteen men at the other end of the Capitol manage in some way to take all the water in the United States into their particular sixteen States. They manage to remove every river, lake, and inlet, so far as appropriation consideration is concerned, down into that little corner of even fifteen States. They manage to find that every harbor we have worthy of notice is located in the fifteen States represented on a certain committee of another body. They manage in cutting up this watermelon, if it may be termed such, amounting to the sum of thirty-odd million dollars, to say "about $27,000,000 belongs to us—members of this committee—and the other $3,000,000 we will put around in little five and ten thousand dollar bunches or dabs where we can secure just votes enough to get out of the House and over into the Senate, and then we will hold the poor old Senate up in conference."

WHERE THE MONEY GOES.

If anyone doubts the truth of my statement I invite his attention to the bill itself. I may be inaccurate, but only to the extent of a few thousand dollars, and when we are talking about $30,000,000 to be expended at once and somewhere about $200,000,000 later on, a matter of a few thousand does not make much difference, but the statement, as I make it, is substantially correct; that is to say, "in our little House tea party of fifteen or sixteen on Committee on Rivers and Harbors, out of 356 members we sixteen will take over twenty-five millions now and a couple of hundred millions later on. We will then take the thirty remaining States and put there six millions, the greater part of it in such as are represented on this committee, the balance of it supposably where it will do us the most good, and get us the most votes. The balance of the country we will bunco and leave it out in the cold."

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 49; as follows:

YEAS—16.
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Roach,	Thurston,
Carter,	Jones, Nev.	Shoup,	Turner,
Chandler,	Mantle,	Stewart,	Warren,

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

A GRAB GAME IT IS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the honorable Senator who preceded me, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] entered somewhat into the merits of this case as to the necessities of the desired appropriation.

I desire to enter into that to some extent later on, but I repeat now, when we have more Senators present, what I said before: I want to ask the Senate whether they are ready, after as many surrenders as we have made to various despotic ones during this session, to surrender once for all and say they will recognize now and hereafter an alleged conference committee coming from another place, with the avowed purpose before they come of not agreeing or not even discussing some one given subject, as being the genuine article, i. e., a conference committee who will in deed as in word hold "full and free conference;" that there shall be no report whatever except as the House members dictate, and no report of disagreement, so that the Senate can not even once instruct their conferees whether they shall or shall not stand by a proposition.

Mr. President, this reservoir proposition in this bill did not have a single negative vote when it passed the Senate if I am correct, and I think I am. So we have a right to consider that it once passed the Senate unanimously. To go a little further back, I do not understand that in the Senate Committee of Commerce there was any disinclination on the part of the committee as a whole or any of its members to place this amendment in the bill and report it to the Senate.

SENATE COMMITTEE DID THEIR DUTY.

It came to them in due course as an amendment first submitted by a Senator on this floor and afterwards reported back from a regular standing committee to whom it was referred. After being reported back from that committee it was sent to the Committee on Commerce. They took it up, as they should do, and as I feel very grateful to them for doing, and placed it in the bill. When it came here for indorsement it was neither smuggled through nor was it rushed through without a full Senate, but it was given full, fair, and free discussion, and after such discussion it was adopted.

Now what happened? It went to the committee of conference. I do not think I am divulging anything secret or that would be denied when I assume that the committee on the part of the Senate were all of them in earnest about retaining the amendment, and that at least a majority of them were in favor originally and all the time of the subject-matter and the issues represented by the proposition. Two men, Senators, of that committee have always expressed themselves that way.

But here we meet conferees from another place who say, "Gentlemen, you can not take up the little matter of $100,000 put in there as one of the features to represent more than two-fifths of this Union in acres and more than one-third of the Commonwealths in number; we will not even consider it; we will not debate it; and if you attempt to make a disagreement even, we will put up our dolls and toys and go home."

AMOUNT INVOLVED.

Now, I wish to submit it to the Senate whether or not we will establish a precedent for future committees of conference upon that basis. If this was a little item of an ordinary ten or fifteen dollar claim or a hundred dollar claim, if it was a matter that only had reference to one or two people, if it was an unimportant matter from all standpoints, it might pass by without notice. But here we have a bill that positively carries within its covers the greatest promise of money of any bill that ever passed, if I am right, this or any other Congress. The chairman shakes his head. I hope he will explain if I am wrong. I think I am right.

Mr. FRYE. I am not a speaking member of this body.

Mr. WARREN. This bill contains a Nicaragua Canal provision. Now, I do not believe it has been denied by any Senator that a Nicaragua Canal will cost not less than its estimate of $115,000,000, and if we are to judge by what other projects have cost, if we are to judge by expenditures in our private business, those of us who have ever built a dwelling house, a stable, a bridge, or a fence, it is presumed that we will expend a good deal more than the estimate. In fact, it would be safer to say that it would cost twice what our guess or estimate was, and in that case we have in this bill what may eventually lead to more than $200,000,000 expenditure upon that one feature alone.

Now, outside of that, I understand it is a matter of some thirty-odd millions immediately and more to follow.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I can not sit quietly and allow such statements as those to be made. The bill carries about $14,000,000 of cash and about $23,000,000 of continuing contracts, instead of $40,000,000 and $50,000,000. With regard to the Nicaragua Canal, it provides only for a survey, and the appropriation is limited to $1,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator sincerely for even that much information; but if he will indulge me further, the commencement of the canal presumes its finish, does it not?

Mr. FRYE. The survey does not presume it at all. The survey of the improvement the Senator is talking about calls for over $5,000,000, if a survey calls for an appropriation necessarily.

Mr. WARREN. Be that as it may, I am glad to get these little flash lights even upon this bill as it has come out of conference. We all know that in the manner these things are necessarily handled in these last hours of the session we can know little more about what is going on and in the bill when it is being read from point to point than if it was in another language. So I say I am glad to get that much information. But even then there is a confession by the chairman of a matter of some $37,000,000 if I heard aright.

But be that as it may, the principle remains the same. Either the Senate is one of the coordinate branches of this Government or it is not. If the Senate is one of the coordinate branches of the Government and one of the legislative bodies, I do not believe that we can afford to break loose from or surrender our rights so long ago established; that is to say, the right of differing here when a project comes from the other House, differing in a friendly and neighborly way, as we may differ with each other personally. I believe that we should maintain the right of amendment to the House bills when they come here, and I believe that we should maintain the right, after having so amended these bills, to have conferences.

I pause a moment to exclaim again that we have had practically no conferences upon this bill, and we have no conference report, practically. We are denied a conference. We have a report that comes in here confessedly from a body of men in which one side of it say, "You can have but one kind of a report, and that is favorable; you can not disagree and take it back into your body, because we are afraid that the Senate would overrule you and overrule us." Is the Senate going to submit to this? Now, if I was talking solely about arid lands and irrigation it would be another thing, but I am talking now, in these preliminary remarks, about the rights of the Senate.

I want every Senator here, Mr. President, to take this matter home to himself and ask whether he wants to be confronted hereafter, when he may have a measure that he is interested in, with a bad precedent that he may establish in these last hours of a Congress—a Congress, it seems to me, whose efforts and accomplishments in behalf of the nation have established it as one of the greatest Congresses of the world. It does not seem to me that we want to ignominiously surrender now in these last days and establish a precedent that will come up hereafter to confront us at every turn.

OUR EARNESTNESS.

Mr. President, I had in my eye a moment ago a Senator of this body, one whom I love to honor, one whom I always delight to hear upon any subject—and it is my highest ambition to sit at his feet and gain wisdom from his knowledge and speech—who on one occasion said that if he could avert a probable coming action of the Senate he would be willing to have a halter placed around his neck and be conducted to the desk in front of the President and there beheaded.

Now, Mr. President, that shows the kind of earnestness sometimes felt by Senators in their work. While I may not be as patriotic as he, and not as intense upon this question as he was upon that, I want to say, nevertheless, that I had rather give up my commission in the Senate, here and now, than consent to this proposed innovation of conference committees and undertake to explain to my constituents when I go home why it is that this great body they delight to honor always, and that I delight to honor, is guilty of a kind of work that no legislative body or rump legislature on earth was, I believe, ever guilty of. Undertaking to hold a conference that is not a conference; of coming in here with a report that bears upon the face of it its falsity. A full and free conference, forsooth, when conferees come over here bound and gagged!

Mr. President, it has come to pass, it seems, that honorable members of the Senate are compelled to come in here and say to me and others that they stand mute, bound and gagged, because one member of another body, or one member of a conference committee, says, "You will have it this way, or we will beat the river and harbor bill."

It has been my pleasure and my privilege to vote for river and harbor bills heretofore. With one slight exception, and that carried no money in it, there has never been a thing in a river and harbor bill that benefited my State. In fact, if you should take the river and harbor bills as they have passed here and look through them, you would discover that this Union was lacking several States, and my State would be one of them. We believe there are rivers and harbors that need improvement. We believe in navigation. We believe in improving it. We have voted time and again for it.

AN UNEVEN DIVISION.

Mr. President, we stand here ready now to take the bill up and act upon it the same as we have acted upon other bills, and if we can not convince our friends in the Senate that we are worthy of consideration we are willing then to surrender. But I submit, Mr. President, that when you take the river and harbor bill and lay down beside it a United States map and draw a line through it in the middle from north to south, leaving just an even half upon one side and an even half upon the other, you can not make me believe, nor can you make even a boy who can not read believe, if he ever saw a map, that there are $28,000,000 to $35,000,000 worth of water on one side of it and only $2,000,000 to $3,500,000 worth of water and harbors on the other.

You can not make anybody believe that. Take the Pacific Ocean, the greatest in the world, and the most important to-day, and becoming more and more important, with its coast commencing up at the British possessions, with all its ins and outs, around all those sounds and bayous and bays, and coming clear down south to the very end of our possessions, and then skipping over to the Gulf of Mexico and taking the larger shore of the Gulf of Mexico, and adding that entire coast together, you can not make me believe that there is only $3,000,000 worth of harbor work necessary upon all of that coast and country, while $30,000,000 or more of harbor work is necessary upon the Atlantic and the small remnant that is left of the Gulf of Mexico.

Have we appropriated money for similar purposes heretofore? That we have not is the only adverse argument I have heard, and I understand certain conferees are unwilling even to listen to a statement or to look at our proofs showing that we have heretofore so appropriated. I understand the only thing that has ever been attempted in the line of adverse argument is, "This is all right, boys, but it is on the wrong bill; it should not be on the river and harbor bill." Well, now, I think that that is a mistake. I think this is the very place. When we build reservoirs at the head of the Missouri River, to prevent overflows and erosion of banks, I do not know why we are transcending any rule that will not apply to the river away down at the very lower end, where we build dikes and dams, etc., to confine the waters of the Mississippi.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand an official document, and I will venture to say that not a man upon that conference committee has opened it. I venture to say that so far as the House conferees are concerned they do not know that the book is in existence, or, if so, that it contains any reference to this subject.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. MANTLE. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will now yield to me for the purpose of making a motion to recommit this conference report to the committee of conference? In making that request, I desire to say that, in my opinion, the statement of fact and of the conditions existing and surrounding this question are such that Senators have been impressed, and that they will join with those of us who are directly interested in this vital question for the purpose of recommitting the report in the hope that another conference more favorable may result. I make that request of my honorable friend from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. If my distinguished friend the Senator from Montana feels that there is a disposition to give us that fairness and that consideration which I feel we have been without heretofore, I certainly wish to offer no objection. I think the report should go back to conference. I have no right, perhaps, to ask it, but I should like to have some assurance from the committee to whom it will go that it may receive some consideration and that they will endeavor to give it a full consideration.

Mr. FRYE. The motion to recommit would not be in order. The report must be either agreed to or disagreed to—one of the two.

Mr. MILLS. It can be recommitment, under the rules of the Senate, when the proposition is made.

Mr. MANTLE. I submit to the Chair whether or not my motion is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair believes that the motion is entirely in order. The Chair understands that there are but three actions which may be taken, either to agree to the report, to disagree to it, or to recommit it. The Chair finds the precedents to be many of the recommitment of reports of committees of conference. That has been the practice in both Houses.

Mr. MANTLE. I now make that motion, and in doing so I appeal to the Senate in behalf of that great territory so directly and so vitally concerned in this question to unite with us to the end that the motion may prevail and that another opportunity may be given to the conferees to arrive, if possible, at a conclusion favorable to the Senate view of this matter.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to add my appeal to that of the Senator from Montana. I want to go a little further. I want to ask the chairman of the committee to ask consent of this body to take the bill into conference and see if he can not get a renewed consideration and if possible a more favorable one. I should like to have the honorable Senator who has charge of the bill make that request.

Mr. FRYE. The honorable chairman who has charge of the bill can not make it. A recommitment of the report means the death of the bill beyond any manner of question.

Mr. WARREN. I hope not.

Mr. FRYE. There can not be any doubt about it. You can not have a conference on this subject in the last twenty hours of the session and expect to get it through both Houses. The report has not been agreed to in the House yet.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that it will take but a few minutes to get the conferees together.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know where they are.

Mr. WARREN. All I have to say is that they ought to be near by.

Mr. CLARK. They are in the building.

Mr. MANTLE. I submit if the House conferees could change their mind it will be but a moment's labor to adopt the report here and the same at the other end of the Capitol. I beg the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce to give us another opportunity to secure what we insist upon.

Mr. FRYE. The chairman must submit to whatever the Senate does, and he will submit to whatever the Senate does, but he has no authority to ask that the report shall be recommitment.

Mr. MANTLE. I will assume that responsibility and again ask the Senate to stand with us in another effort in this direction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit the report to the conference committee.

Mr. FRYE. Now, one moment. The Senator from Texas has a grievance; the Senator from Oregon has a grievance; the Senator from Florida has a grievance; the Senator from Iowa has a grievance; the Senator from Delaware has a grievance; the Senator from Oregon—I think I mentioned him—

Mr. SPOONER. Call the roll.

Mr. FRYE. No; there are not a great many who have grievances. Senators get about all they asked. If the report is recommitment, then I suppose every Senator who has a grievance is going to appear before the committee of conference and ask that all the grievances may be righted.

Mr. PASCO. I shall be there, if you will allow me to come.

Mr. LODGE. The Senators from Massachusetts will be there.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; the Senators from Massachusetts have a grievance. The senior Senator has a very serious one.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. FRYE. Allow me to say one word more, if the Senator will permit me in his time.

The Senator has been complaining that there has been no free and fair conference. Why? Because every Senator has not realized everything that the Senate put in for him into the river and harbor bill. There never was a conference report yet on an appropriation bill that did not disappoint at least one-quarter of the Senators. What is a conference for? It is a compromise between the two Houses, and you can not expect that everything shall be obtained.

Mr. WARREN. Is it supposed that the surrender shall be entirely on one side?

Mr. FRYE. You have to surrender, and you must surrender, or else you never can have a bill reported. You never could have an appropriation bill passed if there was not a surrender on each side. The House itself surrendered more than we surrendered in this report, and I am tired of hearing complaints made against the conferees because they did not stand up. The conference committee on the part of the Senate fought for this proposition from the time they went into the conference until it was closed, and after it was closed they asked the House conferees to agree to put this provision in.

Mr. WARREN. I believe that is true, and I thank the Senator and his associates on the conference.

Mr. FRYE. Now, the Senator a little while ago in his speech made a suggestion that at least two of the conferees on the part of the Senate stood by it.

Mr. WARREN. I did not say that.

Mr. FRYE. I heard the Senator say it when walking behind there.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think I said just that.

Mr. FRYE. I heard the Senator say it exactly. Now, who are the two who stood by him?

Mr. WARREN. Did I say at least two stood by me?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir; that they stood by this proposition.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the reporter to see whether I used any such language. I want to see whether I used the language the Senator imputes to me, that at least two Senators stood by me.

Mr. FRYE. I heard it.

Mr. WARREN. All right. I think the Senator is mistaken. I want to convince him of it.

Mr. FRYE. That will consume another half hour's time.

Mr. WARREN. I hope not.

Mr. FRYE. I do not propose to help the Senator to filibuster on this bill at all.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to consume time, but I do not propose to be impaled as saying something that I did not say. I hope the Senator does not want to put me in that position, because I certainly did not use the language. Unless it was a slip of the tongue, I did not say that at least two Senators stood by me.

Mr. FRYE. I stood by the proposition, and I stood by every proposition that was made in the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. And I so stated—I so undertook to state—and if I have said anything else I want to be corrected.

Mr. FRYE. I have been on a good many conference committees, and I wish that I never could be on another while I live.

Now, I have spent on this bill a month of solid, hard work, meeting in the morning at 10 o'clock and working up until 8 and 9 and 10 o'clock at night, in order to get a bill perfected so that these improvements might go on in the rivers and harbors of the country. Here it is reported on the last night of the session, and then commences immediately a fight against the bill, a purpose on the part of certain Senators that it shall not become a law, although all this labor has been spent upon it, because, forsooth, the Senate conferees could not succeed in inducing the House conferees to put a proposition they were not in favor of in the bill.

Now, I do not believe it is justified. I do believe the Senators from those States are justified in making speeches in relation to this matter, speeches touching the merits of the case. But here the Senator from Wyoming has spent three-quarters of an hour in attacks upon conference committees. I do not believe that is justified. Conference committees have hard work enough with each other without, after they have got through their work, being subject to castigation from various Senators who have not received their merits as they believe and as the Senate and as I believe.

Now, the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]—a man whom I admire beyond most men; a man with whom I have served in public life for twenty-five years; a man whom I would do as much for as I would for any man living—feels that he has been aggrieved beyond measure because a continuing contract was not made for a canal from the ocean up to Houston, costing over $4,000,000. The House has refused to agree to anything of the kind, and what did we do? We appropriated $300,000 in cash to go immediately to work, not upon that same project, but to do the same thing the project called for—dredging that stream—and it is more money than can be spent by any possibility on that river next year. And yet the Senator from Texas is going to take the floor by and by, as he informed me, and is going to make a desperate fight against this bill becoming a law, because, forsooth, he did not get the continuing appropriation for over $4,000,000 for the canal up to Houston.

Now, the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Montana complain about the ocean being on the seashore. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no.

Mr. FRYE. And not up in Montana and Wyoming, and that all this money is appropriated without any of it going where there are no rivers and no harbors and no ocean.

Mr. CLARK. Oh, come out and see us.

Mr. FRYE. And where you are praying now for water to irrigate with. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Do you object to their praying for anything?

Mr. FRYE. No; they may pray for anything they please, but I do not want them to prey on the river and harbor bill. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit the report to the committee of conference.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. WARREN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 41; as follows:

So the Senate refused to go into executive session.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] in the Chamber, but I desire to say the Senator certainly misunderstood what I said and my meaning. I do not want to delay the proceedings to ask that my remarks be now read, but the official report will show that when I opened I paid tribute to the conferees on the part of the Senate as a body. Here he comes now, and I want to say to him I fully believed then, and I believe now, that the chairman of the conference committee was anxious to stand by the Senate's work. The only connection in which I assumed to make a distinction between him and his two colleagues was when stating the great interest, the number of States, the great acreage, etc., that were interested in this small appropriation, I said that at least two of the Senators believed in the policy of reservoir building in the arid region.

If I took an undue liberty with the Senator from Maine it was because of a remark he once made here on the floor of the Senate which led me to believe that he personally did not have the same feelings as the other two conferees did; but I want now to pay my tribute to him, and to say that in my opinion he has been fair about this matter. I do not, however, believe he will deny here, or in any other place, that some of the conferees he had to meet with did not enter the conference with that spirit which conferees are supposed to enter with, ready to take up every project and discuss it on its merits, ready to open it up and hear arguments advanced on each and every one of them, and to be willing to give all equal consideration, and then if they failed to agree in the first instance, report a disagreement and allow the Senate to have a vote upon the disputed matter again. I hardly think the Senator will say the House conferees were willing to do that.

Mr. FRYE. I do not feel at liberty to say what any conferee did or said in the conference committee. I think it very probable, however, that I was mistaken as to the language of the Senator from Wyoming; but I took it, of course, as a reference to me, and it could not be to anybody else. I will not take the liberty of saying now, in the midst of a Senator's speech, whether I am in favor of the arid-land project or not.

Mr. WARREN. I do the Senator the justice to say that I believe, if he was opposed to it personally, having been directed by the Senate to protect it, he would do so. It is but simple justice to say this.

PURPOSE OF RESERVOIRS.

From the little which leaks out of conference we learn certain conferees on the other side had but one complaint, and that was that this was unprecedented legislation; that it was a new kind of business. I do not know why that statement was made, or what was sought to be accomplished by it. For, as I have said before, though not so completely as I should have said it, the object is, first, to build reservoirs in the interest of navigation. The language is clear that reservoirs are to be constructed for the impounding of water in the interest of preventing the erosion of river banks and overflows and damage by flood in the rivers below. This language is in the amendment.

The amendment then goes on further to state that the waters may be used to replenish and enlarge the streams in low-water time. There is no uncertainty about any declaration in the amendment.

IMPARTIAL SURVEY.

The next amendment provides for making certain surveys, and the language of the amendment which calls for surveys is as liberal, generous, manly, and fair as it is possible for language to make it.

We ask that there shall be at least one reservoir site examined, in a preliminary way, in each one of the arid and semiarid States. I will presently refer to the reason why we confine it to arid and semiarid States. Those who are to make the surveys will be Army engineers; they will not be in the special interest of irrigation, nor in the special interest of men of the West; not in the interest of any particular man or men, but in the broad, general way and interest in which every other project is examined. In this way we wish to have the Engineer Corps of the United States examine certain reservoir sites.

Let us consider for a moment as to whether that course is fair or not. I challenge any Senator present to tell me of a fairer way to weigh an engineering subject than to submit it to a regular United States Army officer who is an educated engineer and whose reputation is dearer to him than probably anything else in the world; an engineer who owes his employment not to men in the section of country where the surveys are to be made, but an engineer who holds an appointment for life; an engineer who can not be swayed one iota by men whom he meets or the circumstances which surround him; an engineer who is as impartial as it is possible for anyone to be.

There can be no standard fairer than that of taking a United States engineer, sending him out, and directing him to do what? What do we ask in this amendment? Do we ask to have him report favorably? Not at all. Do we ask to have him report whether that section of the country should have reservoirs for irrigation? Not at all. We ask him to report whether it is practicable, whether it is feasible, and what it will cost to construct such reservoirs as he may consider it practicable to construct in the interest of navigation, etc. That is all there is of the question. We are seeking an impartial jury, and want to try our case before a clean court at every stage in the proceeding.

ONLY ASKED FAIR TREATMENT.

We inserted the amendments I am referring to, not with any expectation of demanding special attention or special concessions. We inserted them expecting that they would have the same careful consideration which other amendments have had.

I do not know a Senator in this body who stands by these amendments, desiring to have them adopted, who has not shown fairness on this floor, and who has not pocketed his disappointment time and again upon the results of conference committees, upon the results of a determination by the majority.

Mr. President, I have had in my own day more falls than winnings; I have had more losses than I have had gains; and I desire to say to the Senate, and I believe no one can say nay to it, that I have never used ten minutes of the time of the Senate in undertaking to carry a point which was denied me in a committee of conference, after a fair consideration, no matter what was the subject.

Mr. President, we are in a different position about this matter than the Senators to whom the Senator from Maine refers as being disappointed. He referred to his State suffering a disappointment and other States suffering disappointments. That is true, but we always meet and take our medicine, and generally look pleasant.

Mr. WILSON. We have to take it.

Mr. WARREN. And generally, as is so aptly said by my friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], we have to take it.

But it seems here we have a matter that is considered so notoriously bad, so notoriously out of plumb, that the conferees from another body will not even take it up with a pitchfork. They refuse even to look at it; they refuse to consider it; they declare there will be no conference if that subject is to come up. So this appears in an entirely different aspect from that of other amendments.

I say again, Mr. President, that the proceedings which are sought to be had constitute an innovation. If we shall take this conference report and call it good and not contend against it, it is permitting something that we have never submitted to before; and I want to say that I hope no Senator on this floor, even if he may have a project to which I am opposed most bitterly, will ever accept such treatment without protest and a review of the subject before the measure is permitted to pass.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I am the Senate's keeper; I do not know that I should be any more alarmed about establishing this precedent than other Senators, but I know I shall be pardoned for saying that it is my duty, if it is anybody's duty, to assert the injustice of it on this occasion, because the amendment is one I introduced in the Senate.

RESERVOIRS HERETOFORE BUILT.

Referring to the claims of this being a new thing, I have here the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, Part II, 1892, from which I have already quoted enough to prove that appropriations in river and harbor bills are not unusual.

FORTY-ONE UNITED STATES RESERVOIRS.

Mr. President, calling attention of the Senate to the fact that there were forty-one reservoirs built by the orders of Congress for holding back the waters of the Mississippi River, I am led to ask Senators when it was that the Mississippi River became so sacred above other rivers, and while the Mississippi has been protected the Missouri is not to be considered so deserving?

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator want to read that whole report?

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to read it all, but I want to read just enough to make my statement good that this precedent has been established. I do not know that the Senator from Maine heard me and I will have to reread some of it.

Mr. FRYE. No, no; not on my account. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator, there seems to be a tremendous density of ignorance on the part of some people who ought to understand this reservoir business. Did the Senator know until now there have been forty-one reservoirs built on the Mississippi River, from 1869 to 1879, by act of Congress?

Mr. FRYE. I knew that some had been built, because I was very much opposed to them, for I believed they were built for no purpose except to drive logs.

Mr. WARREN. I will have to enlighten the Senator further, and I will have to go to another book and show what has been accomplished. I will show the Senator, according to the official reports of the United States, that these reservoirs have caused the Mississippi River to be navigable for larger boats at certain seasons of the year than ever before, by raising the water from 1 foot 2 inches to 1 foot 8 inches, right along through the various dry seasons of the year.

Mr. FRYE. How far down?

Mr. WARREN. Down to St. Paul.

Mr. FRYE. That is where they wanted the reservoir to be constructed for the logs.

Mr. WARREN. Now, we will see what these 41 reservoirs cost. There is an idea here that the tremendous cost of reservoirs is going to break up the United States. I hope I may have attention while I make this one point. We only asked in the second amendment here to have one survey made in each of the arid and semiarid States. There could not possibly be more than 17 reservoirs. So far as the expense is concerned, it cost less than $1,000 apiece to make the surveys under Government order and guidance during the last year. Then comes this statement, that the building of these reservoirs is going to cost more than the Nicaragua Canal, etc.

The amendment under discussion calls for not to exceed 17 reservoirs, and these, if averaging the same as the 41 quoted, would cost but a trifle less than $1,000,000 all told.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator know that they are applying now for the rebuilding of the dams at the head waters of the Mississippi; that they have all rotted out?

Mr. WARREN. I did not know that, because very little information from the committee, and perhaps properly so, was divulged. I am glad to know it, of course, if it is a fact. That simply leads to the supposition that either the engineers did not recommend the proper construction, or Congress failed to grant the proper appropriation, because such reservoirs should be built of masonry, which would last as long as the hills.

Mr. FRYE. You could not build them for $1,000 apiece, then.

Mr. WARREN. It would not cost to exceed, if we had them one each in all the arid States, three or four million dollars upon any data we have got.

LOCATIONS FOR RESERVOIRS.

Referring directly to the matter of navigation, we have another report here, and I may refer to it soon, from a United States officer who has carefully examined the subject with reference to this inquiry, and he makes the statement that he has examined five reservoirs in the States of Wyoming and Colorado.

I will ask at this point to insert some official information on Wyoming and Colorado reservoir sites:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 9, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the Chief of Engineers, dated December 6, 1897, together with copy of a report from Capt. Hiram M. Chittenden, Corps of Engineers, dated November 6, 1897, of a preliminary examination made by him, in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, of certain reservoir sites in the States of Wyoming and Colorado.

In view of the importance of the subject under consideration and the interest manifested by those to be most deeply affected by the establishment of these reservoirs, if constructed, I heartily concur with the Chief of Engineers in expressing the hope that all the accompanying papers, including charts and maps, be printed.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1897.

SIR: The river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, provides in section 8 for a number of preliminary examinations, among which is the following:

"For the examination of sites, and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water, to prevent floods and overflows, erosion of river banks, and breaks of levees, and to reinforce the flow of streams during drought and low-water seasons, at least one site each in the States of Wyoming and Colorado."

The examination thus provided for has been made by Capt. Hiram M. Chittenden, Corps of Engineers, and I have now the honor to submit that officer's report of November 6, 1897, on the subject. Captain Chittenden entered upon this duty with zeal and with more than ordinary personal interest, and his very admirable report shows deep research and a close study of the subject in hand, involving the examination of a vast amount of data and of territory of wide extent. This paper is accompanied by 13 maps and diagrams and 26 photographs, and in view of the importance of the subject under consideration and the interest manifested by those to be most deeply affected by the establishment of these reservoirs, if constructed, I beg to recommend that all the accompanying papers be printed.

Captain Chittenden's report was transmitted to this office by Lieut. Col. Amos Stickney, Corps of Engineers, who has had large experience in connection with Western rivers, and attention is invited to his remarks touching the construction of these reservoirs.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

LETTER OF LIEUT. COL. AMOS STICKNEY, CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

ST. LOUIS, MO., November 13, 1897.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report upon the examination of reservoir sites in Wyoming and Colorado, directed by act of Congress of June 3, 1896, and assigned to my charge by letter from your office of August 1, 1896, with the view of having it carried out by Capt. H. M. Chittenden, Corps of Engineers:

In conformity with the above Captain Chittenden was directed to make the examinations, and he has performed the duty as thoroughly as possible with the funds allotted for the purpose, viz, $5,000 from the contingent appropriation. He has made many personal examinations and collected a large amount of valuable data from surveys and various sources.

His report, transmitted herewith, gives much information upon the subject investigated, and, it is hoped, furnishes the information contemplated by the act of Congress and instructions from your office. I concur generally in the conclusions reached by Captain Chittenden from the study and data set forth in his report. There are a few points to which I would invite attention. In the estimates of cost of work some of the units of price may have been taken too low, especially if work is contemplated under the laws and regulations governing hours of labor and manner of conducting Government work. The items for contingencies, in estimates based upon general examinations and limited preliminary surveys in a rough country, should be larger than what might be considered ample in localities where labor and supplies can be more quickly and easily obtained and the work of a character and extent to be closely estimated. Captain Chittenden believes his estimates to be ample, and reference is made to them only as a matter of caution.

Special attention is invited to the conclusions relating to the purposes to be served by the construction of reservoirs. First and far above other reasons for their construction is their adaptability and value for industrial purposes, for irrigation of land, furnishing power, and for water supply for cities, and in this way adding greatly to the material prosperity and progress of parts of the country which, without such assistance, would be almost valueless and might remain almost uninhabited. As to their effect upon the flood conditions and low-water navigation of the larger rivers, it may be said to be comparatively small, and only beneficial to any considerable degree by an enormous expansion of the system.

The question of the propriety of the National Government entering upon the work of reservoir construction in the arid regions is one of public policy, which, it is believed, should be left for the consideration of Congress upon the facts presented. The construction of any one reservoir would, of course, affect only a limited region of country, but the effect of a system of reservoirs built wherever the conditions were favorable might be far-reaching, and not only add largely to the welfare of communities in their immediate vicinity, but indirectly affect many others.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AMOS STICKNEY,
Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. JOHN M. WILSON,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army

LETTER OF CAPT. HIRAM M. CHITTENDEN, CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

ST. LOUIS, MO., November 6, 1897.

COLONEL: I have the honor to submit herewith a report upon the examination of reservoir sites in Wyoming and Colorado, directed by act of Congress of June 3, 1896.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HIRAM M. CHITTENDEN,
Captain of Engineers.

Lieut. Col. AMOS STICKNEY,
Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

There were examined in all two reservoir systems in Colorado and three in Wyoming, while several others have received casual inspection or have been brought to my attention closely enough to indicate that they will in time become meritorious projects. In Wyoming the three sites are on the Laramie, Sweetwater, and Big Piney rivers, respectively, in the southern, central, and northern portions of the State. The first two were carefully surveyed by Mr. F. B. Maltby, United States assistant engineer, in May and June of the present year. The Big Piney system, which really comprehends three sites, has been surveyed by Mr. Fred Bond, of Buffalo, Wyo. The Colorado sites are located one on the South Fork of the South Platte River and the other near Loveland, Colo., between the Big Thompson and Chache à la Poudre rivers, in what are known as the Boyd Lakes. These sites were surveyed by Mr. Maltby in May, June, and July of the present year. The reports of Messrs. Maltby and Bond are submitted herewith. (Appendixes A and B.)

As my investigations have proceeded it has become evident that, as to a portion at least of the objects mentioned in the bill, the project of building reservoirs in the arid regions of this country is a practicable one, while from industrial and commercial considerations it is eminently desirable. The real matter in doubt seemed to be not so much the importance of these works in themselves as the advisability of their construction by the General Government. To this feature of the question I have given most careful consideration, with the earnest desire to present it in all its bearings, favorable as well as unfavorable. It is a new departure, and while the works themselves will be of great public utility, it may yet not be apparent that the Federal Government is the proper agency to undertake them. If my investigations have resulted more favorably than might have been expected to the policy of Government patronage of these great works, I trust that I have at every step supported my conclusions with substantial facts.

The report embraces—

(1) Some remarks upon the varieties of reservoir sites to be found in the arid regions and upon the various methods of dam construction practiced there.

(2) A description of the several sites examined and of the works proposed, together with special reports by the assistants who executed the work.

(3) A general discussion of the subject of reservoirs, with illustrations drawn from natural and artificial systems in various parts of the world.

For the reservoir sites herein considered masonry dams are proposed for the South Platte and Sweetwater sites, the first on the curved plan with no overflow, the second on the straight plan with heavy profile designed for an overflow dam.

Combined rock fill and earthen structures are proposed for the upper Piney site. No dams are required for the Laramie, the Lake De Smet, and Loveland sites.

VI.—THE PINEY CREEK SYSTEM.

The reservoir sites examined along this stream did not come to my attention until early in August of the present year, but I found them to possess so many advantages that I determined to consider them. For this purpose I engaged the services of Mr. Fred Bond, a civil engineer, of Buffalo, Wyo., who had already done some work on these sites, to make me as complete an examination of them as the limited means at my disposal would permit. This work Mr. Bond executed with great promptness and in considerable detail. The drawings of the three sites considered, with estimates of cost, were all prepared by him. His report, appended hereto, will be found of much interest.

Piney Creek is one of the most important streams in Wyoming, and is to that State very much what the Cache à la Poudre, to be described further on, is to Colorado. It is fed from the perennial drifts that accumulate in great magnitude in the chasms and on the slopes of the Big Horn Mountains, just to the north of Cloud Peak. It is a typical mountain torrent, subject to no violent variations in discharge, but a good, strong stream the year round. The absence of continuous gauge observations makes it impossible to state definitely what the mean annual discharge is; but a conservative estimate, based upon such measurements as have been taken, indicates a mean flow at the foot of the mountains of about 250 cubic feet per second, with a maximum of about 1,000 cubic feet per second and a minimum of about 100 cubic feet. From the report of Mr. Bond, as well as from personal conferences by myself with farmers in the Piney Valley, it appears that an unusually large percentage of the flow of Piney Creek will have to be stored in order that all may be utilized—probably 50 per cent.

Fortunately nature has provided excellent sites for this purpose. These sites are three in number, and are, commencing with the highest, the Cloud Peak site, the Piney site, and the Lake De Smet site.

CLOUD PEAK SITE.

This is a lake site and lies at the northern base of Cloud Peak, nearly 10,000 feet above sea level, and surrounded by dense mountain forests. It is about 1½ miles long and one-half mile wide. It covers 173 acres. The photographs convey a good idea of its present appearance. It is proposed to close the outlet by a dam 34 feet high and to construct outlet works so as to draw off the water 6 feet below the present surface. The available capacity is estimated at 256,000,000 cubic feet, or 6,800 acre-feet. The drainage area above this site is about 30 square miles, and the reservoir will fill every year.

Mr. Bond has presented a plan of dam which will give a satisfactory result. To permit some minor modifications, however, which might be deemed essential for increasing the thoroughness of the work, I have increased his estimate by 25 per cent, instead of 20 per cent as in the other estimates. A table of costs is given below.

THE PINEY SITE.

This is an open-valley site, formed by a natural park 1½ miles long by 1 mile wide. It is located 6 miles below Cloud Peak Lake, at an altitude of 8,800 feet. It is proposed to close the outlet of this park by a dam 54 feet high. This will give the reservoir an area of 263 acres and a capacity of 480,000,000 cubic feet, or 11,020 acre-feet. The form of dam proposed by Mr. Bond is well suited to the site. The estimate of cost is given below. The entire watershed above the dam is 65 square miles, and the reservoir will fill every year.

Both of the above sites were recently located and filed upon by an association of farmers in the valley below, under the style of the Rock Creek and Piney Reservoir and Ditch Company. There will be no difficulty in securing a relinquishment of their rights, which they have voluntarily proposed, as will be seen from an instrument in writing executed by them, a copy of which is appended hereto (Appendix D). In fact, these sites present no complications in regard to prior rights.

THE LAKE DE SMET SITE.

This is a depression site occupied by a natural lake without an outlet. The present lake is about 3 miles in extreme length and 1 in extreme breadth, and has an area of about 1,965 acres. The water is reported to be unfit for use, but I think this must be a mistake, as it is regularly used for the watering of animals.

The site lies well out from the base of the mountains, and its possible capacity is such as to store all the surplus of the Piney not stored in the two reservoirs just described. It forms, in fact, with those two, a complete system for the stream and makes as satisfactory an arrangement as could be desired.

The surface of the lake can be raised 30 feet before the natural basin is full, and to any required height thereafter by a simple embankment at the northern end. Thirty feet depth of storage will give a reservoir area when full of 2,400 acres, and a capacity of nearly 3,000,000,000 cubic feet, or 67,000 acre-feet. The present estimate considers only this amount of storage, but it could be increased if found desirable to the full needs of the stream.

To fill the reservoir will require a feeder 3½ miles long. The canal proposed by Mr. Bond has a slope of 4 feet to the mile, a depth of 7 feet, and will carry 727 cubic feet per second. Mr. Bond excludes four months of winter from the supply for this reservoir, but I see no conclusive reason why this should be done. It ought to be possible to overcome the difficulties arising from excessive cold weather so as not to lose this winter supply.

Outlets are provided at each end of the reservoir, that at the north end draining into the Piney and that at the south end into Box Elder Creek. Each outlet will discharge 425 cubic feet of water per second. The outlets are mainly in cut, but there is a length of 1,000 feet of tunnel at each end.

There are no private claims connected with this reservoir, but some of the land on the immediate borders of Lake de Smet and along the feeder will have to be condemned.

Following is Mr. Bond's estimate for the three sites. To each I have added 25 per cent to cover superintendence, contingencies, and such possible modifications of plan as might be developed in actual construction.

In no part of Wyoming has the water of streams been more fully used in irrigation than in the section of country along Clear and Piney creeks and their tributaries. The resources of these streams in their natural condition have been exhausted, yet there is abundance of land in their immediate valleys to utilize the flow which now goes to waste. The project for storing that percentage of the flow of Piney Creek which is necessary to render the whole available is therefore one of actual immediate importance. (See report of Mr. Fred Bond, Appendix B.)

Should the Government take active steps in accordance with the above recommendations, I should further recommend a first appropriation of $100,000 for the Piney system and $200,000 for the South Platte site. For the Piney system this would permit the construction of the Cloud Peak and Piney reservoirs, and the acquisition of the Lake De Smet site. For the South Platte site, the amount recommended would provide for the acquisition and clearing of the site, the construction of a road thereto, the assembling of the plant, the construction of the outlet works, and the building of the main part of the dam to the height of 40 or 50 feet.

The entire construction of both the Piney and Cloud Peak reservoirs should not take more than three years.

X.—THE FUNCTION OF RESERVOIRS.

The provision of the river and harbor act directing this investigation requires, among other things, a report upon the desirability of reservoir construction for certain general purposes. It is important, therefore, to examine into the nature of these purposes and to inquire what the true function of a reservoir is.

In no other portion of her works has nature left so much to be done by the engineer to supplement her deficiencies as in the modification of the natural flow of her streams, for in no other respect are her works so ill adapted to the uses of man. The ideal stream would be one in which the flow should be uniform from one year's end to the other, or, if not uniform, varying directly with the magnitude of the uses to which it is put. Nature presents no perfect example of this ideal, and in only one important instance does she closely approach it.

The flow of her streams is subject to the most radical variations, the maximum discharge of the larger ones often being as much as thirty times the minimum, while in the smaller streams the ratio is much greater. These Irregularities of flow have no economical relation to commercial or other uses of the stream. In the autumn season, when crops are being moved and the demand for transportation facilities is at a maximum, the streams are in their lowest stage and their navigation subject to the most serious interruption of the entire year. In regions dependent upon the flow of the streams for agricultural development high water occurs at such times and in such magnitude that it can not nearly all be used. The result is, that millions of acres of fertile land remain in a desert condition where they might be made productive if only the waste water could be utilized. In fact, all enterprises dependent upon the use of running water are liable to interruptions and suspension for indefinite and irregular periods, and the benefits which come from uniform and continuous use are not to be expected from them.

The most formidable evils arising from this variable condition of natural streams is experienced in the deficiency period, but the period of excess has likewise great disadvantages. It not only comes at a time when ordinarily there is least need of it, but it not infrequently brings with it appalling disasters. Among the most calamitous of natural visitations, considering their frequency and general distribution, are great floods. They hold the record even above earthquakes and storms. They mark the history of nearly every stream, great or small, and the loss of life and property from this cause, in the history of the past, transcends calculation.

It is not surprising, therefore, that one of the chief concerns of the engineer is the amelioration or prevention of the evils of this unfortunate arrangement of nature. Millions of dollars are annually expended to make up for the deficiency of water in seasons of drought, and like sums to prevent or alleviate the evils of excessive flow. Singularly enough the measures generally adopted are put forward in disregard of one of the commonest rules of scientific practice. If an evil condition of things is to be corrected, the rational method of procedure is to remove the cause. In all river engineering, however, the measures adopted look only to the palliation of results, and leave the cause untouched. River channels are dredged out in low water, and levees are built to protect from floods in high water. Scarcely anywhere is the effort made to prevent the occurrence of either high or low water. It would naturally follow that, if great evils result from the variable flow of streams, the primary and fundamental object of the engineer who is called upon to correct them would be to make this flow uniform. Whether or not this object is possible of realization (and if it is, by what means) is therefore one of the first questions which should be settled in any comprehensive project for the regulation of the flow of streams.

Inasmuch as human agency can exercise no appreciable influence over those climatic conditions upon which variations of stream flow depend, such as the precipitation of moisture and the melting of snow, it is evident that the ultimate causes of the evil conditions just described must ever elude the efforts of man to control them. The sources of the streams are clearly destined to remain as variable in the future as in the past. The only possible method by which uniformity of flow can be secured must therefore be by storing the surplus waters in seasons of flood and releasing them in seasons of drought. The agencies employed for this purpose are called reservoirs (Latin re-servare, to keep back).

There is an additional motive for the use of reservoirs besides that of securing uniformity of flow. Over a large portion of the land area of the earth in civilized countries the climate of winter prevents any considerable use of the streams. Even if the flow were entirely uniform, that portion which takes place in the season of cold weather would mostly be lost. To derive any benefit from it, it must be stored and held over for the season of warm weather.

These two purposes, viz, the attainment of uniformity of stream flow and the transfer of the winter supply to the summer months cover the entire argument for reservoir construction. Even reservoirs built for city supply, milling purposes, and the like, which seem but little related to regularity of stream flow, are in reality caused directly by it, for if streams were uniform in flow the supply might as well be taken directly from them without the intervention of reservoirs.

At first thought it would seem that in storage reservoirs lies the whole solution of the river problem. To store the surplus in flood season and use it in the season of drought ought apparently to strike at the root of the whole difficulty, and to render unnecessary those palliative measures which alone have hitherto received the sanction of the hydraulic engineer. Why so obvious a remedy has never yet been extensively applied will appear in the course of this report.

In 1892 there occurred one of the most disastrous floods that ever took place in the region about the sources of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. The destruction along some of the streams was very great. Roads and railroads were washed away, bridges destroyed, and much other damage done. But the Yellowstone River below the lake rose only a few feet, and that so gradually as to give timely notice of any possible damage.

There are many thousands of other lakes scattered over the globe that act as regulators of the streams which drain them, their efficiency in this respect being proportional to the percentage which their areas bear to the tributary watersheds. Certain it is that the aggregate influence of these reservoirs is very great, and the striking difference often noted in the characteristics of the flow of streams with similar watersheds may largely be traced to this cause. Take, for example, the figures already quoted, giving the ratios between high and low water on the Ohio, Missouri, and Upper Mississippi rivers for 1883, and also the corresponding ratios for the mean of the six years 1880-85. These ratios are: For 1883, Ohio 22.2, Missouri 29, Mississippi 10.3; for 1881-85, Ohio 21.7, Missouri 18.4, Mississippi 9.3.

The Upper Mississippi watershed lies between those of the Ohio and the Missouri, and the climatic conditions which prevail there ought to partake somewhat of those which prevail on each side. At any rate, it is impossible to suppose any such pronounced difference as would account for the above difference in ratio. The high-water discharge in the Ohio and Missouri often amounts to nearly thirty times the low-water discharge, while the mean ratio for a series of years is about twenty. For the Upper Mississippi the figures are only 10.3 and 9.3. No explanation of this fact seems so reasonable as that which attributes it to the moderating influence of the great number of natural lakes upon the head waters of this stream.

XII.—ARTIFICIAL RESERVOIRS.

While it is impracticable, for reasons stated further on, to imitate nature on the scale of her own work in the construction of reservoirs, her example has nevertheless been followed very extensively on a smaller scale. In fact, works of this character have been built for a variety of purposes since the remotest antiquity. The storage of water for feeding canals is a prominent example. The greatest reservoir systems yet constructed have been designed to maintain the navigable condition of natural waterways. Many reservoirs have had as a prominent reason for their construction the prevention of floods in the valleys below them. In all these examples of reservoir construction the purpose has been to correct the inequalities of nature—to prevent the rapid and destructive flow of rivers at seasons when not needed and to augment and reinforce that flow when the need does exist.

One of the most extensive artificial systems ever built is to be found in Russia at the head waters of the Volga and Msta rivers. The extreme low water which is characteristic of the Volga and other Russian streams prevents navigation in their natural condition except in seasons of high water.

To ameliorate this condition, advantage was early taken of the exceptional reservoir facilities offered by the lakes referred to, and dams of a cheap character were constructed across their outlets. The reservoir system has now been developed to great perfection and effects an important improvement both in the Volga and the Msta, rendering them navigable for nearly three months longer than they would be without this aid.

These reservoirs store about 35,000,000,000 cubic feet of water in all, of which 20,000,000,000 can be used in the Volga and 20,000,000,000 can be turned in the other direction, there being apparently a storage of about five or six billions that can be used in either direction. The largest and most important of these reservoirs, and one of the largest in the world in point of capacity, although insignificant in depth and containing dam, is the Verkhnevoljsky Reservoir. So slight is the fall of the stream in this region that, although the dam produces a maximum elevation of water surface at its site of only about 17.5 feet, the water backs up a distance of about 60 miles and includes several lakes. The low-water season capacity of this reservoir is about 14,000,000,000 cubic feet, and the average season storage is much greater. Its effect upon the low-water flow of the river below the dam is to raise its normal surface 2.8 feet at Rief, 96 miles below; 1.4 feet at Tver, the mouth of the Tvertsa, 212 miles below, and 0.14 foot at 410 miles below. At the mouth of the Tvertsa the storage of the Zavodsky Reservoir comes in and helps out the navigation below. The total navigable distance on the Volga over which the beneficial influence of these reservoirs is felt is upward of 450 miles.

The system of reservoirs just described is certainly a great success, and upon it much of the prosperity of the surrounding country depends. It is probably the most complete example in the world of the joint results of flood prevention and the improvement of navigation produced by artificial reservoirs.

XIII.—RESERVOIRS AND FLOOD PREVENTION.

Every reservoir built along the course of a stream is, to some degree, a protection against floods in the valley below. The extent of this protection depends, of course, almost entirely on the ratio of its capacity to the flood discharge. A reservoir that can store the entire flow of a stream—as, for example, the proposed reservoir on the Sweetwater—is an absolute protection against floods for a considerable distance below. It is difficult to propose any general rule for the extent of this control, but, assuming a general similarity of watershed, it would seem not unreasonable to say that it ought to be decisive to at least such a distance below as will give an additional watershed to a stream equal to twice that above the reservoir. This is simply saying that, in the general case, the reduction of a flood wave by one-third of its volume will rob it of its destructive character.

But in a great many cases this control extends very much farther. For example, in the case of a flood caused by the rapid melting of snows in the mountains, reservoirs below which can impound this flood will protect the entire valley so far as its destructive influence would otherwise have reached. When it is remembered that the volume of a destructive flood is only a part—probably always less than half—of the total flow of a year, it will be admitted that a storage capacity equal to one-fourth of the run-off, well distributed throughout a watershed, will practically eliminate the evil effects of floods in its streams. This is the percentage shown farther on to be sufficient for purposes of irrigation. (See page 60.)

In only very few places has nature prepared sites where man can erect works which will create large bodies of water, and even if she had done so the gain from utilizing them would not equal the loss. The reservoir system of the Great Lakes involves the perpetual withdrawal from agriculture and industrial uses of an area nearly twice the size of the State of New York. Were these areas not covered with water, but occupied as the surrounding country now is, yet so fitted by nature that man, at slight expense, could convert them into great lakes, as at present, the utter impossibility of such a measure is evident at a glance. And so it will be found in general that the surface of the earth, where reservoirs could be built on an extensive scale, is liable to be of more value in its present condition than it ever could be if covered with water.

The construction of reservoirs for flood protection is not, therefore, to be expected, except where the reservoir is to serve some other purpose as well, and inasmuch as such purposes are not ordinarily extensive enough to develop systems of reservoirs, upon which, rather than upon isolated works, the control of great floods depends, this large control is hardly one of the possibilities of the future. The only probable exception is that of a reservoir system on the watershed of the Missouri River, treated of in the next section of this report.

On the Missouri River the case with regard to reservoirs is somewhat different. The annual flood of that stream, which is known as the "June rise," is essentially a head-water flood. The earlier floods are generally, although not always, from the lower river, and very rarely from the extreme upper sources. The June rise is the mountain flood, bringing down the snow water, and generally augmented by the spring rains both in the mountains and on the plains below. Not infrequently it meets with heavy contributions all the way down, and is the result of a general high water over all its drainage area. Ordinarily, however, as already stated, it is a head-water flood, and coming as it does while the banks are still soft and yielding from previous high water, it does its full share of the destructive work peculiar to the Missouri River.

That a complete system of reservoirs in the mountains and plains portion of the watershed of this stream, which should embrace its many tributaries and contain the waters from melting snows and spring rains, would materially reduce the magnitude of the June rise is highly probable. To take off the flood excesses at Sioux City, mentioned by Mr. Seddon in the first section of his memoir, would require a storage of, say, 48,400,000,000 cubic feet, corresponding to a reduction in stage of 2.8 feet. A storage of 100,000,000,000 would probably give the very material reduction of 6 feet. Allowing a reservoir efficiency of only 50 per cent, as elsewhere explained, and assuming that no one of the great floods of the Missouri has its origin in more than one-half of its watershed, it would seem that a reservoir system of 400,000,000,000 cubic feet, distributed over the watershed above Sioux City, would quite effectually control the floods of the river. This amount of storage is about the percentage of total flow required to be stored for irrigation, as hereafter explained, in order that the water of the arid region may be fully utilized.

Mr. President, I will say in passing that the States of Wyoming and Colorado, fortunately or unfortunately, are situated at a greater altitude than any other States in the Union. Colorado is first and Wyoming second. They both drain into the head waters, one into the extreme head waters, the other not far down, of the Missouri River. Therefore, when we ask that the reservoirs shall be built in the arid and semiarid region, it does not lie in the mouth of anyone to say that we do it alone because that country is arid, or that we seek it for irrigation alone. The place to impound the water is where you have water to impound. It is safe to assume, if you want to use water for navigation, that the most valuable place to husband it for the benefit of streams is near the head of the streams, where the entire channel and length may get the benefit both of its retention at flood time and its liberation in drought time. It is safe to assume, if you want to prevent the overflow and erosion of banks, that the place to conserve the water is at the head waters of the streams. The same as to replenishing in low-water season.

So the matter of conserving this water in the arid region takes care of itself almost automatically. There is another point to this. We might go to the Ohio River Valley and east of the Mississippi River and undertake to reservoir water; but there is no certainty of such success there as in the Rocky Mountains. The floods there come haphazard, at any or all times of the year. At some times they are extreme and are almost too large to be impounded in any ordinary reservoirs, and in others for a great many months or a year the reservoirs would be empty, not having rains or floods.

But there is a country west where we can go and store the water on lines of regularity and certainty, where for from seven to ten months in the year there will be no water—but all is snowfall—in the mountains. We know that during the two or four remaining months the snow will melt and run down and overflow and carry away the banks, and wash debris, trees, and stumps into the river, unless diverted or held back.

I beg to again quote Engineer H. M. Chittenden:

We now come to the specific question of reservoir construction in the arid region west of the one hundredth meridian, as exemplified by the reservoir sites examined in Wyoming and Colorado. Are there direct and primary motives which would justify reservoir construction in this country apart from or in addition to those arising from their effect upon the regimen of the lower rivers? The answer must be that in no other part of the United States, nor anywhere else in the world, are there such potent and conclusive reasons, of a public as well as a private nature, for the construction of a comprehensive reservoir system as in the region here in question.

It is not intended in this report to enter at all into the subject of irrigation. That subject has been exhaustively treated for many years in public reports, and the mass of official literature relating to it is so great that anything further in that line would be superfluous. It will be referred to here only to show its supreme influence in the reservoir problem of the Far West. Of the very great importance of irrigation, not only to the West but to the country at large, there would seem to be no room for doubt. To one who has seen the changes wrought in the once desert regions of California, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, and Colorado, in what used to be as forbidding regions as any still remaining in that country, there can be no doubt that the destiny of the arid section of America is more dependent upon the waters that flow from its mountains than upon the minerals that lie concealed within them. Already in the greatest mineral-producing States of the West, California and Colorado, irrigated agriculture yields a greater wealth of product than the mines. It is easy to point out many valleys in the arid regions, the future development of which, under irrigation, will sustain in each a population greater than that at present is to be found in the States where they are located. There can be scarcely a doubt that the ultimate extent of this development is limited only by the capacity of the streams, and the vital and controlling function of these streams in the future welfare of a vast extent of the national domain is a matter too obvious to require demonstration.

But to utilize fully this element of national growth something more must be done than to take these streams as nature has created them. Already in many sections the natural flow has been used as far as it is practicable to do so. The only resource left is to store that portion of the flow that runs away in nonirrigation seasons and the surplus in times of annual flood and sudden freshets and make these also available for use. Not until that is done can a stream be said to be really utilized to the fullest extent.

Here, then, is a definite reason of the highest validity for the construction of reservoirs. It is of itself a sufficient reason, without any reference to the incidental benefits to the streams below.

Another particular and definite reason is flood protection along the streams immediately below the reservoirs. The destructive power of mountain floods is sometimes very great, and damages of vast amount have been wrought by them. The damage from these mountain floods will, of course, increase with the settlement of the country. Well-built, capacious reservoirs are an almost complete protection against such floods, and their usefulness in this respect will be an important consideration in their favor.

While there are these clear and positive arguments in favor of the storage of the surplus flow of our Western streams, there are none of weight against it. It may be set down as a rule, to which there are very few exceptions, that every artificial body of water created in the West, by which the surplus water of its streams is held back, will be a positive benefit. There are some who go even so far as to think that the influence of these stored waters, which would cause the streams to return to vapor in the near locality of their origin instead of flowing down to the sea, would have a marked beneficial effect upon the rate of precipitation in the West.

The inevitable tendency of Western development is therefore to store the waters of the streams, and the limit of development in this direction seems certainly to be nothing less than the final utilization of all their flow. As reservoirs are indispensable aids to this end, it will be seen that their construction as an element of growth of the Western country is not merely "desirable"—it is absolutely necessary. The only question in this connection that admits of doubt or uncertainty is, What is the proper agency to do the work?

XVI.—RESERVOIR CONSTRUCTION IN THE ARID REGIONS.

How can it be best accomplished?—Reservoir construction in the West can be accomplished by any of five agencies, or by all together. Two of these are of a private nature, viz, private individuals and companies or corporations. The other three are of a public nature, and are irrigation districts, the States, and the General Government. Let these several agencies be considered in the above order.

Private individuals.—It is easy to see that reservoir construction can not be carried on single handed by individuals except upon a very limited scale. When a reservoir is built upon any site it is important that the capacity of the site and the stream be fully developed. But such works are ordinarily very expensive. Even if the financial resources of the individual would permit the construction, the use he could make of it afterwards would probably not require as large a reservoir as could be built, and he certainly could not be expected to build for the benefit of others. The result would be that very few works of magnitude would be commenced at all and those commenced would probably not be what the true capacity of the sites would call for.

Again, it is wholly improbable that works so built, looking only to immediate returns upon investments, would be of that permanent and enduring character which it is greatly to be desired that they should possess.

The same argument, in a less degree, applies to corporate management of these works. In the matter of financial requirement the problem could possibly be solved in this way. But no investment is feasible unless the investor can control the property of which it is made the subject.

Now, water is perhaps the most elusive of all forms of property. The owner must not only control the source of supply, but the place of application as well. If it be the supply of a city and a company has secured its monopoly, if it be a canal, or if it be a definite site for the development of water power, then the difficulties of the situation are reduced to a minimum. But when it comes to applying water to land the case is different. To insure a remunerative use of the water supply it is necessary to control the land where it is to be applied. There are several examples in the more limited valleys of the short coast streams of California where this has been done with some measure of success. But one has only to examine the history of these works, and consider the vast amount of financial failure which has accompanied them, and the interminable litigation to which they have given rise, to see that even in this favorable section the method has been far from an unqualified success. There are doubtless few people in California to-day who will not admit that it would have been better if these works could all have been constructed under some sort of public control. When it comes to other sections of the country the conditions would be still more unfavorable. In Wyoming the policy of small holdings is far better established than in California. Corporate control of large areas is more difficult, and the streams are of such length, and the benefits of the sources of supply reach so far, that it would be impossible to control them all.

The matter of private or corporate construction of these storage works is therefore seen to be one of very doubtful practicability from a financial view alone, while in neither case is it likely that reservoir sites would be developed to their full capacity, as they should be, but only to the extent that would be most advantageous to the investment itself. The result would be, from a public point of view, an incomplete and imperfect system.

There is another view of great public importance which also tends in the same direction. It is becoming more and more apparent in the course of irrigation development in the West that the waters of the streams should not be made the subject of private property, but that they should inhere in the land to which they are applied, and that purchase or sale of water as a commodity should not be allowed. Although in most States the contrary doctrine has hitherto prevailed, the disposition of the courts at present and the views of practical irrigators seem to incline more and more to the doctrine of the public character of all streams. In one State, Wyoming, this more enlightened doctrine has gained a secure foothold, and the entire administration of the water laws is based upon it. That State has profited by the mistakes of others, and although great pressure has been exerted in favor of the opposing doctrine, it has not yet yielded in a single point. It is clear that this principle can best be promoted, so far as stored waters are concerned, by having the storage works public property. Their construction by private agencies is hardly separable from the control and disposition of the water as a commodity.

A proper development of a storage system for the waters of Western streams, it is thus seen, can not be expected through private agencies. It must be accomplished through some form of public control.

State or nation.—There remain to be considered the States and the Federal Government as the only agencies qualified to create a comprehensive reservoir system in the West. In many respects the arguments which apply to Federal control of these works apply equally to State control. In each case the agency is in the broadest sense a public one, each being within its proper sphere the sovereign power of the people, deriving its revenues from general taxation without regard to the special purpose to which the revenue is applied. It will, therefore, only be necessary here to inquire which of the two will be most likely to produce effective results.

In the first place, the work is distinctly interstate in character, and is, therefore, less properly a State than a national enterprise. In scarcely any State except those on the Pacific coast are the streams confined to limits of the States. Wyoming, for example, is the fountain head of streams that flow to every point of the compass and traverse or border upon no fewer than twenty other States or Territories. The same is true in a less degree of Colorado. There is no reservoir that can be built in either of these States the influence of which will not cross its borders and be felt in other States. With a comprehensive system of reservoirs this matter would become one of great importance, and the continued settlement of the country and the progressive utilization of the streams will render it one of perpetual concern to the public. Already the interstate character of some of these streams is giving rise to troublesome questions, which only Federal authority can answer. Nebraska has complained of the monopoly of the waters of the South Platte by the State of Colorado. Irrigators in Wyoming have felt the drain on the river Laramie by Colorado parties, who have turned away into their own streams, just south of the border, a considerable percentage of its flow. There have been complaints in Utah over appropriation by the State of Wyoming of the waters of Bear River, already claimed by Utah irrigators. That more of these questions have not already arisen is only because the natural flow of the streams has not yet been all used up. So long as there is water enough, of course there will be no serious complaint.

In the case of reservoirs it not infrequently happens that some of the very best sites are to be found close to State lines, where the waters so stored will flow immediately into neighboring States. In these extreme cases the States where they are located could not, of course, be expected to construct reservoirs, and the States to be benefited would not be likely to go outside their own borders to do so. The function clearly pertains to that sovereignty which covers all the country and embraces the streams from their sources to the sea. It alone can store these waters and be sure that it is reaping the full benefit.

The policy of the Government in the matter of the preservation of the forests of the country is a case directly in point. There seems to be a well-nigh universal consensus of opinion that the preservation of the forests of the arid regions is distinctly a Government duty. Considerable appropriations have been made for the surveys of proposed reservations, and ways and means for their preservation are being considered. Now, one of the great arguments always advanced in favor of forest preservation is the influence which forests are supposed to have in conserving the flow of the streams. Inasmuch as the commercial value of these forests is practically insignificant, except for furnishing fuel and rough timber, the water question is really the more important one. If it is properly a Government function to preserve the forests in order to conserve the flow of the streams, surely it can not be less a Government function to execute works which will conserve that flow even more positively and directly. Granting all that can be said of forests in this connection, they certainly can never prevent the June rise, and it is precisely this waste flow which reservoirs will help to save. The forests ought unquestionably to be preserved, and the Government is the proper agency to do it, but the principal arguments therefor apply with accentuated force to the construction of reservoirs.

Another reason why the Government should have an interest in this work is that it is the largest landowner in the arid West. In Wyoming, over 90 per cent of the soil belongs to the Government, and its holdings throughout the West include millions of acres which can be reclaimed from their present desert condition and made productive lands. In this respect, Government assistance in providing water for irrigation is a simple business proposition for the enhancement of its own property.

In the matter of resources, we at once encounter an insuperable obstacle to extensive public works on the part of most of the States. Their revenues will not permit it. In some States taxation is limited by the constitution to certain percentage of valuation. The State in such a case, if without sufficient revenue, is absolutely forestalled from carrying on works which might enhance the value of property in the State and lead to increased revenue. There is no discoverable method by which adequate means can be obtained for State works of any magnitude at this stage of their development unless, as urged by some, it be through a gift to the States of the public lands within their borders. As this is a matter of vital importance, not only to the future development of the West, but to the particular question with which we are here concerned, a brief reference to it will be given.

In order to facilitate the development of the country under the rapidly changing industrial conditions of the West, and particularly to provide the States with an increased revenue, it is being strongly urged in various quarters that the public lands be ceded to the States. It is then proposed to use the nonirrigable lands, which are only fit for grazing, in connection with irrigable lands, so that the holder of irrigable land upon any stream may hold also a good extent of grazing land contiguous thereto, and that the grazing lands of the West may be so divided that every portion shall have access to water somewhere. The free-range industry is practically a thing of the past, and is, by its very nature, incompatible with the permanent settlement of the country. Since the latter is bound to come about sooner or later, a division of the grazing lands would seem to be a necessity of the near future, and the public-land laws will have to be modified to secure this end.

It is argued that if the lands are ceded to the States under proper restriction they can be leased at a small rental (1 cent per annum per acre has been suggested), and the States can thus derive enough revenue to enable them to undertake the works in question. Prof. Elwood Mead, State engineer of Wyoming, estimates that the revenue from this source in the State of Wyoming would be $500,000. Of the soundness of this view as to the proper distribution of the public lands it is not essential to the purposes of this report to speak. The ends sought to be attained by it are undoubtedly necessary to the welfare of that section of the country, and it is greatly to be desired that the Government will assist in bringing them about. If it will not cede the lands to the States outright it could at least pass laws to facilitate their proper disposition under existing conditions, and it could aid in the construction of those public works of national importance which the deficient revenues of the States prevent them from undertaking.

In the course of my investigations I have found a well-nigh unanimous public sentiment in favor of Government aid in the construction of these important works. Such adverse opinions as I have encountered have been based almost entirely upon the assumption that the project contemplates Government control of irrigation works. This I do not understand to be the case at all. If it were it would certainly be a conclusive objection to the whole scheme. The time was, some fifteen or twenty years ago, when the inauguration of a comprehensive policy by the Government for the development of irrigation in the arid regions might have been productive of much good; but that opportunity has passed. The States have taken up the work and the whole system is now built up under State laws, interpreted by State courts, and administered by State officials. There is no reason to think that this is not the best possible arrangement. The States occupy the place in matters of this sort which, in foreign countries, as India, France, Canada, etc., is occupied by the Government.

A corps of trained engineers has grown up in the West, as fully qualified in every respect for their work as the profession affords. The works themselves are strictly local, confined to the people of the State, and only very rare instances concerning any others. So far as distributing systems, water rights, etc., are concerned it is in every way better, in fact indispensable, to have these matters entirely in the hands of the States. The results of my investigations have shown nothing else more clearly, and this report must not be construed as in any way indorsing the project of Government control of irrigation works. In only one case can there be any ground for asking Government aid in the construction of distributing systems. If it ever becomes advisable to attempt to turn the waters of the larger streams over great extents of country, involving the construction of canals perhaps hundreds of miles long and passing from one State to another, then the magnitude and interstate character of the work might give it a claim to consideration by the General Government.

In the matter of storage reservoirs the case is entirely different. Their purpose is simply to enlarge and reinforce the natural resources of the streams, leaving the use of their waters to be disposed of exactly as at present—unless indeed an occasional exercise of control were necessary in times of flood or other emergency. The works are not solely of local importance, but have an interstate character. The case is in every respect like that of the Government control and preservation of forests, to which attention has already been called.

Another objection to Government construction which I have met with is based upon the idea that no such work ought to be constructed unless it will clearly pay a good return upon its cost, and it is urged that in such a case private capital itself would take up the work. Two errors underlie this argument. In the first place, a work may be a justifiable and profitable one from a public point of view when it would not be so at all as a private investment. As already explained, the benefits which a reservoir may give rise to are generally not capable of such control as will give a revenue from them.

Judged, therefore, by the mere question of dollars and cents, a work may be entirely justifiable as a public enterprise which would be ruinous as a private investment.

The other error involves a fundamental misconception of the aim and purpose of public works. It should be remembered that the works herein proposed are of the most substantial and enduring character. River improvements, fortifications, public buildings, and the like are liable to destruction and decay, but a mass of earth or masonry properly placed in a great dam becomes as lasting as the hills which inclose it. Constructed to endure for all time, the benefits which flow from these works will be perpetual. It is not for the Government, therefore, with its lease of life altogether beyond that of an individual or company, to limit its expense as an individual would to the certainty of entire reimbursement within a few years. When it improves a site, it should improve it once for all to its full capacity with the most thorough and substantial workmanship, making the work final and complete, being certain that the heavy first expense will be ultimate economy.

The foregoing examination has led up to the following conclusions:
First. A comprehensive reservoir system in the arid regions of the United States is absolutely essential to the future welfare of this portion of the national domain.

Second. It is not possible to secure the best development of such a system except through the agency of the General Government.

Thus far the question of the "practicability and desirability" of Government patronage of these works admits of a definite answer in the affirmative. As to the questions of public policy involved in such a step, it is assumed that their consideration was not intended to be embraced in this report.

XVII.—PRACTICAL WORKINGS.

Before entering upon any work of construction, the Government should acquire full title to the site of the reservoir and accessory works. It should secure cession by the State of jurisdiction to the site, so as to release the land from taxation and other regulations pertaining to the local government. It should also obtain a right to the streams for filling the reservoir, so far at least as to preclude others from interfering with the uses for which it is built. It should then construct the work itself, and not by subsidy or donation either to the State or private parties. It should hold and maintain the work after construction just as it does its other public works. The use of the waters so stored should be absolutely free to the people forever, just as the canals, harbors, and other public works are free for general use without toll or levy of any kind. The Government should have the right to close the reservoirs in times of flood, and to exercise any other control which might be deemed essential to the public welfare on the streams in the valleys below. Subject to these conditions, the waters of the reservoirs should be available for irrigation, municipal, or other industrial uses, and should be released upon requisition of the proper State officer (ordinarily the State engineer) in such quantities as may be required. The waters so released should be subject to the same local laws and regulations as pertain to the streams in their natural condition.

In this relation of nation and State there is no room for any clash of authority, and there need be none. The reservoir would always be under a control which would insure its efficient maintenance and the widest possible range of benefits, and at the same time it would not interfere in the least with local use. The only office of the Government in this work would be that of rendering available certain natural resources which now go to waste. Its province would end here, and the use and distribution of the resources so conserved would be governed wholly by local regulations. Should Government control and regulation of navigable streams be extended to include the storage of any portion of their surplus waters in the arid regions, such an extension will apparently cause an increase of only about one-seventh in the present expenditure, while it will tend to secure a more equitable distribution of that expenditure among all sections of the country.

A feature of great importance pertaining to the cost of public works of the character of this proposed reservoir construction merits particular attention in comparison with that of other public works of the Government. When a reservoir is once constructed, there will be no further occasion for expense except for maintenance, which, as before stated, will not exceed 1 per cent annually upon the original cost. With the present river and harbor works, and even with public buildings, this is not so. The growing requirements of business and the perishable nature of many kinds of work keep up an increasing demand for further appropriations. But a reservoir once built as it should be is a thing done. Its capacity, if sufficient at first, will be sufficient forever. No increase of business will make the run off from its watershed any greater or render it less adequate for the purpose for which it was designed. Its immunity from deterioration or decay will make it unnecessary ever to replace it. In fact, an expenditure of this sort possesses the almost unique merit of being one that the Government may know is final when once made.

XIX.—SUMMARY.

The substance of the foregoing report may be briefly summarized as follows:

- (1) All varieties of reservoir sites or of dam construction likely to be encountered in the arid section of the United States are exemplified in the sites considered in this report.
- (2) Five reservoir systems have been examined under the provisions of the act of June 3, 1896—three in Wyoming and two in Colorado.
- (3) The function of reservoirs will always be primarily the promotion of industrial ends; secondarily only, a possible amelioration of flood conditions in the rivers.
- (4) While it is perhaps physically practicable to build reservoirs of sufficient aggregate capacity on the watershed of any stream, even so large a stream as the Mississippi, as to exercise some influence in diminishing the height of floods, the great cost of such works, as compared with the results to be expected from them, will always prohibit their construction, unless it is called for by other and more direct causes.
- (5) A general system of reservoirs in the arid regions sufficient to contain the flow of the streams over what it is possible to draw from them directly in irrigation would, it is believed, cause some reduction in the flood height of the Missouri River during the June rise. The amount of this reduction would of course depend upon the distance of the section of river considered from the points of storage, and would diminish rapidly with an increase of this distance.
- (6) Reservoir construction in the arid regions of the West is an indispensable condition to the highest development of that section. It can properly be carried out only through public agencies. Private enterprise can never accomplish the work successfully. As between State and nation it falls more properly under the domain of the latter.
- (7) Reservoir construction by the General Government need not in any way involve Government control of irrigation works. These should be left in the hands of the States and of private individuals under State laws.
- (8) The Government should acquire full title and jurisdiction to any site which it might improve and full right to the water necessary to fill the reservoir. It should build, own, maintain, and operate the works itself. It should hold the stored waters absolutely free to public use under local regulations, subject only to the right to close the reservoir whenever flood protection or other emergency should require.
- (9) The total extent of a reservoir system in the arid regions which shall render available the entire flow of the streams will not exceed 1,161,600,000 cubic feet. If the construction of such a system were to consume a century in time, it would represent an annual storage of about 11,600,000,000 cubic feet, or 266,300 acre-feet. At $5.37 per acre-foot this would cost $1,430,081 per annum. This amount, distributed among the seventeen States and Territories of the arid section, gives an annual average expenditure in each of $84,119. The annual value of the stored water would return the original cost and maintenance in an average period of three years.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for the purpose of making a report from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. WARREN. I shall be compelled to yield to my colleague.
Mr. CARTER. I submit a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, and ask that the preliminary statement, which is very brief and descriptive of the general material embraced in the report, be read by the Secretary.

Mr. HOAR. Does that require unanimous consent while the other conference report is under consideration. If so, I object.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Senator from Wyoming yielded. It will take only a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a conference report is before the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. This is not a conference report. It is a mere report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN. So far as I am concerned, while I do not wish to yield the floor for debate, because I am not through, I do not desire to block any business that is ready for consummation, like a conference report or any other advanced matter. I want to hurry along the business of the Senate. I desire to say right here that if any Senator thinks I am talking against time he is mistaken. I want to see the river and harbor bill pass, and I think it will pass if we can have an understanding.

Mr. HOAR. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator from Wyoming as to his item. I think the wish of all those people for a moderate expenditure upon this experiment demands the assent of the Senate and of the Congress. I wish to stand by that. But, if I may be permitted, we must remember that under the Constitution of the United States it requires the assent of the two Houses to every measure. When a bill is made up of a hundred items—

Mr. WARREN. I have supposed that, too, but I find on the other side that we have nothing to say about it.

Mr. HOAR. They are the representatives of the House, and when a bill is composed of a hundred items which are separate and independent, in the end the body proposing an affirmative piece of legislation, which the other side does not agree to, must yield. There is no other way to get along with it. Otherwise you are forcing one body to yield its opinion, and to vote for a measure which it does not approve. I do not see very well how we can refuse to recognize the regular authorized agencies of that House, their representatives on the conference committee, as directly representing their opinion. That is what a conference committee is to get at—the opinion of the other body. So if the House puts an affirmative measure of legislation on one of these appropriation bills, made up of items, and the Senate objects to it, the House have to yield, because they have satisfied themselves that it ought to be done. The same thing applies to us. I can not undertake myself to unite in an attempt to compel the House to do what they do not want to do, or to defeat a bill which contains measures we all want. I will stand with the Senator here through thick and thin on his irrigation policy, but I can not follow him on this.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. The bill contains an affront put upon me personally and my State, so that I have as much feeling about it as he has, but I do not see that anything is to be gained by abandoning what is good.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to say that the report can only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts has objected to receiving the report at this time. I withhold the report, and will present it later. I yield the floor again to the Senator from Wyoming, and thank him for his courtesy.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to thank the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and I give due heed to what he says. I think the Senator will admit it is hardly the thing for a conference committee to meet with an understanding on one side that there shall not be the slightest consideration or notice taken of some one item, no matter how important, and therefore no true conference thereon.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to yield to me for the purpose of making a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, and if there is no objection, I ask that the accompanying bill may be acted upon at this time.

Mr. FRYE. I shall have to object.

Mr. SHOUP. It is only a few lines. It is a short bill.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to say to the Senator from Massachusetts when my attention was diverted that I agree with him perfectly as to the manner in which legislation ought to be conducted, but the proceedings here are an exception in that this bill has been in conference upon a basis like this: "We of the House conferees will take you by the throat. As to one or two items we will not confer; we will not report a disagreement; we will not give any chance to get a further expression from either this or the other House." These men have taken such methods and they do not deny it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming will suspend, that the Senate may receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. BARNEY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10771) for the relief of Eudora Hill; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 6,000 additional copies of the eulogies upon the late Nelson Dingley, a Representative from the State of Maine; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11083) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, upon which the committee of conference have been unable to agree, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11577) for the relief of B. F. Parlett, collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

A MISTAKEN ESTIMATE.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to say to the Senator from Massachusetts, in explanation of this most extraordinary conduct and the feeling that has been exhibited by certain members in another part of this building, that they seem to be laboring under an entire misapprehension. They hold up their hands in holy horror, claiming to fear that this is the entering wedge to loot the Treasury of the United States entirely, and they talk about it costing not millions, and I use their language verbatim: "It will take billions of dollars if that amendment goes in and we follow the work up."

Mr. President, they have gone forward in all these years on the Mississippi River and its head waters, building dams at the cost rate of $1,800,000 for 41 dams. We are asking to build one only, and to examine and report to us whether it is practicable and whether it is feasible to build not to exceed 17 others.

Now, the project is, laid out briefly and to the point, these 41 reservoirs were built to take the snow waters and the rains of winter and spring and early summer and hold them back, letting them down later so that the impounded flood waters may raise the water line during low tide. It seems that Congress in making these appropriations was willing to appropriate money for the one object—that of raising the water at certain times in a certain part of the Mississippi River on account of the needs of commerce. We, on the other hand, ask in our project of reservoirs the consummation which they hardly expected to reach, that of preventing the erosion of banks and preventing the washing of debris from the hillsides into and along down the streams.

INCIDENTAL PROTECTION.

I have listened to debates upon various subjects about incidental protection. While it may be true that there have been times when certain Senators here would say they were free traders, or that they believed in free trade, yet I believe that at the present time not a single Senator serving his country is willing to admit that he is so intense a free trader that he will not afford incidental protection while providing for the collection of the revenue, etc. Here we have, and this seems to be where we offend, an incidental interest, that of irrigation, which can be subserved through use of this water for navigation purposes while en route from the reservoirs, where it has been retained, down to the streams where it will do its work in raising the water in times of drought.

Here is a project followed by Congress for a period of years which had simply one accomplishment in sight, and confessedly only one. We present a project which has that one, and another of equal and, I believe, greater importance, the second one being to prevent the overflow of streams and erosion of the banks; the third benefit, we modestly claim, is that incidentally we may receive some benefit to irrigation. Now, what has poor irrigation done that it should be so offensive to a body of enlightened men? Proposing to accomplish twice as much in building these reservoirs as those already built on the Mississippi, accomplishing two objects instead of one, why should this be ruled out on the ground that it may as a third benefit possibly help irrigation? What has been the offense of the arid States to raise the wrath, and the fury, almost, that seems to have existed at the other end of this Capitol?

ARID-LAND STATES.

I do not remember that any one of these arid-land States has outlawed itself in any manner in its connection with the Government of the United States. I do not understand that the States themselves, nor any of them, owe anything in money to the United States. I do understand, however, that in this spirit of intolerance which seems to exist somewhere against the arid States, certain arid-land States having great claims against the Government, of which they have been deprived of the principal and interest for long years—claims originated by their advancing money to the United States troops—have had to take their medicine to-day from the Senate and House Claims Committee of conference, which cut out their claims from the omnibus bill for no reason under God Almighty's heaven except that the House does not want the Government to spend the money.

DON'T PAY OUR DEBTS.

There are States nominated in the river and harbor bill, States that are honored with great appropriations for rivers and harbors in every measure of the kind that passes that have owed money to the United States for years and years, and they do not pay it. Here, on the other hand, are arid-land States that put up their good money to pay troops and other expenses to preserve this Union way back in the time of its civil war and Indian troubles, and they can not collect a dollar—three and four and five million dollars to a State due from Uncle Sam. Nobody claims on either side of the Capitol that the money is not due. They do not make any denial of the fact that the States furnished the money in good faith, and yet they get together in a conference and the demand on the House side is that we shall take out of our measures for settlement of debts all the claims of States. Why? Simply because they think they can force it. There is no reason in it.

They not only do that, but they likewise treat private claims which originated way back in the war, those of poor widows, living to-day upon charity, and whose land and other property the United States took away from them in the war. They have come before Congress all these years since with those claims. They are admittedly right, and yet the House side will not permit payment. I have in mind a case in which General Grant wrote a letter, as warm a one as I ever saw his name affixed to, in which he said, "This woman should have $20,000 in cash for the property taken and destroyed. It is not near the value of the property we took from her. She was loyal. We took her property and used it during the war. She ought to have her money." She has been here repeatedly to Congress—again and again, and she finally got a bill through this body for how much? Ten thousand dollars. Any reasons given? Not at all. I had the honor to serve upon the committee before which the claim was pending, and I was confronted with the fact that the committee at a former time had cut it down to $10,000.

I went to every man who was on the committee and asked why they cut it down. No reason on earth was given, only they said we could not get it through on the other side, and we will make it ten thousand; and so we go on. When the appropriation bill comes up and we ask for anything, they say, "Trust us, boys, until to-morrow, and we will then give you what you want, but a rattle-box or a sugarplum must suffice for to-night; just amuse yourselves as best you can with it." For instance, the honorable Senator who has charge of deficiency bills says, "These claims are all right; they ought to be paid; I will tell you what you will do.

"If you do not put them on this particular bill, which we are anxious to get through and we are afraid you naughty boys are going to lay us out of so we will not get it through before the hour of adjournment comes, we will give you an extra thousand dollars to hire some extra clerical assistance, and you bring in a bill with all these claims in a bunch—rake up all the claims that have heretofore passed through the Senate, and be sure you do not have anything that there can be any dispute about. Take such claims as have passed both Houses of Congress; take those that passed the Senate one term and the House another, or that have passed the House; get them all, and put them in this omnibus gatherum, and we will pass it; we will see you through; and if you do not pass it in an omnibus bill then come to us on the deficiency bill and we will pass it then."

But, Mr. President, even to go back of that a little. A part of those claims not only passed this body singly repeatedly, but they passed both bodies at one session and went to one man who was bigger than both Houses of Congress, and he vetoed them. What did we do? Simply submitted to the cutting out of that two or three million dollars due from the Government to its creditors and passing the balance. Why? "It is too late to try it," they said. "We will do better the next time."

Now we come again and take the second thousand dollars for the extra expense of that same Claims Committee. The men toil all summer; the clerks have no vacation; they list up these different claims, State and individual; they again bring them in here as an omnibus bill, a bill containing nothing but claims that already had the sanction, each one upon its own merits, of at least one of the Houses of Congress and most of them of both.

What is the result? Mr. President, we get down to the end of the Congress, and again we have to submit, and again men who have no lack of nerve and backbone are compelled to say to House conferees: "We are at your mercy. Do what you will."

Now, Mr. President, those things are occurring all the time. States owing any amount of money to the United States do not pay any more attention to it than some of us individually do to bills that we can not pay. Yet these States come in here with their spoons every time and want large sums. Some, with streams that you can not find on the map, want great appropriations for them.

ARID-LAND STATES DO PAY.

In the arid country you can not mention to me a State in all that region which is indebted to the United States, but on the other hand they are your creditors. They come to Congress and time and time again appeal for the money they gave up for the civil and Indian wars; and coming down to this later war, what do we find? Simply that the different States and governors can not possibly get a settlement with the United States. We find the War Department, who have these things in charge, perfectly ready to pay, but lacking in legislation, and so we are again in debt for recent accounts, three or four million dollars to the States. Take these arid States. If we were out of the Union, if we had seceded or were seceding now, if we were talking against the policy of this Government, it would be different. But there is no section of the country, and I say it in the presence of those who know, that responded sooner to the country's call for troops. There is no part of this country that offered so many troops according to population as the States in this same arid region.

ARID REGION FURNISHES MANY TROOPS.

There is no part of this country that to-day on the field of battle has the same proportionate representation as the part of the country that is so neglected that it can not even get a hearing here, and can not get the benefit of a conference which will agree to report a disagreement.

Look over the forces that to-day are maintaining the dignity and honor of this country in the Philippines. Look and see who General Otis has under his command. You will find every one of these Western arid States represented. You will discover over there the First Washington, the Second Oregon, the First California, the First Nevada, the First Montana, the First Idaho, the First Wyoming, and also the First Wyoming Light Battery; you will also find a battery from Utah, the First Colorado, the First North Dakota, the First South Dakota, and others. You will find this entire country represented there, and, I maintain, most honorably represented. Pick up the list of dead and wounded as it appears from time to time in the daily newspapers. I venture the assertion that more than five-sixths of the dead and wounded in the Philippines have been from this same arid region.

Mr. THURSTON. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will not omit the First Nebraska.

Mr. WARREN. There is the First Nebraska and also a Kansas regiment. I thank the Senator for reminding me of it. I said these States are represented there, but I am in a hurry to get the bill passed and I do not want to stop to go into particulars.

Now, Mr. President, if there is any charge against that great country—great in acres, great in possibilities, great in honor, and great in the generosity of its people, though small in population—I ask that it may be made now and here.

ONE-MAN POWER.

How long, I ask, how long are we supposed to sit here, like a lot of dummies, and have it said to us that when we go into conference we even can not get a disagreement report back here, that we can not have another trial? It is not only unusual and unprecedented, but it is un-Democratic and un-Republican. There is no tyranny worse, if it has come to that. They talk about a one-man power in the House. Mr. President, if it was that one man who has exercised a power that is probably greater than that of the Czar of Russia, it would not be as bad indeed. But here we have one man who happens to be upon a certain conference committee who stands alone and says, "No, sir, no conference shall be had in which you shall have your measures brought up and discussed; no conference at all until the proposition is settled that you shall not have a report of real consideration nor a disagreement."

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator know what reason that gentleman assigns for refusing this paragraph in the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, I do not think I could inform the Senator about that, because I have an idea that a man who acts this way does not have any reason for it, and can give none.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose, like a grand juror, the Senator will be at liberty to give whatever opinion he might offer.

Mr. WARREN. My opinion is that it is simply his pride in having his own way. I know of nothing else. I think he has heard of men who swung the party lash, and swung it with effect. Perhaps he has seen the Senate bow sometimes to things it did not like, and permit the minority to rule the majority. Our friend over there wishes to be one of the men who are "bigger than old Grant." I suppose that is all.

MORE ABOUT RESERVOIRS.

Now, we will come back to the question of reservoirs. Both of these disputed amendments refer to reservoirs. Here is a report made in 1892, in which it seems these reservoirs are still going on. There has been a question here about the cost of those, and I have been reminded that possibly our reservoirs would cost more than these. I want to call attention particularly (and I know the chairman of the committee is very anxious to have all these facts) to how much capacity a small amount of money produces in the way of reservoirs. We have here in one of those 41 lakes that I speak of, which was completed in 1888 and 1884, 45,008,000,000 cubic feet. We have another, completed in 1884, which has a capacity of 30,000,000,000 cubic feet.

J. S. STEARNS LUMBER COMPANY.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. I consented to yield to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] for a moment, if my esteemed friend will wait.

Mr. CARTER. Willingly.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7865) to pay the J. S. Stearns Lumber Company $379. It is a House bill, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). Objection is made. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in conformity with a resolution of the Senate passed on December 9, 1897, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I have prepared a report. On two pages a statement is presented disclosing the nature of the subject-matter and the character of the report. I ask the privilege of presenting the report at this time without reference to the Committee on Printing. I ask the Secretary to read, with the consent of the Senate, the two pages descriptive of the subject-matter contained in the report now presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana presents a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred resolution No. 199, agreed to December 9, 1897, directing that "the Committee on Military Affairs be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date, the extent to which the Territory of Alaska has been explored by the Army of the United States; and what, if any, aid the Army may be able to lend in opening, protecting, and maintaining regular lines of communication exclusively within the territory of the United States from tide water into the interior of said Territory, and what measures may with propriety be adopted to avert hostilities with and to secure the friendly cooperation of the native population of said Territory in developing the resources thereof," respectfully submits the following report:

The committee has deferred completion of its task under the command of the resolution until the present time for the purpose of securing and incorporating in its reports of military exploring expeditions which were sent to Alaska by the Secretary of War during the year 1898. Such reports have been but recently submitted. The report herewith presented will be found to embrace in narrative form an account of the expeditions of—

Raymond, 1899.
Gen. O. O. Howard, 1875.
Petrof, 1880.
Schwaska, 1883.
Ray, 1883.
Abercrombie, 1884.
Allen, 1885.
Dr. Sheldon Jackson, 1897-98.
E. Hazard Wells, 1897-98.
Richardson, 1897-98.
Ray, 1897-98.
Glen, 1898.
Abercrombie, 1898.

This material mainly consists of records of the several expeditions into Alaska under the direction and control of the military arm of the Government, beginning with that of Lieutenant Raymond in 1869 and closing with the expeditions of Glen and Abercrombie in 1898. The reports of these military explorations and reconnaissances of military explorers in Alaska are here for the first time presented in connected narrative form.

The committee cheerfully acknowledges its indebtedness to the War Department for invaluable assistance, freely given, in supplying and arranging the material for the report. It is confidently believed that the report will prove of general interest and historic value, in addition to its usefulness for reference in connection with contemplated legislation. The story of each member of the respective expeditions who has left a record is tersely told. It is believed that this report will prove to be the most comprehensive that has thus far been undertaken by the Government in reference to Alaska, and that it will do much to make accessible the sum of our present knowledge of this extensive portion of the public domain of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator if he proposes to request that the balance of the papers on his desk shall be read to-night?

Mr. CARTER. Mercifully considering the present situation of the Senate, I will desist from having any more of the report read at this time, although I am quite sure that the report would be as interesting as some of the speeches which are to follow.

Mr. FRYE. I agree with the Senator entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent—

Mr. FRYE. I did not know certainly but that it was Senator QUAY's tariff speech.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the report be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand that no objection is made to the reference of the report.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks the reference of the report to the Committee on Printing. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so referred.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment to offer a resolution?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate information as to whether any action has been taken or is contemplated by which the Yellowstone National Park Transportation Company is to receive the additional privilege of conducting a camping business in the Yellowstone National Park, and if so, what are the grounds therefor, and also as to whether or not there has been any modification in the original lease to said company prohibiting its control of stock by any railroad company or the officers thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PETTUS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to make no remarks whatever on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is entitled to the floor. The Senator from Alabama objects.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WARREN. I have some facts here which I have not got to yet, but I am reminded by my colleague who sits at my left [Mr. STEWART] that it would be more convenient for him to speak at the present time, so I will surrender the floor to him until I can get my papers together.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not propose to make a speech at this late hour and under the circumstances, but I do feel called upon to emphasize the importance of legislation in aid of irrigation. I wish to remind the Senate that about three-fifths of the area of the United States can only be cultivated to advantage by artificial irrigation. It is a different condition of things from what exists in any other part of the country, and a large portion of that region is still public land. It is no place for homesteads.

No homesteads have been taken up. There is not a homestead in it that is taken up. It has been open to homestead settlement, and it has remained so for many years. When there is a piece of land opened anywhere in Indian Territory where settlers can go, you see what a rush there is, what a scramble to get hold of the land. All this land would be appropriated by settlers if it could be occupied, but it can not be occupied without artificial irrigation. Settlers can not perform the work; that is impossible. It requires capital, combination. The land laws are entirely inadequate to meet the situation.

The Government must either make a direct appropriation, such as is called for by this bill in aid of irrigation, if the country is to be utilized, or it must donate the land in the arid regions to the States and let them deal with the problem. You have no laws that will deal with the problem. They will always remain a barren waste unless some aid is given. If the States had the lands in that region, I think they could deal with the problem very well.

There is no doubt, however, that this mode of relieving the Mississippi is a good one. I believe it is cheaper than to build levees. I believe you can make a series of lakes at the head waters of the Missouri which will relieve the Lower Mississippi better than your levees, and at the same time irrigate a vast region, for there is a vast region between the summit of the Rocky Mountains and the rain belt of the East. I suppose that belt will average 250 or 300 miles, most of it being valley lands, near the foothills, all along from British Columbia clear down to the Gulf, in Texas.

There is a vast area in that region, enough to make many States, if it could be reclaimed. I have been over that region and examined it with a committee, and I am perfectly well satisfied that by an appropriation of money you would do more good there for the Lower Mississippi, besides reclaiming a vast region.

This is not a subject to be laughed out of court as if it were something new and impracticable. It is entirely practicable and it is not new. All those who have examined it have come to the same conclusion.

I do not expect to get any relief at this time, but I believe it is a matter which must be seriously considered and action must be taken, because irrigated land is much better for habitation than land which is cultivated by rainfall. You have more certain crops, and the crops are larger and better. You always have the best crops where you irrigate every year. The water that comes down and is diverted upon the land for irrigating purposes fertilizes the land.

India has been cultivated from time immemorial by irrigation—we do not know how long—and the land is not exhausted; it remains fertile, and they still raise good crops there wherever they irrigate. If you have proper drainage and do not put on too much water, the silt which is brought down with the water will improve the land every year. It is a curious fact that at least three-fifths—and I do not know but four-fifths—of all the agriculture in the world has been on arid land.

The cultivation of land where rainfall supplies the moisture is of recent date. In northern Europe where the rainfall is sufficient, and in portions of northern Asia where they have rainfall, the land was not cultivated in ancient times at all. The land that was cultivated was about the Mediterranean and in Africa, where we find ruins showing that millions and millions of acres of land that are now desert were once cultivated. It is found that a large portion of the Sahara Desert was once in cultivation. The whole of the water of the great Euphrates was used in western Asia. The great mass of mankind have lived by irrigation.

There are no people on earth who are better qualified to meet this problem and make it successful than the people of the United States. But Congress must remember that it must be done by irrigation. While I will not occupy the time and endanger this bill or any other bill to-night, I simply want to make an appeal to the Senate that this is a subject of great importance. It embraces two-fifths of the whole area, and it is the best if it could be irrigated and water put upon it. It would be a better place to live than in the valleys. There is nothing like the mountains as a place in which to live. You have better development of animal life of all kinds in the mountains than you can have in the valleys.

There is where liberty always lives and where it dies last. It is in the mountains that the great races of men have been produced. We have an immense mountain region where we can produce everything that contributes to the happiness of man, all sorts of products and a great abundance, and where animal life is most vigorous. All we want is to have legislation that will enable the people to cultivate and occupy that land.

I do not propose to take any longer time. I simply wanted to take this occasion to emphasize the necessity of irrigation. I am very glad that the Senator from Wyoming has talked on this subject for the purpose of challenging attention; because if we kept our peace, nothing would be done, the East would never wake up to the situation. We believe that when they know the situation they will do what is just, but there must be some extraordinary effort made to reach the ears of the Eastern people and make them realize the importance of it. I know they would desire to do justice and to have that section of the country developed, because it is for their interest as much as it is for ours.

Their sons and daughters will go there. People go there from all sections of the country—from the East, the North, and the South. They want to go where they can become wealthy; where they can make fortunes. We have got a glorious country there, which we ought to be able to utilize, and I appeal to Senators who are here now to cooperate early in the next Congress to devise some plan whereby assistance may be given to the development of that country. So important is it to the material interest of every section of our land that I have no doubt Senators will give it the attention which it deserves.

I shall not longer occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, of course, at this late hour, after what has been said by the honorable Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], it is hardly necessary that I should say a word upon this subject, but I can not resist the temptation for a few moments to state how keenly and how deeply I am interested, and how the people of our section are interested, in securing some legislation looking to the ultimate development of that section of the West known as the arid region.

Mr. President, in a not uneventful career of ten years in both branches of Congress I have at all times and under all circumstances given my vote to advance every interest of the people upon the eastern side of the Mississippi River.

Some years ago a distinguished general said that the tariff was a local question. I have learned to-night from some of the expressions which have been made here that the Constitution is a local question, that it is constitutional to build levees upon the Mississippi River to prevent the land from being overflowed, but that it is unconstitutional to irrigate by act of Congress the arid lands of the West.

The West, Mr. President, as was said by the honorable Senator from Wyoming, has contributed very much to the legislation of this country. An examination of its history in that respect will show that I am not mistaken. We have reached almost the limit of our development in some respects. Vast progress, it is true, has been made.

In 1870, if you will commence at the northeast corner of Dakota and trace an irregular line to the Gulf of Mexico, you will find that all of the region west to the Pacific Ocean had upon its tax duplicates but $750,000,000 of taxable property. By the energy and industry of those people they had in 1890 $8,500,000,000 of taxable property. In 1870 they had but one railroad. In 1890 they had constructed more railroads west of the Mississippi than all the country east of the Alleghany Mountains had in 1870. In 1890 that which is called the arid belt produced 600,000,000 bushels of cereals.

If you take, for illustration, California, lying upon the Pacific seaboard, it would stretch from Boston, Mass., to South Carolina. California has given to the world $1,400,000,000 of gold in order to carry on your commerce and your business.

That State spoken of as the "rotten borough" of the West—Nevada—with its sparse population and its arid land, has poured into the Treasury of the United States five hundred millions of bullion—Nevada that came into the Union by a Caesarean operation in order that the fruits of Appomattox might be perpetuated.

Idaho, if laid down east of the Mississippi River, would stretch from Toronto upon the north to Cleveland upon the west. Idaho has given to the commerce and business and trade of the world over four hundred millions of gold and silver.

Montana produces every year over forty-five millions of the precious metals, not taking into consideration her flocks and herds.

The West is a great country, Mr. President. It has contributed much to the business and to the prosperity of mankind.

I stand here representing in part a State which has but little arid land, but we have, sir, in that State more lumber than the nine Southern States and Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, New York, and Maine combined—lumber that William H. Seward said would make us the shipbuilders of the world. With our lumber, and our coal, and our hops, and our lead, and our silver, and our gold, and our civilization, and our patriotism, Washington stands guard upon the rock-bound coast of the Pacific.

A great country this Western country, Mr. President! Great history has been written there. It has been often said that that country was obtained by the Louisiana Purchase. I do not concede it. I do not think history has so written it. I think that her bold and brave and energetic men gave what is known as the great Oregon country to the Union of the States. I think much is due, if I may be permitted to say so, to George Abernethy, the first provisional governor of the Oregon Territory.

On that frontier at that time occurred one of the most remarkable patriotic incidents in this country's history. There was joint occupancy. The British and Americans becoming unsettled and dissatisfied, having a sparse population, assembled and said that they would erect an independent form of government. George Abernethy, one of those bold, brave frontiersmen, called the people together at the log schoolhouse at the Falls of Willamette, and he introduced, Mr. President, this patriotic resolution:

Resolved, That if the United States extend its jurisdiction over this country within four years, then it is not expedient to erect an independent form of government.

Upon that resolution he rose to speak. We have no record of that speech. We only know that it was earnest. He doubtless told those people of the trials, of the sufferings, of the hardships to establish the great Federal Government; he doubtless told them of the midnight ride of Paul Revere; he doubtless told them of that ride of Marcus A. Whitman, who, when he heard the sentiment that was uttered in the Senate of the United States that the western frontier was the apex of the Rocky Mountains, started on that long, perilous journey across the continent in the dead of winter, and stood before Daniel Webster pleading that that country might be saved to the Union of the States.

When old George Abernethy had concluded, a wild hurrah arose. What was it? What did it mean? It meant that these patriotic resolutions had unanimously carried, and that Old Glory was to wave over all of that country.

It is a great country, Mr. President, it has a great future. There is a Pacific as well as an Atlantic seacoast. We are looking out upon that great oriental commerce and trade that is before us—at least we think it is. We are trying in a modest and in a becoming way to secure our fair, reasonable, modest share of appropriations upon these various bills, and we are met, as so often occurs, with disagreement in conference or rejection in conference.

I do not like to refer to it, but we have 1,900 miles of shore line upon Puget Sound. We asked for one insignificant light-house or fog signal at $6,000. "Oh, yes;" "Oh, yes;" and they bowed low to us and said "it can go in." It went in, but it was stricken out in conference. It was promised last session. This session it went in as an amendment, and then it was stricken out in conference.

So it goes along, Mr. President. Day by day for ten years, upon every opportunity we are attempting to provide an adequate public building for at least one place in our State where there is a United States court, where there is a post-office with over $100,000 of annual receipts, a land office, with 14 men in the customs office, with a signal corps, and everything that can be found in any other city of a governmental nature. Finally, after great perseverance, we secured through a conference committee $75,000!

So it is, and the years will come along and my successors will take up the weary treadmill, and they will be told, "O, mañana," or, "In the sweet by and by," and we shall grow older and older, Mr. President, but we will learn one thing—and I shall not be disrespectful, or unkind, or ungenerous, or unjust in saying it, and that is the way many things are done in the Senate of the United States. I am reminded of the old lines that—

The old goose thinketh, thinketh, thinketh;
The young goose blinketh, blinketh, blinketh.
But the young goose never knows
What the old goose thinketh.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, regarding the distinguished Senator who has preceded me [Mr. WILSON] in his remarks, we all know that he was not speaking loosely, but by the card. We know that when he makes a statement regarding a certain thing or a certain locality, he has the figures to back him up.

IMPORTANCE OF THE WEST.

When I listened to the remarks so eloquently made by the distinguished Senator from Washington, I could not help taking the country as he sees it and comparing it with the stinginess of vision with which legislation has seen it heretofore.

Mr. President, I am sometimes asked by my fellows of the size of the State from which I come, and when I tell them the truth about it and that Wyoming is large enough in area to cover the six New England States and New York besides and still have enough room left on which to locate several of the smaller States of Rhode Island size, they simply look at me with an air that betokens the soliloquy, "I am something of a liar myself" [laughter], and walk away. But such is the fact, nevertheless.

GROWTH OF THE EAST.

Mr. President, what would the city of New York amount to and what necessity would there be for widening and deepening the channel of the harbor into New York, if there was nothing west of it. What makes New York? Is it because she is on the sea, because she has a good harbor, and wants a better one? Not at all. New York grows as the country west of New York grows. City after city has sprung up, and each one depends for its growth on what is behind it, what is west of it; and I think I can say "behind it" when I mean "west," because they naturally hitch us of the West on behind in everything, and in some matters, like this bill, for instance, a long, long way behind.

Take the great city of Chicago. What would Chicago amount to if there were no country west of it? I recalled, while listening to the eloquent Senator who preceded me, the fact that only about fifty years ago the great orator Daniel Webster rose here in this Senate and in his majestic way, and with that great voice of his and that great manner and mannerism which have seldom been equaled in the world and never surpassed, objected to a pony mail route being established from the Missouri River to the great Northwest and the Pacific coast. He made an argument here—a convincing one from his standpoint—showing that all that country beyond the Missouri River was uninhabitable and of no value, and that the Government was simply pouring its money into a rat hole when it expended it there in establishing a mail route. I do not quote his exact language, of course, but that was his meaning. He contended over and over again, and never did recognize the fact that there was a country west of the Missouri River worthy even of a pony mail route, where the cost was but a few ten-dollar cayuses or Indian ponies and two or three old saddles. In his estimate the country was not even worth that much.

THE WEST PAYS THE BILLS.

Senators have all heard what the Senator from Washington has truly said about a part of that great country. Where would you get your money to-day to build your dikes and levees or to deepen your harbors on the Atlantic coast and inland if it were not for the country west of you? Do you not want to join with that Western country and help the people there develop it?

Mr. President, it seems to me exceedingly shortsighted to reject these amendments when we simply ask the measly, small, paltry sum of $100,000—a country which is nearly one-half of the United States in area, and that one the half of the United States from which the great development of the future is bound to come, if we shall develop and grow as a nation.

DANIEL WEBSTER MISTAKEN.

We may have some men somewhere who are too narrow to see beyond the Missouri, and I suppose such men take pride in pointing to Daniel Webster and his record, and to the statement he made here that he was bound to oppose an appropriation for a pony express because the whole country west of the Missouri was not worth it. Mr. President, an examination of the record will verify that what I say is true of Daniel Webster. Was he mistaken? Ask later history! We can hardly realize that the great Daniel Webster was so narrow that he would rise in his place and make such a statement unless he believed it. If Daniel Webster was mistaken, it is barely possible that some of the eminent gentlemen on the other side, and possibly some on our own side, on the conference committee, may undervalue us.

How much better it would have been, Mr. President, for Daniel Webster if some kind friend had at that time opened his vision just wide enough for him to take a peep fifty years into the future and let him see how exceedingly absurd would be that record, which every friend and admirer of his will have to meet for all time, every year making that record worse and worse. Is it possible for a man to have a worse judgment, judging it from the record?

WILD MEN OF THE WEST.

We pick up a volume of Washington Irving describing that section of country in about 1845, and he relates some very interesting stories. He relates the adventures of Captain Bonneville. What does Captain Bonneville say? He says:

Some new system of things, or rather some new modification, will succeed among the roving people of this vast wilderness; but just as opposite, perhaps, to the inhabitants of civilization. The great Chippewyan chain of mountains and the sandy and volcanic plains which extend on either side are represented as incapable of cultivation. The pasturage which prevails there during a certain portion of the year withers under the aridity of the atmosphere, and leaves nothing but dreary waste. An immense belt of rocky mountains and volcanic plains, several hundred miles in width, must forever remain an irreclaimable wilderness, intervening between the abodes of civilization, and affording a last refuge to the Indian. Here roving tribes of hunters living in tents or lodges, and following the migrations of the game, may lead a life of savage independence, where there is nothing to tempt the cupidity of the white man. The amalgamation of various tribes and of white men of every nation will in time produce hybrid races like the mountain Tartars of Caucasus. Possessed as they are of immense droves of horses, should they continue their present predatory and warlike habits, they may in time become a scourge to the civilized frontiers on either side of the mountains, as they are at present a terror to the traveler and trader.

That is a part of the history. That is Bonneville's idea, and that of Washington Irving, following close along in the track of Daniel Webster's peroration on this floor regarding the insignificance of the great West.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to yield to me that I may present a conference report.

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the report of the committee of conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, still further insisting upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and asking for another conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the conference report may be read. The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11093) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
S. M. CULLOM,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WILLIAM W. GROUT,
A. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments, and agree to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference disagreeing to the votes of the two Houses thereon on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

UNHAPPY DANIEL WEBSTER.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to get into the realm of romance or imagination, because I have undertaken to hew pretty close to the line of practical facts, but I want to suppose a case, or, at least, I want to ask this Senate what they think of Daniel Webster. If he were alive now and here on earth, what would he be willing to give or do if he could withdraw his action and argument and vote when he opposed a pony express which would extend from the Missouri to the Pacific—a little seven by nine arrangement that would cost about as much as an evening dinner given to Webster by his admiring friends on some of those great occasions? I want to ask you if you believe that Daniel Webster would take any pride or would be any happier for that opposition?

A WARNING.

I want to ask those members of the Senate who do not now seem to think there is anything in the West worth looking after and taking care of, if they want to leave to posterity and to history some action that may be as narrow and even narrower than that action of Webster's away back there, as it must be viewed in the light of recent events?

Mr. President, if the United States is to be a great country it is to be through the development of that newer region west of the Missouri River. I left my residence in a State on the Atlantic coast after the war was over, having served in a humble capacity in a regiment from that State, and I have been back there frequently since; and I know there has not been increased development in that State, and scarcely a dollar has gone into the State except what has gone in because of the growth of the country outside—the country west of it.

AGRICULTURE IS WEALTH.

The wealth of this nation is what is produced—brought into the world as new products—not what is gained through borrowing of and swapping with each other. It is taken from the soil, and agriculture is its true foundation. Now, we all know very well that the Eastern State that I originally came from, and a great many more like it, have really retrograded in past years in agriculture. The capacity for natural production is less to-day than it was a hundred years ago. The Eastern States do not produce the mineral wealth. It is not there. The States are not to blame. The fact is, when they delve beneath their surface they can not add a dollar to the wealth of this nation.

Go to the farmers, and they can not get as much per annum from their farms to-day as they could a hundred years ago. They would simply be in a paralyzed condition and would be retrograding altogether except for the production and exportation of articles from the Western country. They are not exporters of consequence, so far as the East is concerned; a few manufactured articles, that is all. We glory in the fact that we have arrived, as a nation, to a point where our exports exceed imports, and indeed there never has been a time before when we were nationally so prosperous.

THE WEST FURNISHES EXPORTS.

Mr. President, will you please state or ask some Senator to state, if he can, where those exports come from except from this undervalued West? Take the exports that make up the grand total. Look at the columns, up one side and down the other, and tell me how much comes from the Eastern and older country! Tell me where would be our exports to-day, where would be that great credit on the other side in gold coin which is ours to-day to bring over here or loan out at interest there! Deduct our wheat, beef and mutton, and our metals from the grand total, and then see where your exports are! We would not now be a creditor nation and the other side a debtor to us except for these Western products, which are grown in that country that the statesmen of former times thought was unworthy of a pony express or a pony mail line.

Is it meet for us who are sent here in the full confidence of our constituents to represent more particularly our Western States to sit mute in this Chamber and submit day after day to bad treatment when such States are really the main source of the wealth of this country?

Is it not our duty, even though we may inconvenience some of our colleagues, to stand up and proclaim to the world the truth? Is it not necessary at this crisis to have this country know and to have them learn from men who know whereof they speak that there is a section of this country that has been pouring into the lap of the nation untold riches while it receives in return from the other branch of Congress little but kicks and curses?

OUR GOLD PRODUCT.

Where does the gold come from in this country? Ninety-five per cent of the gold in this country comes from the arid region, and the proposition now is to expend a hundred thousand dollars, all told, to inaugurate a system of water conservation, that means doubling perhaps the capacity of our mines, by giving aid and opportunity to raise heavy products of agriculture close to the mines, so that low-grade ore which can not be worked to-day can be worked on account of cheaper labor through cheaper price of board.

Mr. President, is the great gold-mining interest of this nation to be put aside upon the proposition that for it and for the silver mining and the agriculture of that country and the navigation, altogether, $100,000 is too much?

OTHER METALS.

Take the silver product of the country, and we find that 99.9 per cent of all the silver that is mined in the United States comes from this arid region. We find that the percentage of copper is large, and that nearly half the copper product of the entire world comes from this region for which we ask this consideration.

PAYMENTS OF CERTAIN PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4795 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill of the House and agree to a new amendment, and that the House also agree to the same, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 4795, Title LVII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following additional provisions and provisos, to wit: 'Provided further, That in case a resident pensioner of the United States shall, for a period of over six months, desert his lawful wife, she being a woman of good moral character and in necessitous circumstances, or, if he have no lawful wife, shall desert his legitimate minor child or children under 16 years of age, or his permanently helpless and dependent child, the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby directed, upon being satisfied by competent evidence of such desertion, to cause one-half of the pension due to or to become due said pensioner during the continuance of such desertion to be paid to the wife, or, in case there is no wife, to the legal guardian of the child or children: Provided further, That when a soldier or sailor enters into a State Home for soldiers or sailors as an inmate thereof one-half of his pension accruing during his residence therein shall be paid to his wife, she being a woman of good moral character and in necessitous circumstances, or, if there be no wife, then to his child or children under 16 years of age or his permanently helpless and dependent child, if any, unless such wife and children shall also be inmates of the same institution or of some home provided for the wives and children of soldiers and sailors: Provided further, That if any such pensioner is or shall become an inmate of a National Soldiers' Home one-half of the pension drawn in his behalf or to which he may become entitled during his residence therein shall be paid by the treasurer of that institution to such pensioner's wife, she being in necessitous circumstances and a woman of good moral character, or, if there be no wife, to the legal guardian of the minor child or children or the permanently dependent and helpless child or children of such pensioner, on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions: Provided further, That hereafter no pension under any law of the United States shall be granted, allowed, or paid to the widow of a soldier, sailor, officer, naval or military, marine, marine officer, or any other male person entitled to a pension under any law of the United States unless it shall be proved and established that the marriage of such widow to the soldier, sailor, officer, marine, or other person on account of whose service the pension is asked was duly and legally contracted and entered into prior to the passage of this act, or unless such wife shall have lived and cohabited with such soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death, or unless the marriage shall take place hereafter and prior to or during the military or naval service of the soldier, sailor, officer, marine, or other person on account of whose service the pension is asked or claimed. This proviso shall not apply to or affect the widow of any soldier, sailor, marine, officer, or marine officer serving or who has served in the war between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain.

"In all cases the questions of desertion, entrance into a Home, necessitous circumstances, and of good moral character shall be ascertained and determined by the Commissioner of Pensions, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, and the treasurers and governors of the several Soldiers and Sailors' Homes shall be advised of such action from time to time."

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. NELSON DINGLEY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the eulogies upon the late Nelson Dingley, a Representative from the State of Maine, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE subsequently reported the above resolution from the Committee on Printing; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

FREE ENTRY OF CERTAIN ARTICLES.

Mr. BURROWS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7271) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes approved May 18, 1896, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same as follows: Line 11, after the word "act," insert: "Provided, however, That the provision of this amendment shall apply only in such cases as those of foreign-born animals taken abroad, and inventories of which are filed prior to their leaving the country with the collector of customs at the port of their departure."

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 2, which added a new section to the bill, as follows:

"That on and after the passage of this act wheat imported by actual farmers, residents of the United States, for use by them, respectively, as seed on their own lands in the United States, and not for sale, shall be free of customs duty, under special regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no more than 500 bushels of seed wheat shall be imported under this act by any one person during any one year."

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I desire for just a moment the attention of the Senate. Some weeks ago, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Printing, the Senate ordered printed the evidence of several witnesses in an investigation taken before the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I have withheld it for other matters, in order to present it when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] was in his seat. The Senator made a motion to reconsider, as I have stated before, the complaint being that only a part of the testimony of the witnesses was to be printed.

Now, I desire to have unanimous consent to print the testimony of all the witnesses or I desire to move to table his motion to reconsider. I have no desire to print a part of the evidence in the case without giving all of them an opportunity. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky consent to withdraw his motion to reconsider. That is the first suggestion I have to make.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President—

Mr. PETTUS. I call for the regular business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MASON. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order having been called for, it is the duty of the Chair to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact—

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to yield to me.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. It is a very simple proposition. My resolution was passed asking for the printing of certain evidence. The type has been set. I was not in the Chamber when the motion to reconsider was entered, and I supposed the Senator from Kentucky would either withdraw his motion to lay upon the table or consent that all of the evidence may be printed. The Senator from Wyoming has yielded, and I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky consent.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President—

Mr. PETTUS. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to rule that it is not in order, if objection is made. The regular order is insisted upon. The Senator from Wyoming is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Wyoming has yielded the floor to me to move to lay upon the table the motion entered by the Senator from Kentucky to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made and the regular order being called for, the Chair can not entertain that motion. The conference report on the river and harbor bill is before the Senate, and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me a moment to make a statement in regard to the river and harbor bill?

Mr. WARREN. I am perfectly willing to accommodate the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. I have no special personal or political interest in the motion, but the resolution was introduced and submitted to the Committee on Printing, and the committee recommend that certain evidence be printed.

Mr. PETTUS. I have raised a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor on the river and harbor bill and is discussing it. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. MASON. I have waited for several days, being assured that I would have an opportunity to have the resolution recalled and amended or have it passed. The Committee on Printing examined this question. It was at the request of the Trade and Labor Council, the organized workmen of this country, that a full and fair investigation of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing be had. It does not take, and would not take, five minutes to have the resolution amended. The type has already been set, and if the Senator who objects is really afraid to have the evidence that has been duly and properly taken exposed to the view of the people of this country I can understand why he objects, and I can understand it in no other way.

The evidence has been taken. The resolution has been passed. The entering of the motion to reconsider simply defeats the object and postpones for eight or nine months a hearing before the people of this country upon the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Charges have been made—I do not know whether truthfully or falsely. I do know that the Senate and the people have a right to have that evidence. It is now locked up. The Senate some days ago, upon my motion, and upon the direction and request of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, passed the resolution. If the gentleman objects, I shall be glad if he will give some reason why he wants to conceal the truth in this case; why he wants to keep back from the people of this country the result of the investigation which has been had in the Department that discloses the true condition in that Bureau.

I have made no personal or offensive fight against the superintendent of that Bureau. I have no occasion to. I do not know what the evidence contains, but men who are entitled to know, men who make the charges, ask that the Senators of the United States, before they come back in next December, shall have an opportunity to read the result of this investigation. I ask unanimous consent, in order to show that I do not wish to do anybody any injustice, to withdraw the resolution and have it passed, including the printing of all the depositions and all the testimony taken before that Department.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not consider that I ought to be called on to make objection all the time. I have made it, and I insist on the Chair enforcing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects to any business being transacted other than the regular order, the consideration of the conference report on the river and harbor bill. The Senator from Wyoming is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MASON. Very well. I have the evidence. There are only five or six hundred pages of it. I will try to have it read and put into the RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to inquire whether this evidence is all in the possession of the Senate?

Mr. MASON. Surely. All the evidence taken by any Department is in the possession of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not unless it has been called for. I want to ascertain the fact.

Mr. MASON. By a special resolution the Senate of the United States called for this evidence.

Mr. CHANDLER. And it has all been sent in?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, is the Senator's present motion to print it all?

Mr. MASON. To print it all. The first resolution was to print certain parts of it, because it was deemed inadvisable to print all the evidence, inasmuch as much was immaterial. My only disposition is to economize. This is an age of economy. The Senator from Alabama usually joins us in the effort to economize and save the public Treasury. I should like to have in print the evidence, so that next December, when the Senators come back, they can see it.

I have stated frankly that I have no personal interest in it. I have no objection to the gentleman in charge of the Bureau. I have never asked or received or been denied favors; but upon the recommendation of the chairman of the Committee on Printing the resolution was passed by the Senate, and during my absence a motion to reconsider was entered. I could then have moved to lay it on the table, but the distinguished Senator from Kentucky made the statement that if we printed a part of the evidence it ought all to be printed. I thought that was fair. Three days ago I presented it to the Senate, and was assured that at the proper time I would have an opportunity to have it all printed. If that is thought to be the best way to protect his friend in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, it may be wise. He can pass upon that himself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FRYE. I do not think I can submit to this disorder much longer. The river and harbor bill is the regular order, and I call for it.

Mr. MASON. I was speaking on the river and harbor bill when the Senator interrupted me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that no other business can be transacted, in view of the fact that the Senator from Alabama has made objection. But the Senator from Illinois is speaking to the pending question, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. FRYE. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Illinois to be speaking to the pending business?

Mr. MASON. He understood the Senator from Illinois to say he was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois so stated.

Mr. FRYE. That ought to be strong evidence.

Mr. MASON. Well, that is Pickwickian Senatorial courtesy. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Wyoming for his kindness in yielding to me. I shall ask him to give me further indulgence later in the morning or earlier in the evening.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WARREN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, this very interesting debate has now proceeded about four hours. Its effect, I think, must have been to emphasize in the minds of Senators here the absolute necessity of pursuing some policy which will reconcile the differences now existing. Considering the present condition of the public business, I think it is time to try to effect another compromise or to reach at least some conclusion which will compose the differences of opinion upon this matter. I ask the Senator from Wyoming at this point to yield, so that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] may introduce a joint resolution which, if it shall be adopted, will, I am certain, result in a unity of sentiment upon this proposition.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether I understand, that being a joint resolution, that it shall be adopted by both Houses?

Mr. MANTLE. Oh, of course; that follows.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, soon after I arrived in this body the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] presented a bill or made an argument here—I think it was a bill—in which he proposed to grant the arid and semiarid lands in the different States in the West to the States themselves for the purposes of irrigation. I took up the idea and matured it in my own mind, and on an appropriation bill I offered an amendment of that sort some two or three years ago. On canvassing amongst the gentlemen to-night who are very much concerned in the matter of irrigation, and feel that it is of vital importance to their States, as they have for many years, they having advocated this ably and strenuously and in good faith for many years, I thought perhaps the passage of a joint resolution by unanimous consent to-night might satisfy those gentlemen and their constituents at least that we were determined to make a firm and we hope a successful effort to transfer those lands into the hands of the people to whom they rightfully belong.

Now, I have never believed, after the debts of the Revolution and the war of 1812 were settled, that the United States Government ought to make any claim upon the States for the lands within their borders, but that they ought to be the property of the States and be disposed of; and they will be developed if you will give them to those States, and developed in a way the United States Government never can hope to develop them, by a system of general irrigation or any other system that we may attempt to adopt here. It will cost the States of the American Union in the way of taxation large sums of money.

Mr. PETTUS. We are unable to hear a word that is said.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought I would to-night offer the joint resolution, if I can get unanimous consent for its consideration. Of course, otherwise it can not be done. I will read it:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all public lands that are claimed as arid or semiarid lands in the several States are hereby granted to the said States, respectively, and the net proceeds of said lands when the same are sold or leased shall be applied by the States respectively in which said lands are located to the purposes of irrigation.

If the Senate will give unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, I am entirely satisfied that this controversy over which we have been laboring so long, and which is of such great importance to the public interest, will be quieted, and we will get this bill through and all the other bills through and be able to adjourn this session of Congress without the necessity of having an extra session.

I ask unanimous consent to present the joint resolution and put it upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc. That all public lands that are claimed as arid or semiarid lands in the several States are hereby granted to the said States respectively, and the net proceeds of said lands, when the same are sold or leased, shall be applied by the States, respectively, in which said lands are located to the purposes of irrigation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina objects. The Senator from Wyoming is entitled to the floor.

CONTINUATION OF SENATE COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment to ask consideration for a resolution which interests all Senators? It is the customary resolution to be presented at the close of a session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the standing and select committees of the Senate as now constituted be, and they are hereby, continued until their successors are elected.

Mr. GORMAN. That, of course, I understand, is subject to any change.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is the customary resolution which is passed at the end of a session.

Mr. GORMAN. It would not affect any change which may be made between now and adjournment?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh, no; not at all.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: I ask the Senator to yield just a moment to correct an error in the resolution offered by the Senator from Connecticut in regard to committees. I ask that the vote by which the resolution was agreed to be reconsidered in order that an addition may be made to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote of the Senate whereby the resolution was adopted will be reconsidered and the resolution will be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. After the word "constituted," in the second line, add "at the end of this session;" so as to read:

Resolved, That the standing and select committees of the Senate as constituted at the end of this session be, and they are hereby, continued until their successors are elected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EUDORA HILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to consider House bill 10771, for the relief of Eudora Hill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. PETTIGREW. There are very few lines of it.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator from South Dakota was not heard. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will restate his request.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a House bill for the relief of Eudora Hill. There are only six or eight lines of it.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Alabama desires to have the bill read before he consents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10771) for the relief of Eudora Hill. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. PETTUS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objects.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can not the bill be read for information?

Then if the Senator desires to object, he can do so. It seems to me he will not object if he hears the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill can not be read in the face of objection. If the Senator from Alabama will withdraw the objection to having the bill read, it can then be read. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was endeavoring to show to the Senate that the part of the country which is represented by these disputed amendments is not a pauper or a beggar. I had remarked that nearly half the gold of the world, and over 90 per cent of the gold of this country, comes from the arid region. I had remarked that 99.9 of the silver comes from it, and I had remarked that half of the copper of the world comes from it. If I am correctly informed, more than one-third of the lead comes from that same region.

BEEF, MUTTON, WOOL.

Going still further, we find that more than half of the mutton of this country comes from the arid region; that a good deal more than half of the wool comes from there; that a large proportion of the beef comes from there; that a large number of the horses come from there.

We are struggling in that region with some conditions that are hard to meet, and we have asked Congress in the most modest way possible and the Senate has responded in granting us a little money to inaugurate a system of inquiries, which inquiries were found to result in tenable propositions. We propose, in the first instance, to assist navigation, preserve what we have in the streams and obtain more if we can, and incidentally, through the use of this water on its way down for irrigation, to try and preserve our place on the map and preserve the property that we have been able to accumulate in long years of toil.

The chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the distinguished gentleman who is in charge of this bill, called my attention incidentally a few hours since to a notice in the Evening Star. He knew that the item would be of interest to me. He did not know, however, how much sadness it conveyed to me. The article, which I did not read in full, ran something like this:

During the late storms in Wyoming at least one-half of all the sheep have been lost for want of food.

Now, Mr. President, we are so situated there that we can endure the hardest winters if we can provide so that each flock of sheep may have hay enough somewhere within reach to last through any one storm. Sufficient irrigation will provide this, and reservoirs will greatly facilitate irrigation.

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to yield to me.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. MASON. I ask him to yield to me a moment for a resolution to which there will be no objection. I have here the letter making the request that I offer it. I ask to have it read for the information of the Senate. If there is any objection, I will withdraw it.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is objection before it is read.

Mr. MASON. I do not think the Senator should say that. It is simply a resolution asking that we get some information in regard to the claims of letter carriers who have worked over eight hours.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we might just as well understand that we are going to do business or not do business. I shall not allow another thing to be done as long as I can say that I object, until we dispose of the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Senator from Wyoming will proceed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, before yielding the floor to others I was undertaking to describe a certain and sure remedy for such losses as were reported in the Evening Star to-night, or rather last night, as it is morning now. The passage of this arid-region amendment, the demonstration of this problem, and the expenditure of a very small sum of money will absolutely insure not only that locality, but other States and all of that great country from any such catastrophes as were detailed in the newspaper referred to. All it requires is that in some way we get an association of interests or an association of capital sufficient to take water enough into certain portions of the country so that it may not be more than 10 to 20 miles from one water course to another, and to irrigate land enough to raise a few acres of alfalfa. Alfalfa hay properly put up is an insurance absolutely reliable, and out of that comes the saving of all these millions of dollars that go out of the world the same as you snuff out a candle—nothing left, simply one great loss, where live stock dies on the range of starvation.

Now, here is a country that in producing capacity, so far as raw material is concerned, is absolutely capable of producing more than any other part of this country. I have made the statement, and I am sure it will not be gainsaid, that nearly all of this great American export trade, and its results, nearly all the material that has been sent out to bring us this great balance of trade, comes out of this Western country.

Now, we want some way to protect our great Western interests, and all we ask in return is the poor privilege of getting enough to eat and drink for ourselves and our families, and then depositing the balance of our profit and savings, with the balance of yours, here in the East, as we always have done.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from South Dakota is suffering with some physical illness and desires to speak early. While I have a few more remarks to make, I shall be glad to let him take the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate for any length of time upon this subject. It seems to me that the controversy is this: The Government of the United States owns 500,000,000 acres of arid and semiarid land, and it also owns the streams and the lakes in the locality of its irrigable possessions. Those streams run to the seaboard, and their lower courses are navigable and carry an enormous commerce. During floods they overflow their banks and destroy temporarily or permanently large areas of fertile and cultivated land, together with the crops growing thereon. For the purpose of preventing this destruction, from the earliest day of the Government Congress has appropriated money for the construction of levees along the banks of these streams, under the theory that such work was for the benefit of commerce. We of the arid States now propose that the storm water which causes periodical floods shall be accumulated in reservoirs at or near the sources of the streams, and liberated as needed for irrigating purposes during the summer and fall months. This would prevent the overflow of the streams in their lower courses, and incidentally furnish water to refresh the valleys through which the streams flow.

It is estimated by the Government authorities that 72,000,000 acres of land can be thus reclaimed and made to produce crops sufficient to support 15,000,000 people. In the interest of commerce no more beneficial expenditure could be inaugurated than would be involved in an appropriation of one or two hundred million dollars for building such reservoirs and bringing about this result.

But we have started upon a career of conquest rather than one of internal improvement. Many of our people and the Administration believe that it is of great benefit to this country that we should annex 10,000,000 people in the Philippines—10,000,000 people who live in the Tropics, where the white man can not live, and where self-government, as understood by us and under our Constitution, can not exist. Instead of spending hundreds of millions in conquering the Philippines, would it not be better economy and better business judgment to spend it in reclaiming the arid lands of the West, covering them with our own race, a people capable of self-government, adding tenfold to the commerce of this country, than can possibly be secured by the acquisition of the tropical countries we are now trying to conquer and occupy?

A general policy of arid-land reclamation applied to the West would bring to the coffers of industry the proceeds of a vast volume of commerce. This would come from the producing people who would inhabit that region under its changed conditions and who would cause its revived soil to produce abundantly of the fruits of the earth.

And what is more, Mr. President, they would be a people capable of helping to maintain our Constitution and our form of government. I think it can be safely said that the ease with which man secures an existence in the Tropics makes it impossible for him to participate in the form of self-government under which we live; that a man adapted to our form of government can not be produced in latitudes where he never feels the tingling of the frost in his veins or where woollen clothing is unnecessary.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me a moment, I should like to report a resolution from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts reports a resolution from the Committee on Printing and asks unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. TILLMAN. It had just as well be understood that I meant what I said when I gave notice that nothing shall be done until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not do that in any spirit of discourtesy to anybody. I do not do it for any purpose other than to have us go on and perfect the business we have here or have an extra session.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will yield one moment, I will state that the Committee on Printing is privileged to report at any time. He can object to the report after it is read.

Mr. TILLMAN. I object to the reading, because I do not want to have my sensitive feelings appealed to on any subject.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not object to the reading, because it is privileged to make a report from the Committee on Printing at any time, I think.

Mr. GORMAN. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. You can not consider it under the rules.

Mr. LODGE. I can not have it considered without unanimous consent. I ask the Senator to let it be read, and then if he desires to object, of course that is his privilege.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have said I would not do this, and I am not going to stand up and be made to eat my own words for anybody. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would do it as quickly for the Senator from Massachusetts as any man in this House or anywhere else.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. It is not a matter personal to myself, I beg to say; it is a resolution to print additional copies of the proceedings in memory of the late Senator Morrill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would yield to that as quickly as anything I ever did yield to; but I will not yield to anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this question has been before Congress for the last ten years. It becomes more urgent and more pressing each year. The people who inhabit the far Western States are determined that some proper, economical, and beneficial use shall be made of their arid lands and of the waters which drain their vast area. These lands are not adapted for homesteads; they can only be used after irrigation; and the Congress of the United States must expect that we will continue this controversy until one of two courses is pursued, that either the Government of the United States shall enter upon a policy which shall reclaim our arid lands and utilize the water flowing over them, or else the Government of the United States shall relinquish its title thereto to the States themselves. To-day these vast areas are roamed over by millions of head of cattle, owned by immense and wealthy companies, who enjoy the profits of free pasturage.

If the arid lands in the State in which I live were conveyed to the State we could rent those lands to the cattlemen. We could receive for those lands 10 cents an acre.

We insist upon it that the Government make some use of this idle property, that the 500,000,000 acres of arid lands and their waters shall be put to some useful purpose. Under existing conditions, as I said before, these are not homestead lands, though homesteaders are acquiring gradually the water fronts along the streams, and as they get title to it they control the lands beyond and engage in cattle raising, securing pasturage for which they pay nothing. The Government is an improvident owner. No country can prosper so long as the title to the lands remains in the Government, and for this reason: From such lands we receive no revenue; we can not tax them. And yet the Government is the greatest landed proprietor of the State in which I live.

There are 20,000,000 acres of Government lands within the State. They would rent for $2,000,000 a year. This revenue would build reservoirs that would utilize every drop of water in the State, and reclaim every acre susceptible of reclamation. It would afford means for the creation of artesian wells, and these applied to lands unfit for agricultural uses would transform them into rich grazing grounds, and the prosperity of the State would be enormously enhanced.

So it is with all the arid States. Each would receive in revenue from cattlemen millions of dollars, and the States could then build reservoirs and reclaim lands, and thereby add enormously to our national wealth.

It is the condition I have outlined, Mr. President, that causes the protests before this body every year that brings us to the floor insisting on something being done. Our demands will continue, gathering volume and force, until Congress is compelled to make appropriations to build reservoirs and reclaim arid western land or else turn the property over to the States in which it is located.

For my part, I would prefer to have Congress turn over its arid and semiarid land to the State of South Dakota, because I believe the problem would be practically and honestly worked out to the great advantage of the State. I believe we could then develop and improve that country and bring vast areas under cultivation, and thus secure a revenue to help support our Government and contribute to the welfare of the whole.

The same is true of Idaho, of Montana, of Wyoming, of Colorado, of Nevada, of Utah, New Mexico, Arizona, western Kansas, western Nebraska, and North Dakota. I do not believe that the nation can afford longer to neglect this great opportunity for material advancement. I consider it of fully as much importance, if not of more importance, to the future greatness and prosperity of this country than the clearing out of harbors along the small streams of the coast, or even the development of the great harbors themselves.

The internal commerce of this country is the important factor. Our foreign commerce amounts to 5 per cent of all our commerce; and the internal condition and prosperity of this country is therefore of vastly more concern than the commerce that goes across the seas. Business with our own people, business with a kindred race, the exchange of products among ourselves, is of greater commercial value than any exchange we can secure with the other nations of the world.

The proposition that ownership of arid and semiarid land should be transferred from the General Government to the several States within which such land is located is one that may not, at first glance, strongly impress the public. It is a new proposition. Yet I have faith to believe that study, investigation, and reflection along utilitarian lines will induce a large proportion of those who legislate for the people to coincide with my present views.

Primarily, the State should own the land, because the State can regulate its use and secure revenue therefrom, whereas it is now a burden upon the State, for the reason that necessary governmental functions in connection with such nonproductive areas must be maintained at the expense of those taxpayers who operate within the arable sections of the State. These arid and semiarid tracts are peopled by an alien class who move hither and thither with their herds as the seasons advance and decline, so timing their migrations as to generally avoid contact with an assessor. Theirs is a vocation which demands the strongest protection of law. Thus, while they receive much, they contribute little to the cost of such protection, and the difference must be made up by those who have no share in the lucrative business of the ranges.

Under governmental ownership the land not occupied for agricultural purposes now affords free pasturage to all who choose to place their herds upon it. Under State ownership a price per acre per year would be exacted from those who raise and fatten cattle for their own pecuniary profit. The revenue thus secured could be invested by the State in irrigation methods and through this process a large proportion of the arid land would be fitted for agricultural uses.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, still further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 21, 22, 23, 24, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56, upon which the committee had been unable to agree, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HILBORN, and Mr. CUMMINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11083) making appropriation to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, upon which the committee of conference had been unable to agree, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROUT, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. DICKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, upon which the committee had been unable to agree, still further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, 23, 140, 145, 158, 161, 163, and 164, and agrees to the amendment numbered 10 with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12184) to distinctively designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purpose of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the message from the House on the naval appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. GORMAN. I only want to ask that a conference be appointed on this bill, that is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not entertain the objection under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I am going to object to everything I have a right to object to.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,

S. M. CULLOM,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. W. GROUT,

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I would favor, Mr. President, an arrangement whereby the General Government would convey to the several States a limited title to their arid and semiarid land—a title which would not convey the power of alienation, but would fix ownership in perpetuity upon the State, with authority to lease, improve, and reclaim. This would give the State continuous and increasing revenue. As the land was improved by irrigation its annual value would enhance and in time it might become sufficient to lift the burden of taxation from the citizen.

There are in the West two sources of successful irrigation. There are surface streams and subterranean waters. The streams could be so trained as to discharge their annual flood volume into storage reservoirs, and the underground accumulation, wherever it exists, can be released through artesian wells and conveyed to the soil. During the period of melting snow in the mountains the great rivers of the West flow down their slopes in resistless torrents, gathering magnitude and force as they traverse the continent, and finally, along their lower stretches, inundating the adjacent country, carrying destruction to life and property.

These experiences are repeated year after year, the Government, with large purpose and small results, attempting to meet the rush of waters with feeble walls of soluble alluvium, when it might go to the source of the trouble and there restrain and retain the dangerous element and harness it for the use of the agricultural producers of the West. With the arid land transferred to the custody of the States of the West, they would in time be able to perform this great task from their own resources. It would be but fair to assist them in the beginning, as the project contemplates in its maturity the saving of enormous annual expenditures by the General Government upon the lower rivers.

The problem of irrigation would more rapidly approach its solution in the hands of the States than under the auspices of the General Government. The law makers of the nation have no personal interest in matters local in their character and are lacking in the requisite knowledge that practical contact inspires. The people of a State depending to a considerable extent upon irrigation as a means of development would give to the subject the intelligent and earnest attention that would rapidly reclaim all nonproductive tracts relegated to their custody.

These conclusions receive support in the experiences of Colorado, which leads all the irrigable States in effective legislation upon this branch of Western industry. Colorado has pioneered the way and contiguous States are profiting by its developments in legislation, acquired and crystallized in the school of experimental effort. It is vain to expect that a national legislature will descend to the details of such comprehensive enactments as have rescued the deserts of Colorado from the domain of the wilderness and caused their fields, gardens, and orchards to contribute to the wealth of the world's commerce.

In my own State the opportunities for irrigation by means of artesian wells are unusual. Almost anywhere in the middle half of the State the artesian basin can be tapped at depths varying from 300 to 2,000 feet, each well releasing a flow almost marvelous in quantity. Many of these wells exhibit a pressure strong enough to drive heavy machinery, and from most of them water can be elevated 30 or 40 feet into reservoirs by the force of the head behind the artesian supply. Nature has thus made provision for irrigation on an extended scale in South Dakota, and all that is needed is the money with which to provide for the distribution of the water.

There are also large rivers in South Dakota. The Missouri cuts the State in twain, flowing southward through its central valley. Tributaries go down to it from the east, the west, and the north, and they are generally streams of large proportions. In the flood season these rivers are filled beyond the confines of their banks. If even a comparatively small proportion of this surplus water could be stored for the later growing months of the year and then distributed over the productive area of the State, South Dakota would respond with food for millions of mouths. All that is required is sufficient money with which to build storage reservoirs and connecting channels for the movement of the water.

The possibilities of irrigation applied to the rich and exhaustless soil of the far West are beyond computation. H. H. Wilson, in his reports to the United States Geological Survey, gives an idea of attainable results when he cites a few facts in connection with irrigation in India. In one district, named Punjab, where no crops had ever grown, an investment of $31,000,000 was made in irrigation works. Two-thirds of this vast sum was returned from the first year's crops. Examples like this abound in Mr. Wilson's reports. He says:

Irrigation by wells is common in all parts of India. In Sind 230,000 acres are covered with water obtained from wells; in the central provinces, 120,000; in Madras, 2,000,000 acres; in Coimbatore, 300,000; in the northwest provinces, 400,000. It is estimated, indeed, that in the various provinces of this great empire water is drawn for irrigation purposes from not less than a million wells.

There exists in South Dakota, and, in fact, in most of the States of the far West, a soil equal to that of the richest lands of India; a soil capable of the largest returns. All that is there lacking is moisture sufficient to grow and mature the crops. This provided, and it will maintain a population of 250 to the square mile as readily as that proportion is maintained in India. I have shown the possibilities of artesian irrigation and the possibilities of water-storage irrigation. All that is needed is to apply the forces at hand.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is always an accuracy about official reports made by disinterested parties that not only appeals to one's reason, but to one's credulity. Of course we are compelled to accept as true what some trusted officer of the Government records in his official report.

OFFICIAL RESERVOIR INFORMATION.

While I have only read a small portion of a report here showing that reservoirs have been built, there are many other reservoirs that have been built not recorded in this work. And there are many places in this work that speak of others; but I have established my point that the United States Congress has on various occasions appropriated money for the purpose of building reservoirs in the interest of navigation and to raise the water in streams so that they may be navigable, and this is precisely what we propose to do. I show, so far as the expense is concerned, that with 41 of those reservoirs the cost is still less than $2,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, we have the evidence here before us from a United States engineering officer in which he has calculated the subject of the prevention of floods in the Missouri River.

A search through the RECORDS will discover a speech made not more than two years ago by the honorable and eloquent Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] in which, in speaking of the Missouri River, he states that it gives its color to the Mississippi; that it is really the Mississippi; and that the waters of the Missouri are those which create nearly all the damage and all the trouble, or words to that effect.

This United States officer proves by actual measurements and figures, going back as he does over all the times of great floods, that it requires the storage of a certain number of acre-feet of water to prevent such floods. By an acre-foot I mean a body of water a foot deep and an acre in length and breadth.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. MANTLE. I do not think it is quite fair that, considering the magnitude of the question under discussion, the Senator from Wyoming should be compelled to address empty seats. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Deboe,	McLaurin,	Sewell,
Allison,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Shoup,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. MANTLE. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment again?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MANTLE. In the interest of harmony, Mr. President, I desire to compromise this amendment, if it is possible. I again renew my motion that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference. I am satisfied that if any immediate results are to flow from this discussion and out of this situation they will come most speedily through that process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana to recommit the report to the conference committee.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, noting the result of the last vote, it may as well be understood that I can not be satisfied until this bill again goes to conference and another and fuller trial is made to secure acceptance of certain Senate amendments. And I can not without further protest permit the bill to pass, so I must continue until I can convince our friends of the necessity for further conference and further effort on the part of the Senate conferees.

When interrupted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE], I was going on to say that the engineers had made a calculation, taking the Missouri at flood time, of just how much reservoir capacity it would take to overcome, first, all the floods for all time in the Missouri River above Sioux City. Then another calculation of how much it would take in reservoir capacity to impound water enough to prevent all floods down as far as St. Charles, which would cover almost the entire Missouri River.

Having established the fact that the five reservoirs that he had surveyed in Colorado and Wyoming would cost less than $2,000,000, he goes on to show that three times that capacity in reservoirs would absolutely impound water enough in the five reservoirs to prevent for all time floods as far down as Sioux City.

He then states, without figuring closely and getting down to decimals, that it would take a little more than twice the amount already given to impound water enough to insure us against any floods in that river from its head all the way down to St. Charles. I am condensing rather than reading from the report, so as to make it short. I shall be compelled to read a little, however, later on, because it is put so much better in the report than I can put it as to what these reservoirs will accomplish.

The preliminary survey was authorized by the Congress, and the report happens to be made by Mr. H. M. Chittenden, then a captain, now, I believe, a major in the United States Army and in the Corps of Engineers. A most competent engineer and gentleman, as everyone knows.

Connected with this report are a very large number of expensive plates and diagrams, which, I venture to say, have not been thoroughly examined by the conference committee, as they could be in a very few moments if they would see fit to go into session again.

You will observe, Mr. President, upon examination, how complete this report is, and how well the work has been done by this distinguished engineer, who was trusted with this work, and who went into it exactly as any other engineer necessarily would, without prejudice, bound to respond to his superior officer, and through other superior officers to the Senate, with an unbiased and unprejudiced report. So it seems that he has carefully examined all the rivers that flow into the Mississippi, so that we may understand the effect of reservoirs at the head of the Mississippi or the Missouri or the Ohio.

I have explained, in a brief way it is true, some of the reasons why those waters stored upon the streams west of the Mississippi River count so much more effectually than if stored on the eastern side. There is another feature of it—in fact there are many interesting features, and I regret that want of time will prevent me referring to a great many of them. For instance, in the impounding of water where you use it incidentally for irrigation we are securing much greater capacity and results than where the water is not used for the purposes of irrigation. Why? Because when you impound a given amount of water in a reservoir and take it out and spread it over the land for irrigation, you can empty your full reservoir and spread the water out upon the hungry and thirsty soil, and it will there be absorbed. It will not find the stream at once, and you will fill your reservoirs again, and then you have got two reservoirs full of water instead of one held back in the time of high water and flood. Then you will again empty and spread upon the soil, and so on again and again.

Thus you go on from slope to slope until you have got as many reservoirs full of water practically retained as you have got stretches of land below where water can be spread over and used. The water having served its purpose once and gone back to the stream, it can be again taken out and again and again spread over the soil, and still again find the stream, and finally reach its destination in the rivers below and on to the sea.

That is another one of the reasons why I ask that reservoirs in the interest of navigation may be constructed in the arid region, because, I state again and maintain it, that every reservoir in the arid region is worth for the purpose of storing water several times as much as a reservoir of the same size would be in a humid country; and, indeed, the reservoir that is the most valuable is a reservoir that you can locate nearest to the clouds, nearest to the heavens.

If you can get up near or above timber line and there have your reservoir so much the better, for you can use the water over and over again, so that a few million dollars will eventually, when used for irrigation reservoirs in the arid country, entirely overcome all overflows from mountain tops to the sea.

If the 41 reservoirs which have been built in the humid regions, and which cost about $1,800,000, had been built high up in the arid region, you would have had more than twenty-five times as much value to the Lower Mississippi as now, and you would have the benefit of the same all the way down the whole length of the Missouri River, and in the Mississippi River from the junction of the Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. President, I want to make the point sufficiently plain that, in the unfortunate use of the word "irrigation," which seems to be so offensive to certain parties, we mean no harm; that we are working for reservoirs to retain water, and that we are getting the cheapest and most useful reservoirs known to man by using the water for irrigation.

It is true that about 15 per cent of the water used in irrigation may evaporate and that 85 per cent will find the streams; but you can see that even the evaporation is water retained at the time when you wish it retained, and the remaining 85 per cent is kept back when you have too much water, and is at your command later on to renew the streams when you have too little water.

The water evaporated through irrigation brings forth plant life and eventually more rainfall, and thus nature renews herself.

Mr. President, if all the laws we have passed in the last four years were at stake upon one hand and the matter of the acceptance of this reservoir amendment was at stake upon the other, I would, if I had my choice, take this as in preference to all else. Can I say more to show my earnestness in this matter?

It seems to me, Mr. President, the ignorance regarding this subject is so dense as to excuse any length of time in argument and explanation taken here on the part of those who would like to make plain their support of this policy, which is of such transcendent importance to the great West.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I dislike exceedingly to take any action in relation to this bill other than that which we are now pursuing, but I am willing to try once more to see whether or not any agreement can be obtained touching this matter. My own judgment is that there can not be, but I am willing to make the trial.

Mr. WARREN. I really trust the Senator will try to add to his hopefulness a little, and not go into the conference prejudiced with the mournful feeling that he can not succeed. I know he will do his best.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator has not been through what I have on this matter in the last two or three days, but I am willing to make the trial.

Mr. WARREN. I feel sure the Senator is willing to make another struggle, and that he will do the best he can. I believe that if he goes into the conference heartily he will succeed, for I feel that justice must prevail.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, it seems to me if the House understands that the hour of 12 o'clock will arrive and this bill not become a law, inasmuch as they have such a vast sum at stake, they will surrender. All we need to do, it seems to me, is to give them the ultimatum; and that is what we ought to do. They are constantly doing it to us, and I would do it at once to them.

Mr. FRYE. If the ultimatum is to be given, I am not going to consent to a recommittal—not by any manner of means.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to say a word on that motion, Mr. President. I hope if this matter goes back to conference that it will be understood that a faithful effort is also to be made with reference to the other projects which some of us regard as of even greater importance than those which have occasioned such a lengthy discussion here this evening. I hope the bill will go back to conference with the full understanding that all these matters will be taken up and a faithful effort made all along the line, so that some of the Southern projects which have been excluded by the committee of conference on account of the opposition which comes from another direction, and not from the conferees on the part of the Senate, will be restored.

If that is the understanding, I shall make no objection to the bill going back to conference; but I do not think it ought to go back to conference simply because a big fight has been made by the friends of one particular measure in order that an effort may be made to change the report to please the gentlemen who have been struggling so hard to carry out their own views in reference to their particular projects.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I want to second the observations of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pasco], especially with reference to certain improvements in Texas. There has been a very important improvement in our State, one upon which the hearts of the senior Senator and the junior Senator from Texas have been set; and it has been thrown out by this conference report. It is of very great importance that there should be consideration given to that matter and that the improvement which the Senate originally provided for as a part of the river and harbor bill should be in some way preserved.

I for one desire to protest against the idea that any particular clause of the bill as it passed the Senate which has been amended out by the conference should now be taken up to the exclusion of other desirable features of the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, I want to express the feeling I entertain that the Senate conferees will do their very best to secure recognition for all sections and all interests.

I again renew my motion to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana to recommit the report to the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I wish to add my views to those of the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Texas in regard to the subjects-matter about which the committee of conference ought to confer upon the recommittal of this bill.

Mr. President, I have said nothing in regard to what I consider to be the treatment, somewhat invidious, that is shown toward a most necessary improvement in my State. That improvement not only affects the State of Louisiana, but it affects the whole valley of the Mississippi. The improvements given to deepen the harbors of the Northern cities are for harbors already in existence. The improvements are for deepening from 30 to 35 and from 35 to 40 feet in the harbors of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Baltimore. The harbor at New Orleans is hourly threatened with destruction, for the outlet of the Mississippi is hourly threatened with destruction. We ask but a paltry sum, a million six hundred thousand dollars, in order to open up the deep channel at the mouth of the Mississippi River, through which the vast exports of grain now coming down that river may go to Europe at the cheapest possible rate.

This was granted by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate. In conference this small appropriation was stricken out. This appropriation given to open the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River was stricken out, and the appropriation that came over in the river and harbor bill from the House for improving the outlet of the Mississippi River, without any continuing contract, without specifying what pass is to be improved, was retained. Mr. President, I protest against that. While I shall make no opposition to this bill of a purely factitious character, I do insist that when the bill goes back to the committee the matter of the improvement of the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River be taken into consideration as well as the matter of reservoirs for the arid districts in the Northwest.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR MORRILL.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which, on motion of Mr. PROCTOR, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the proceedings in memory of the late Senator Justin S. Morrill, 4,000 copies for the use of the House and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

J. S. STEARNS LUMBER COMPANY.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7865) to pay to the J. S. Stearns Lumber Company $379.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the J. S. Stearns Lumber Company, of Odanah, Ashland County, Wis., $379.03, the amount of a certain judgment recovered by the United States against the said J. S. Stearns Lumber Company for the value of timber cut from certain lands in Ashland County, Wis., claimed by the United States, and which lands were subsequently determined by the Supreme Court to be owned by the railroad company, and from which the timber was removed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator to give way that I may call up a small bill for the relief of the heirs of Neil McEnery, of Johnstown, Pa.

Mr. CHANDLER. The executive session will take but a few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire insists on his motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill. The report has been read. I ask unanimous consent that its reading may be dispensed with. I simply desire to state that we have again met, had a conference, and no change has been made in the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The report is before the Senate. Is the Senate ready for the question? The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have not a word to take back in what I have said concerning the outrageous conduct of one branch of Congress toward another. I have not a sentence to recall from all that I have uttered in support of the measure which was so imperiously and arrogantly stricken from the bill by the conference committee. I have been appealed to by very many dear friends here in the Senate who have issues at stake in this bill which they claim are large, and they feel that I am doing them personal damage and their States damage by longer delaying the river and harbor bill through further discussion, although the need of more light on this subject is admitted.

But I will put it upon a higher ground. I am appealed to by those who have in charge the great annual appropriation bills, and I am confronted with the statement from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it is impossible to complete the sundry civil bill and one or two other bills equally important or nearly so unless this river and harbor bill is now acted upon in this body. So far as I am concerned, if my associates feel as I do about it, I am willing to do what the section of country I come from always does—yield to the best good of the country at large—though our interests locally may be overridden for the time being, through the selfishness and machinations of a few men temporarily in power at another place in this building.

Now, Mr. President, I hope to see a change some time—yes, and soon—whereby the United States may practically as well as theoretically extend far enough to take in all of the people who have to pay tribute and pay taxes in the several States.

Mr. President, the strongest appeal that I have made here tonight was for the honor of the Senate. The strongest feeling I have had was that it was an infamous imposition upon the Senate for certain conferees from elsewhere to insist that they should neither report a disagreement nor review their work upon the request of the Senate.

The Senate, whether impressed by my argument or by expediency, has reconsidered its action and has sent the bill back to the committee of conference again. The conference committee now come here and report that after due consideration and reconsideration it is impossible to secure any change. Of course we know that the committee from the Senate has done from first to last all it could. Having established that one point to the honor of the Senate and the credit of this body, I am willing to submit this one time, under duress and protest, to the other features of the imposition, as I term it, and the arrogance of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. VENNUM.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 718) for the relief of Benjamin F. Vennum, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va., to report it without amendment. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] desires the present consideration of the bill. It is very brief.

Mr. ELKINS. It is just five lines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length. The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that Benjamin F. Vennum, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va., who served under the name of Franklin Vennum in Company D of the Third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry in the Mexican war, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from that regiment on the 17th day of August, 1846, and that the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge as of said date.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, just one word. Does the bill have the effect of giving the beneficiary a pension or anything?

Mr. ELKINS. Nothing in the world.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the usual sentence be put at the end.

Mr. ELKINS. Do not amend it. It would have to go back to the House for action there. The amendment is not necessary. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11712) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

JAMES McMILLAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Secretary to read the report again.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senate conferees receded from the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. It disagrees to the purchase of a site?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It gives the Mount Vernon Square as a site.

Mr. CHANDLER. And appropriates no money.

Mr. BUTLER. The effect of the report is to accept the House bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. Exactly. It leaves that just as it is now. The report was agreed to.

SOPHIA W. BUXTON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1206) granting an increase of pension to Sophia W. Buxton, to report it without amendment. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is very anxious that the bill shall pass. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Sophia W. Buxton, widow of Charles Buxton, late major Eleventh Vermont Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND GETTYSBURG RAILWAY.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9428) to authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company of Maryland to extend its lines of road into and within the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. W. BABCOCK,
G. M. CURTIS,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. GORMAN. I was requested to ask the consent of the Senate that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] be excused from further service upon the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] be appointed in their stead. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] also requests that he be excused from service upon the Committee on Commerce, and that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] be appointed in his place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement will be read at the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

That Senators TURPIE and MILLS be excused from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that Senators BACON and MONEY be appointed, respectively, in their stead; that Senator WHITE be excused from the Committee on Commerce, and that Senator TURNER be substituted in his place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The changes in committee service will be made as requested, in the absence of objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 22, 23, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of said amendment strike out the words "the four dry docks named in said provision" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "One of the four dry docks named in said provision in addition to that at Boston;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 55 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. A. BOUTELLE,
S. G. HILBORN,
AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the conferees on the part of the two Houses on the naval appropriation bill have had a careful conference, the second conference, and have closed up the bill with the exception of the provisions relating to the number of ships, both battle ships, cruisers, armored cruisers and protected cruisers, and the other amendments which follow in reference to their construction, and the Senate amendments relating to armor plate and the establishment of a Government armor factory. The Senate conferees found that the House of Representatives would not yield in this respect. The armor plate and armor establishment were the subjects of debate in the House and a yea-and-nay vote was taken.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator means a vote on the conference report?

Mr. HALE. On the conference report; and the House by a majority of about 50—eighty-odd to thirty-odd—sustained the House conferees. Under those conditions we could not get the House conferees to yield. The whole subject now, and a most serious one it is at this late hour, is for the action of the Senate. It was the understanding that the situation should be stated to the Senate and that a vote should be asked upon a motion to recede from the Senate amendments.

The operation of the Senate armor-plate amendments not only covers the ships authorized in this bill, but it suspends the work upon the ships authorized at the last session of Congress and subjects them to the $300 limit. So that if the Senate provisions are insisted upon, not only the vessels authorized by this act, but the ships authorized by the last act, will be hung up, unless a contract for $300 can be made. It is a very serious situation.

Mr. STEWART. Let me inquire of the Senator if they would accept it if we modified it so as to permit contracts under the former law for the ships already ordered?

Mr. HALE. The trouble is that there have been no contracts. If there had been contracts, that would end it and we could not interfere. But the Secretary did not make any contracts, and all of the ships provided for in the last act are hung up by this provision unless we can get a $300 contract.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose we should exempt those contracts from the operation of this act; would not the House yield then?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not think the House would yield.

Mr. STEWART. I would be in favor of exempting those.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did the Senate conferees try to exempt from the operations of the Senate provision the three ships, the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio, so that their armor could be provided at $400?

Mr. HALE. That was talked about, and there was talk about striking out all of the provisions, leaving everything as it was under the act of last year, but they were not ready to accept that at present. As I have said, the understanding is that a vote shall be taken in the Senate on the proposition of receding from the Senate amendments.

Mr. STEWART. Would it not be in order first to move to amend the proposition in the Senate before a motion is made to recede?

Mr. HALE. I know that can not be done. Of course the report must be taken or rejected, and the report is a disagreement.

Mr. STEWART. Can we make the offer to them?

Mr. HALE. Senators can indicate. That is the opportunity we have.

Mr. STEWART. I should be in favor of exempting those three ships.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator yield to me? I should like the Senator, before discussing this part of the bill, to state what, if any, provision is made in reference to docks—changing the docks from wood to granite. I see there is a special provision.

Mr. HALE. There are three docks that are still hung up, no contract made, and one of them is to be of granite. The others remain under the provision of last year.

Mr. CHANDLER. Wood?

Mr. HALE. Timber.

Mr. CHANDLER. Timber.

Mr. TILLMAN. Which one?

Mr. HALE. The Secretary decides.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Secretary decides which is of wood and which is of granite.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator tell me whether the Boston dock is to be wood or granite?

Mr. HALE. That has already been decided. The contract has been made.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is granite?

Mr. HALE. That is granite. The provision is that one more is to be granite and two timber.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand the situation, a year ago we authorized the purchase of armor for the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio at $400 a ton. We were told then that the armor would be needed very soon; that it was an emergency order; and being in the midst of war, the Senate receded from the position it had taken twice deliberately before and authorized the purchase of armor at $400 a ton for those three vessels, which, we were told, were nearing completion and which were to be used in the Spanish war. Now we are informed that no contract has been made for the armor for those three vessels; and the Senator, in making the report from the conference committee, states that unless we recede from the amendments adopted we will hang up those three vessels for which we authorized the armor a year ago.

Mr. HALE. I do not say unless we recede. I say that if the Senate amendment is taken absolutely as it passed, it will hang those up unless they can get a contract at $300; but I do not say that if some adjustment is made between the two Houses, some compromise is reached, leaving the act of last year or $445 in force, it will hang it up.

Mr. BUTLER. A year ago, as I have stated, we authorized a contract for the armor for these three battle ships at $400 a ton. We did it in the midst of war, and because we were told that those vessels might be got ready for use in that war.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no. These were the new ships that were authorized. There was no expectation that they would be got ready for use in the war. They are the new ships authorized in the same act.

Mr. BUTLER. They were authorized in the act. I will accept the Senator's amendment, and will not controvert that point. But it was the act which we had under consideration at the time when so much stress was laid upon the fact that we were in the midst of war and should pay any price; be held up and deliver, no matter what was charged, because we were in the midst of war. But the armor trust did not see fit to avail itself of that opportunity to get $400 a ton for armor, because they had conceived a new design. They had got up a bogus secret, so-called process, that they were to ask us to pay them $545 a ton for, and thinking, I suppose, that they could get it through this Congress, they were not anxious to make the contracts, and our vessels have waited for us to authorize them to get $145 a ton more than we authorized then—war prices.

I am willing for one, though I am not disposed to allow a man to take advantage of his own wrong, to allow them $400 a ton for the armor for those three vessels, the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, authorized a year ago, rather than to be told and have the country understand that we are holding up three vessels which are ready for armor, rather than to have claims for damages for not having the armor ready, a contract for the hulls having been authorized. But I am not in favor of going further. Therefore I ask the Chair if it is in order now to move to instruct the conferees to yield to that extent, that we will provide in this bill with the conferees of the House for a contract for the armor for the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio at the price named in the act of last session, and insist as to the amendment of $300 a ton or the alternative of an armor factory, if they do not make the contract for the vessels authorized in this act? I desire to make that motion. I ask the Chair if it is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question before the Senate is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Of course there can be no instructing of conferees, for it would cease then to be a free conference. I may state to the Senate that the understanding of the committee was that this should be brought into the Senate and the situation stated and then develop the feeling of the Senate, because there must be another conference, and that can be tested by a motion that the Senate recede from its amendment, which I propose to make. If the Senate declines to recede, then the conferees will come back. There will be another meeting, and then perhaps something in the line of what the Senator suggests may be agreed to by both conferees, and that will again be submitted to the Senate. But this is rather in the process of developing the expression of the Senate. I enter the motion.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that the Senator from Maine intends to move that the Senate recede from its amendments? I must earnestly oppose that motion, and I oppose it for the reason I have just stated. I trust the Senate will promptly vote down that motion, and vote it down for the purpose of having a further conference and a compromise along the lines I have suggested; a compromise that is fair, a compromise that covers all that concerns the interests of our Government and the ships that are now being built and manned for completion; that is that we yield, so far as the three vessels which are already authorized are concerned, and pay $400 as provided a year ago, but we will ask the conferees to insist upon the amendment already adopted by the Senate with reference to the vessels authorized in this act.

I submit that that is a fair compromise between the two bodies. It is all that the interests of this Government in the midst of war demanded, and it is more than justice on the part of taxpayers and the Treasury of the United States. Therefore, I trust the Senate will promptly vote down the motion which the Senator from Maine will make, in order that we may have a conference with a view to getting an agreement on the lines I have indicated.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the question before the Senate?

Mr. HALE. My motion—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. My motion is to recede from Senate amendment numbered 55, as to armor. I bring that up first.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that vote to be taken before the question is put on the adoption of the conference report?

Mr. HALE. It has to be.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the conference report is adopted?

Mr. HALE. No, I beg pardon; it does not have to be. The conference report leaves these things outside. I think what the Senator has in mind is correct. The conference report should be adopted first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the conference report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator state what has been done with the other amendments which have been disposed of that were in controversy before the committee made its report. The report states some dozen amendments, some where the House receded and some where the Senate receded. State in a general way what disposition has been made of them.

Mr. HALE. Let the Clerk read the amendments.

The SECRETARY. Upon amendments numbered 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 55 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

Mr. HALE. The Senator wants those which have been agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Those which have been agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 22, 23, and 24.

Mr. HALE. Those are in relation to sites for new dry docks.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, with an amendment as follows—

Mr. HALE. That I have already explained.

The Secretary read as follows:

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 55 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, at this late hour I will only—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The adoption of the conference report simply covers the points which have been agreed on, and not the amendments numbered 45 to 55, inclusive.

Mr. HALE. It only covers those where there has been an agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator to let the report be agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the same suggestion. That is my point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine now make his motion?

Mr. HALE. I make the motion, on which the discussion will proceed, that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 55.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina will pardon me. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if he intends to ask any instruction from the Senate on the amendments numbered 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 55?

Mr. HALE. I propose to take that up after this amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. BUTLER. May I be allowed to ask the Senator why he does not take them up in order?

Mr. HALE. Because it largely depends upon the action in reference to the armor plate as to what shall be done with the other ships. It is not a very material subject as to how many ships we shall authorize, if none of them are going to be built, if the provisions are such that no contracts can be made.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not see why the Senator says that the provisions are such that none of them can be built. I agree with him if we simply adopt the provision of $300 a ton and do not have the provision for an armor factory none will be built, because the amendment for $300 a ton is not worth the paper on which it is written unless we retain the amendment for an armor factory. Suppose we keep in one. I suppose if we keep one we will keep both, for I trust the Senate, at this late hour, after four years' discussion, will not give it up. We will surely build these ships if we keep these amendments in. Now, it seems to me the question whether we shall have two battle ships or three battle ships is important enough to be disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I differ with the Senator in that regard, and it is for the reason I have stated that I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 55.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending motion, on which the Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina, of course, wishes to discuss that motion, and I desire to discuss it before the vote. I also wish to say that however that question may be decided, it seems to me that these other amendments, which the Senator has passed over pro forma, are also in order, and they deserve some discussion. I will have something to say in respect to them.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly they deserve discussion, and I shall make a motion in respect to them when this is disposed of, no matter how it is disposed of.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, at this late hour, fatigued as the Senate is, I shall intrude on its patience to the smallest degree possible. The amendment numbered 55 is the one which I, in connection with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], offered as an alternative proposition to the limitation of $300 a ton by which the Navy Department will be prohibited from giving more than that; and then, if they can make no contracts, they shall proceed immediately, under the appropriation made, to erect an armor factory for the Government in which we will be able to manufacture our own armor.

If the Senate recedes, the first thing that happens is that we will go back to the House price of $445 a ton. We have Captain O'Neil's own statement, in the letters which were read here by me day before yesterday, that the price of $445 will not get you the Krupp armor. It will not get the "best" armor, and it will not get any better armor than that which we now get at $400. Therefore I am sure the Senate under no consideration would ever agree that we should go to the House figures of $445 a ton, when our own expert at the Navy Department tells us that that will not get the best Krupp armor and that we are now getting the same at $400 that we would get at $445.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me a word right there?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. What does the expectation of the House appear to be about the effect of the price of $445? We can get the harveyized armor for $100, because the manufacturers now say they can make that at a profit. They say they will not manufacture the other armor for less than $545. What kind of armor does the House expect we are to get at $445?

Mr. HALE. That must depend, of course, upon the bidding by these contracting firms.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the communication which you had printed as chairman, sent you by the Secretary of the Navy, appear letters from these firms in which they say they will not make Krupp armor for less than $545 a ton.

Mr. HALE. They have also before in the controversy, as the Senator knows, declared that they would not furnish armor for $425 or $400.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; and they always lied, if you will excuse me for using such a harsh term. We have to use such terms when we trade with such people in order to force them to give us decent consideration.

Mr. HALE. I was only trying to answer the Senator from New Hampshire, who asked me what I believed the House conferees expected to accomplish if the $445 rate should be agreed to.

Now, if the Senator will allow me, I will say that that must depend upon the bidding of these contract firms; and although they have said they would not furnish this armor, this new process armor, this secret process armor, the Krupp process, at less than $545, they have heretofore, in controversies we have had with them, stated that they would not furnish armor for $400 or $425, and afterwards they furnished it.

I do not know, I can not tell, and nobody can tell, whether these companies will come down to $445 a ton. I have no doubt that if they were confronted with the fact that Congress did fix upon a fair rate, on what might be considered a fair compromise, they would come down; but how far they would come I do not know. My impression is that they would come down to $445 for Krupp armor, but I do not know. I think so, particularly if they were threatened with a Government plant.

Mr. STEWART. I want the threat carried out.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will not take the trouble to read from Captain O'Neil's letter, because it is in the RECORD, and any Senators who feel so disposed can look at it. I will state that the substance of it is that Captain O'Neil himself says that these people will not, according to their own letters, which are also published in the RECORD, furnish Krupp armor for less than $545 a ton. They have in the past yielded to pressure when forced to let go some of their anticipated gains, and they came from $550 a ton down to $400, after having paltered with us for two years at $450 a ton and then at $425, only giving in at last when the war came on, and we had to let them have these contracts after we had held out for two years at $300 a ton, and finally accepted the armor at $400 a ton, which at the time they said they could not manufacture it for.

In these very same letters sent in last week they say they prefer to make Harvey armor at $400 a ton than to make the other at $545 a ton. For these reasons, I say, we ought not to have anything to do with men whose ideas of decency and honesty and regard for the consideration which they owe to this Government lead them to dicker with us in such a Jewish spirit. What they propose to do ought not to have any weight here. The question is, What is it our duty to do and how are we to protect this Government from further robbery on the part of these two corporations which have been formed into a trust?

Now, I want to call attention to some facts upon which I base the belief that this proposal to sell us Krupp armor at this increased price is simply a scheme by which, under some slight variations of the material, 1 per cent, I believe it is, of chromium being added, or some little trifle—

Mr. HALE. From 1 to 2 per cent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Practically, with some slight variations in the process of manufacture, they will give us the very same armor we now get at $400, and which we believe, after the most thorough investigation, can be made in a Government plant for less than $300 a ton. This is simply, I will say a scheme—I will repeat that word for the lack of any better—to bamboozle us to yield again to the situation, which is, that we are at their mercy, that there are no other armor factories in this country, that we can not buy anywhere else, and so they simply say to us, "Buy our armor or build no ships."

What do I base that belief on? On the 8th of February, 1898, Mr. HALE presented Senate Document No. 127, in which there is a report of a hearing made by the Senate Naval Committee, when Secretary Long and Captain O'Neil, the two officers responsible for contracting for ships and armor, appeared before the committee; and here is what the chairman asked Captain O'Neil:

The CHAIRMAN. From what you have been able to learn of this new armor, is there anything about it that would justify us in waiting for any new process to make the armor for these ships?

That was as to the three ships we then had on the stocks.

Captain O'NEIL. I am sure there would not.

Lower down the chairman asked Secretary Long:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary, in view of what has been said about this new process, which may have the merit of being superior, and which foreign governments have acted upon and made contracts upon, and the right to make which has been secured by these contractors in this country, would you, if the matter was left by Congress in your hands, consider this new process or wait for its development, or would you go on and make contracts for the armor under the old processes, which may not be as good as the new?

Secretary LONG. I should go on and make contracts for the armor under the old process, because the new is not sufficiently developed, nor is there reason to believe that it will be in a sufficiently reasonable time so that I should be justified in waiting on it.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you say that there is not enough in this new process to justify your waiting?

Secretary LONG. I do not think so.

Last night the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]—who I am happy to see is attending to his duties to-night and sitting up with the rest of us to get this bill and others through, though he did not remain last night to hear the discussion which he precipitated—presented the claim or the argument that if we did not contract for armor to put on these battle ships we would be liable to damages to these parties for the delay.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say that.

Mr. TILLMAN. You said that in effect.

Mr. LODGE. I said nothing about damages.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg your pardon. You said there would be a claim presented, as I understood you.

Mr. LODGE. I did not. That must have been said by another Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no use for me to get into any controversy as to veracity; but it is a mere opinion of mine that you did say so, and I think the RECORD will prove it.

Mr. LODGE. I did not.

Mr. TILLMAN. But whether you did or not, I know that idea prevailed here, and that Senators are led to believe, and some Senator has stated, that if we did not contract for the armor and get it ready by the time the contractors who are building the ships want the armor, we will be liable to have these parties come forward with a claim that they are damaged by the delay.

Here is what occurred at that same hearing—

Mr. LODGE. Here is what I said. [Exhibiting a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.] The Senator may read it.

Mr. TILLMAN. You read it, please.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator point out anything that I said about a claim or liability for damages?

Mr. TILLMAN. If I am mistaken, Mr. President, I certainly have no purpose of misquoting the Senator. I simply had that impression. I will pass on and leave my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to examine your remarks to see if there is anything bearing on that; otherwise it will be understood that I got that idea, not from the Senator from Massachusetts, but from some other Senator who discussed this question.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator did not get it from me.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, here is the situation in regard to that: The chairman asked a question of Chief Constructor Hichborn, who has the making of these plans for battle ships and who is the superintendent of their construction, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Supposing nothing is done at this session of Congress. The Secretary is not able to make a contract with these parties, and of course no Government plant can be put in readiness as soon as that. What would you do with these ships eight, nine, or twelve months from now, when they were ready for armor?

Here is Mr. Hichborn's reply:

The work is so arranged that the ships can go on to completion, lacking a small amount of work, except putting on the armor. The vessels can be delivered at the navy-yard and the armor put on by the Government.

So any argument that we would be liable to claims for damages by reason of delay has no foundation in fact, as I said before, because the contract now made by the Government with those who build these ships is to the effect that no delay occasioned by the failure to furnish armor shall give any right to damages.

Mr. President, I presented last night what I suppose was rather a caustic criticism of the delay of the Navy Department in not making the contracts for the armor for battle ships ordered last July in the naval appropriation bill and in bringing the question on us in the last three weeks of this session.

Mr. HALE. Let me say here, in justice to the Navy Department, that I have made some inquiries. I had the impression that something came from the Department before this, and I thought I had it. I had a letter from the Secretary inclosing a copy of a communication made after the hearing, in which he says that under the circumstances he does not think it advisable to go on and make contracts for the three ships. So the Department should be relieved from the charge of having waited and not notified us in any way until the present time.

Mr. CHANDLER. When was that?

Mr. HALE. Some time in December.

Mr. LODGE. December 12.

Mr. CHANDLER. Last December?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Nothing is said about it in the last annual report of the Secretary.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to inquire if that letter has been published?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it never has been published; it has never come before the Naval Committee; it has not seen the light of day as an official document for the information of the Senate committee or of the Senate until to-night.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say that I have tried hard to do my duty as a Senator and as a member of the Naval Committee in regard to this whole matter. I have sought every particle of information that could be got from any source, and was always glad to get it. All I wanted was the truth. Now, here is presented what is claimed to be an important piece of information from the Navy Department, and in all the committee meetings we have had and all the discussions which have been had in committee and here in the Senate the communication has not been presented until this very hour.

Mr. President, I submit that that is not the proper way to deal with important questions of the kind. The communication has not been published as a document, it has not been furnished to us as members of the committee. I regret that it is my duty to call attention sharply to this fact, but if there is any information of this kind in possession of the chairman of the committee, then the committee and every member of it was entitled to it, especially when it was known that we were very much interested in this question, that we were giving a great deal of attention to it, and that we were trying to arrive at the facts.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to repeat what I said yesterday, that it was only within two weeks that it came to my knowledge in the Senate that the contracts for the armor for the three battle ships authorized a year ago had not been made. I may have been dull and negligent, but, as a matter of fact, I did not know of it, and it was a surprise when it came to me within the last fortnight.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there is nothing in the last annual report of the Secretary of the Navy even hinting at any such thing.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know as to that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have examined it, and have tried to see if there is the slightest hint that he had not contracted for armor because he knew that there was better armor obtainable and was waiting to ask authority of Congress to get it. There is nothing in it—simply a statement that the contract had not been made.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I do not think it is very material, because it does not touch the real merits of the case. It may be somewhat my fault.

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir; the chairman of the committee has never dealt unfairly or in any underhanded way with his colleagues, but has always given us everything promptly which came to him, and I do not want him to take any blame which does not belong to him.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is very kind to me, as he always is. I am glad to say our relations are of the most friendly character in everything, and he is the most valuable member on the committee; but still, if this letter was sent to me as well as the chairman of the House committee, as quite likely it was—

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator directly, Does he have any recollection of it?

Mr. HALE. I was about to say that for some cause or other, in the multiplicity of matters and communications with which I have had to deal, it never made any lodgment in my mind. Whether I was away—for I have been away several times this winter—whether I was away at that time I do not know. I can say that if anybody had asked me regarding it until within the last day or two, I should have said that nothing of that kind had come; but it seems to me that the letter was sent. So if the blame is upon anybody, if it is a material thing, it should rest upon me rather than upon the Secretary of the Navy.

I do not, however, think that it was very material, because we had our hearings, and we did nothing on this subject until we took up the naval appropriation bill. So if a few weeks have elapsed without the matter being brought to the attention of the committee, I do not think it is very important; but if there is any fault, it is not with the Secretary of the Navy, but it is my fault that I did not read the letter and communicate it to the committee when we first took up the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. After that explanation of the chairman of the Naval Committee, I will give him my surmise as to what happened. Knowing that the naval appropriation bill would originate in the other end of the Capitol, the communication was sent to the chairman of the House committee and not to the chairman of the committee at this end of the Capitol, so we have never heard on this side anything about this matter until the naval appropriation bill was printed with the price of armor at $345 a ton, and nothing more came to us officially until the letter sent to us ten days ago.

Mr. HALE. I think it is quite probable that the Secretary of the Navy, as is the custom in writing a letter of the Department to the chairman of the committee of one House, also wrote to the chairman of the committee of the other House. I thought I had the letter this morning, but it was while I was in charge of another matter, and I must have misplaced it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not making any strictures upon the Secretary of the Navy. I again bear testimony that in my belief there is nothing wrong in this thing with John D. Long; and I do not insinuate that there is anything wrong about any man in the Navy Department connected with this affair. I only say it is unfortunate that the conditions are such that suspicion will rest in the mind of those of us who have been so often confronted by the armor trust that there is an attempt to cheat us again.

Mr. HALE. What is the date of that hearing from which the Senator was reading?

Mr. TILLMAN. February 8 of last year.

Mr. HALE. The hearing in which Secretary Long appeared?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; but the last memorandum was no hearing at all. It was merely a communication.

Mr. HALE. In which the Secretary said there was nothing obligatory about it?

Mr. TILLMAN. That was in February.

Mr. HALE. A year ago.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, I wish to state, as a member of the Naval Committee, that the relations between the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee have always been most pleasant, and certainly with myself I have always felt they were such, and I hope they will continue as such.

The statement made by the chairman is entirely satisfactory; but if the chairman will pardon me, we are still not in possession of the letter to which he refers; and if he has no objection, I think it important to have it read before the Senate at this time.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is a copy of a letter I have here.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. CHANDLER. What letter?

Mr. HALE. The letter to the chairman of the House Naval Committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was February 20.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to hear the letter read.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Maine states that it was in December—

Mr. HALE. December 12.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not seen any such letter to anybody as that of December 12.

Mr. BUTLER. Nor have I seen any such letter.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALE. He inclosed a communication from the head of the Bureau of Ordnance of that date covering this point.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the letter read. It has been referred to here, and I have never seen or heard it.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it is too long. I do not think the reading of it is necessary to get an understanding of this matter. I will give the substance of it. It is dated December 12, and is signed "Charles O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance," and addressed to the Secretary of the Navy. That is all there is in the letter.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina, I am sure, while quite a genius, can hardly tell the contents of a letter which has not been read.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will simply say that I take the statement of the chairman of our committee as to the contents of the letter in perfectly good faith, because I am sure he would not deceive us in any way. I ask that it may go into the RECORD, so that we may all examine it to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. The Senator need not use that letter. Here is the letter I received in which the Secretary says, and it is proper he should have the benefit of this—

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the date of it?

Mr. HALE. Washington, March 3, 1899. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 3, 1899.

SIR: Referring to certain remarks made by Senator CHANDLER before the Senate last night, and quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 2806, implying that the Department has been derelict in not furnishing Congress with information as to the status of armor, I have the honor to forward herewith a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of this date, from which it will be seen that full information with regard to the recent development of armor was furnished—

As I thought—to the chairman of the Senate and House Naval Committees—

To both—

on December 12, 1898.

I also inclose a copy of the letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of December 12, 1898, which gives this information.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,

Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

And he incloses that which is the same as the Senator has just used. I can only say that for some reason or other this matter never made any impression upon me. Whether I read the letter or whether it came in my absence I do not know. But there is no fault, clearly, on the part of the Secretary as to not transmitting this information. All he could do was to send the information to the chairmen of the two committees, and if there is any fault in this matter it is my fault and not his.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. HALE. I do not think that is very material. I am not sensitive about it at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no fault attributable to the Senator from Maine, who has always made accessible to every member of the committee any document which he received, but it remains a fact that can not but influence the members of the committee that they were first within a fortnight confronted with the idea that this price was to be paid for armor. I first knew within ten days that the armor had not been contracted for at $400 a ton for the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio. I first knew it when I saw the letter of Captain O'Neil, that is in Document No. 141, dated February 24. When I saw it, I went to the Senator from Maine, who was then in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, and asked him if he was aware of the fact that the contracts had not been made for the armor of those three ships at $400 a ton, and I think he told me that he was not aware of it.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt of it at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to say, because I am earnest about this matter, that the Senator from Maine has always been fair with the committee, and, I also want to say, always patient and courteous in the debates that arise in connection with these appropriation bills. I do not blame the Senator from Maine; but under the circumstances I am obliged to admit that the Secretary did, on the 12th day of December, say that they had not made the contract for the armor for these battle ships.

The point is, that as each individual Senator in this body and each member of the Naval Committee must answer for his own conduct in a question of this great importance, several of us are dealing with this question now of paying $145 more for armor as a subject that we have taken on our minds within the last fortnight.

As bearing upon the present motion of the Senator to recede, which has no relation whatever to the price of armor, I will read the last paragraph of the communication from Captain O'Neil, dated December 12:

Hence it might be well to insert a proviso in the appropriation bill to the effect that if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to make satisfactory terms as to the cost of armor, he is authorized to proceed at once with the establishment of a Government armor factory, and the necessary funds are made available for this purpose.

Now, if the Senator from South Carolina will allow me right here—

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure. I am always glad to hear the Senator, because he can speak with much more ability than I.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Maine will listen to me, I should like to ask him whether he was aware of the fact that Captain O'Neil in this very communication insists, whatever price we fix for armor, upon having a Government armor plant provided for, in order that if the armor is not furnished at those prices the Government may be able to go on with its ships.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that the Chief of the Bureau exactly insists upon it. He suggests it in case the manufacturers would not agree to the price.

Mr. CHANDLER. Secretary Herbert recommended it irrespective of the price of armor. The present motion of the Senator from Maine ought not to prevail.

Mr. HALE. Let these letters be printed as a part of my remarks.

Mr. BUTLER. That is, the letter of December 12, 1898.

Mr. HALE. Yes; as a part of my remarks.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DECEMBER 12, 1898.

SIR: 1. Recent improvements in the manufacture of armor have developed a product superior in quality to that heretofore used.

2. Up to the present time experimental plates only have been manufactured in this country, but their endurance at the proving ground has been such as to leave no doubt of the superiority of such armor over that at present or heretofore manufactured for service use.

3. The American armor-making companies state that they are prepared to undertake the commercial manufacture of the new-process armor, and to submit it to ballistic tests for acceptance 25 per cent more severe than those now applied to the present service armor. They further state that the price of such armor would probably be $545 per ton; that they were obliged to pay a large sum of money to acquire the process and will have to pay a royalty of $50 per ton on such as they may manufacture.

4. It is impossible for the Bureau to state whether the price named is excessive or not, as the process of manufacture is kept secret; but enough is known to lead the Bureau to suppose that the cost of making armor by the new process is not $100 per ton greater than by the present process, as the principal difference lies in the composition of the metal and in the process of carburization prior to tempering. The same machinery is necessary for handling, forging, bending, and machine finishing in either case; while in the new process one expensive feature is omitted, namely, re-forging after carburization. On the other hand, it may be stated that one of the indirect causes which would justify an increased cost is the reduction in output, which would follow unless increased facilities are provided. Again, it must be admitted that it is due to the enterprise of the armor manufacturers in this country that they have acquired the process of improving armor.

5. The plea brought forward by the armor manufacturers for an advanced price is that if $400 a ton is a proper price for the present quality of armor, 25 per cent more money is a fair price for armor 25 per cent better in quality, and that as the Government now agrees to pay the royalty for the use of the Harvey process, it should pay the royalty on the new process.

6. The armor manufacturers state that they would prefer to continue to make armor as at present, at present prices, than the new-process armor at the price named.

7. From such information as the Bureau has been able to obtain, it learns that about $112 per ton ($54.32 per ton) is being paid by other nations for the new-process armor, except for plates of difficult shape, when more is expected.

8. The advantages to be derived from the use of such armor are obvious and need not be enlarged upon. It being sufficient to state that a 12-inch plate of the new-process armor would be equivalent to a 15-inch plate of the quality now being used, thus affording equal protection on 25 per cent less weight, or 25 per cent greater protection with present weights.

9. As only a limited weight can be assigned for armor for hull and gun protection (23 per cent of the displacement in the Maine class of vessels), it will readily be understood how essential it is that the best and most resisting armor obtainable should be procured, in order that the greatest possible area of the vessel may be well protected, especially the water-line, machinery space, and gun emplacements, within the limit of weight allowable for such purposes.

10. The maximum thickness of the side belt-armor on the Alabama class is 16 inches, whereas on the Maine class (the latest battle ships authorized) it is proposed to have a maximum thickness of 12 inches for the same armor, thus obtaining the same protection on about 25 per cent less weight, and to utilize the weight thus saved by increasing the thickness of the casemate armor, which protects the 6-inch guns, to 7 inches, as against 5½ inches on the Alabama class, thus greatly improving the vessels of the Maine class as regards the distribution of armor—this being upon the assumption that the new-process armor will be supplied to the latter vessels.

11. The Russian battle ship of 12,700 tons displacement now being built at Cramp's shipyard is to carry the new-process armor, one half being supplied by the Carnegie and the other half by the Bethlehem Company, and these companies state that the price they are to receive for this armor is greater than that they would ask of this Government—that is, more than $545 per ton.

12. At the present time there are four battle ships being built for the British Government in England, namely, Vengeance, Canopus, Albion, and Glory; also four battle ships for the Japanese Government, and four armored cruisers for the British Government and three for Japan. In addition to the above vessels, all of which it is understood are to be supplied with the new-process armor, the British Admiralty has asked for tenders for four battle ships and two large armored cruisers, all of which will have armor similar to that to be provided for the other ships referred to above.

13. The special features which characterize the new-process armor are its depth of hard face, extreme toughness of back, and its ability to resist numerous impacts at high velocity, without perforation or cracks, to a marked degree as compared with the present service armor.

14. As the Department is aware, no contracts have yet been made for armor for battle ships Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, or for harbor-defense monitors Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, and Wyoming.

15. The above-named vessels have been contracted for, and it is essential that contracts for their armor should be made immediately after the beginning of the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1899, which will be about seven or eight months after the date of contracts for their hulls and machinery.

16. It will be remembered that in the case of the Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin contracts for their armor were not made until one year and nine months had elapsed after the vessels were contracted for, thus greatly embarrassing the Department and the shipbuilders and rendering it impossible to complete the vessels as soon as might otherwise have been the case.

17. It is estimated that 2,697 tons of armor will be required for each of the three vessels of the Maine class, and 545 tons for each of the four harbor-defense monitors, or a total of 10,271 tons for the seven vessels. At the present price of $411.30 per ton (including royalty), 10,271 tons of armor would cost $4,223,435.30, and at $545 per ton the cost would be $5,597,005, or $1,374,259.80 more for the new-process armor than for the old; but the vessels will receive 25 per cent better protection.

18. Under date of December 2, 1896, the Midvale Steel Company, of Philadelphia, addressed a letter to the Department, stating that it desired to be put on record as offering to furnish armor equal to that now being furnished, or equal to that furnished by any new process, at a price less than that which the Department is now paying. Up to this date the Midvale Steel Company has not manufactured any armor plate and has not the necessary facilities for so doing, nor is it probable that the company has the requisite practical experience and knowledge to enable it to at once enter upon the successful manufacture of armor on a large scale. Much preliminary and experimental work is necessary to such an end, and should this company at once proceed to enlarge its facilities by ordering the necessary machinery, erecting buildings, etc., it is more than doubtful if it could get ready to commence work on the manufacture of armor in time to be in a position to bid on contracts for the vessels now under construction, unless, perhaps, for a comparatively small quantity of the lighter class of plates. Hence the Bureau is of the opinion that most of the armor required will have to be ordered from the same sources as heretofore.

19. The Bureau ventures to express the opinion that it is not expedient to fix by law the price which may be paid for armor, but that it may safely be left to the Department to guard the interests of the Government in this as in the purchase of other material.

20. The new-process armor is referred to as the "improved Harvey," and sometimes as that made by the "Krupp process."

21. The Bureau respectfully recommends that in the next appropriation bill providing funds for the increase of the Navy no restriction be placed upon the cost of armor, but that the matter be left to the Department to make the best terms it can. If this is not done there is danger that a serious delay will be caused, which is likely to result in much embarrassment to the Department, and out of which complications and claims for damages for delays on the part of the shipbuilders will arise and the completion of the vessels be retarded.

22. The Department can take but one attitude in this matter, which is that the vessels of the United States Navy must be the equals of any in the world in all respects; that they must carry the best armor that can be procured, regardless of cost, in order that their prestige and efficiency may not be impaired, and that they shall not suffer by comparison with the latest vessels of other powers.

23. While the armor manufacturers have intimated that the cost of the new-process armor would be $545 per ton, it is by no means certain that they will specify that sum in their bids, especially if they have reason to believe that there will be any competition, or if they know that the Department can, if it chooses, establish an armor factory. The sum named by them is undoubtedly the maximum price they expect to ask. Hence it might be well to insert a proviso in the appropriation bill to the effect that if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to make satisfactory terms as to the cost of armor, he is authorized to proceed at once with the establishment of a Government armor factory, and the necessary funds are made available for this purpose.

Respectfully,

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

[Inclosure.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1899.

SIR: I respectfully call your attention to certain paragraphs in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 2, 1899, which imply that the Department has been derelict in not informing Congress as to the status of armor.

2. Senator CHANDLER, in his remarks before the Senate last night (March 2), is quoted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as saying, on page 2906, at bottom of right-hand column, with reference to Krupp armor: "Should not these facts have been presented to Congress on the first Monday in December?" "Should not the Navy Department and the makers of this armor have come here more than sixty days ago?" etc. "I say, Mr. President, in all candor, that no attempt ought to have been made to ignore the Senate in that way."

3. The facts of the case are that on December 12, 1898, a letter from this Bureau addressed to the Department was sent by you to the chairmen of the Senate and House Naval Committees, setting forth the whole subject, and in paragraph 14 stating that the armor had not been contracted for for the three battle ships of the Maine class and for the four harbor-defense monitors, and that by next July it was essential that these contracts should be made. A copy of this letter is forwarded herewith.

4. The reason why the armor for the above-named vessels was not contracted for is that it is not the practice of the Department to make its armor contracts until several months after the vessels themselves have been contracted for, because the shipbuilder has to prepare the detail plan for each plate, with its dimensions and weight, upon which the Department makes the schedules, classifying the armor into groups and specifying the order of delivery. The ships referred to were only contracted for last fall, and the keel of the first battle ship, namely, the Maine, was only laid two weeks ago; therefore there was no necessity to contract for the armor, and the schedules are not yet ready.

5. Moreover, the armor makers have all the work they can attend to until January next, having the armor for the Alabama class and that for a Russian battle ship and armored cruiser to make, and therefore none could be made for the Maine class until after January 1 next.

Respectfully,

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

MR. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

MR. TILLMAN. Certainly.

MR. PETTIGREW. I wish to ask a question. How far along are we with the ships that we authorized to be built last July? How long will it be before it will be necessary to have armor for them in so far as it has not been furnished?

MR. TILLMAN. I will state for the benefit of the Senator that the Secretary's report, which I have in my hand, gives these dates: The Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin will be completed, respectively, in April, 1900, September 24, 1899, and September 1, 1899. Those are the three ships ordered three years ago. The three battle ships, the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, ordered last July will be completed in June, 1901, and we have Commodore Hichborn's statement here that they can be finished, with their machinery put in and everything except the armor, and then go to a Government navy-yard and have the armor put on at the Government's leisure, without any additional cost or claim for damages.

MR. PETTIGREW. I wish to make this remark simply—

MR. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me—

MR. PETTIGREW. We seem to have got into a practice here of all talking at once and never addressing the Chair.

MR. CHANDLER. That is the custom.

MR. PETTIGREW. And when I address the Chair I am shut out by three trying to talk at the same time. We ought to have some system.

MR. CHANDLER. I want to answer the Senator's question.

MR. PETTIGREW. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor and yielded to me for a question.

MR. CHANDLER. I wish to call attention to something that he has not stated.

MR. PETTIGREW. I shall insist on the Senator from New Hampshire addressing the Chair and getting permission.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

MR. TILLMAN. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

MR. PETTIGREW. I wish to make a brief statement. It has been argued that we have not time to build an armor factory. These facts disclose the truth that we have abundant time to do it now. The ships ordered last July will not be completed until about three years from that time, and the ships ordered now will not be completed until three years from this time. Therefore there is abundant time to build the armor-plate factory if we build it now, and I think it is the duty of the Senate to insist upon this alternative. If the Government can not buy the plate at a reasonable price, an honest price, it should not be held up by a trust and the Treasury plundered with our eyes open with regard to it. We ought to provide for building an armor factory and do it now. Next year Senators will come in here and say, "We have not time to build it."

MR. TILLMAN. If the Senator from South Dakota will allow me, I will state that the last appropriation act gave the Secretary of the Navy authority to do this very thing, to proceed with the building of an armor factory, if those people would not contract at a fair price.

Mr. BUTLER. No; the Senator from South Carolina is mistaken about that.

Mr. TILLMAN. It provided that he could do it after the armor board which was to take the whole subject up and make estimates and plans, which have just come in, had made their report.

Mr. BUTLER. No; the Senator is mistaken. It authorized him to make report to Congress, and then Congress was to act after the report was made, and we have the report here.

Mr. TILLMAN. I knew we had made this instruction to prepare for the establishment of an armor factory as a means of preventing the Government from being robbed continuously and perpetually by this trust, and I thought that we had accomplished it.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair and get permission. The Senator from South Dakota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Dakota will pardon me; I thought the Senator from South Carolina had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina had the floor and yielded to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will not yield to the Senator from North Carolina until he puts himself in order in the proper way, by addressing the Chair and obtaining permission.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I desire to know if the Senator from South Dakota will be kind enough to yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I am in possession of the floor by the sufferance of the Senator from South Carolina, and I yield the floor to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER. Harmony is restored.

Mr. WARREN. What did the gentleman from North Carolina say to the gentleman from South Carolina? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. "It is a long time between" yesterday and today. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Not quite as dry as it is out in your country, if we may judge by the way the Senator from Wyoming begged for "water" last night. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. It would have better results than in your country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will be in order. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that exactly two years ago the amendment we have now placed in this appropriation bill, and which the Senator from Maine has asked us to recede from, was proposed by me, was discussed for a part of two days in the Senate, and just as we were about to take the vote—and I believe now and I believed then a majority was for it—one or two Senators who favored the proposition approached me, and I think the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Massachusetts held a little conference around the place where the Senator from New Hampshire now sits, and suggested that I withdraw that proposition and modify it and provide for a board to investigate the whole question and let us have the full facts, the specifications and plans, before providing for an armor plant.

At their solicitation I modified the amendment. The amendment was promptly adopted. The board was appointed and plans and specifications were drawn. The reports are in the possession of the Senate and of Congress, full and complete. They show that the armor factory can be built anywhere from $700,000 to a million and a half, the highest estimate being a million and a half and the lowest $700,000, or a little more, with all the plans and specifications furnished.

A year ago this whole question would have come up and the very proposition that we have now would have been debated and a vote asked, but we were in the midst of war. That being the case, we did not press the amendment. We are now asking the Senate to adopt two years later what it was ready to adopt, in my opinion, two years ago, when it authorized this board to be appointed. We have all the information. We have simply wasted two years' time, and now, with all the information, we are asking the Senate to provide for what? That if this armor is not furnished at $300 a ton, which the Senate has three times fixed as the limit, then what shall be done? That an armor factory shall be built according to the plans and specifications already prepared under the direction of Congress; and Captain O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, under date of December 12, 1898, says:

The sum named by them—

The armor manufacturers—is undoubtedly the maximum price they expect to ask. Hence, it might be well to insert a proviso in the appropriation bill—

This appropriation bill—to the effect that if the Secretary of the Navy is unable to make satisfactory terms as to the cost of armor, he is authorized to proceed at once with the establishment of a Government armor factory, and the necessary funds are made available for this purpose.

Here is the recommendation and the last official utterance we have from the Navy Department that, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, regardless of the price we fix, in the event the manufacturers will not agree to that price, the Secretary of the Navy should be authorized and the money be appropriated to proceed to build the plant. That is precisely what this amendment provides for and which the chairman of the committee has seen fit, I am sorry to say, to ask us to recede from.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am simply taking the sense of the Senate. It has to be done in that way, and it will be a matter of some instruction to the conferees.

Mr. CHANDLER rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. With the consent of my various interlocutors, unless my amiable friend from New Hampshire wants to be heard—

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a practical suggestion I would make. If there were Senators enough here to make a full vote, I should be willing to have a vote taken immediately on the question of reducing the price of armor; in other words, on the motion to recede from the Senate amendment.

Mr. HALE. I suppose there is a quorum here.

Mr. LODGE. There is a quorum here.

Mr. HALE. Senators are about the building, I suppose. I have not any doubt what the vote will be, but the House has taken a vote, and the House conferees asked us to have a vote taken.

Mr. LODGE. Let us vote.

Mr. HALE. The conferees then—

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to make one or two other statements of fact. I am sorry I have intruded on the Senate as long as I have done.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator proceeds, if we are asked to vote, as many Senators are out, I think we ought to have them in before the Senator concludes his remarks, because it is important for Senators who are to decide this important question to know what they vote on when they come in.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, we know.

Mr. LODGE. We know.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call attention to the fact that Russia has a Government armor factory. I make that statement on the authority of Mr. DALZELL of the House, who represents a district in Pennsylvania, and who has taken a keen interest in protecting Bethlehem and Carnegie in this monopoly. Then I will state, further, that the French Government has an armor factory of its own, and here is a letter of Jules Bœufve, chancellor of the embassy here, to the Hon. JOHN W. GAINES, a member of Congress from Tennessee, dated January 24, 1898, a year ago when this debate was up, making this statement:

EMBAISSE DE FRANCE, AUX ETATS UNIS,

Washington, D. C., January 25, 1898.

DEAR SIR: My inability to confer before this with the military attaché of this embassy prevented me, to my regret, from replying any sooner to your favor of the 13th instant. France builds a part of her men-of-war, armor plate, and artillery in government establishments. The rest is constructed by private industries. This mode is followed so as to allow the Government to be independent of private industries in time of peace. On the other hand, in case of war, the Government needs the assistance of private industries, and it would be too late to improvise them in cases of emergencies. For these reasons recourse is had to both sources of production.

Very truly, yours,

JULES BŒUFVE, Chancellor.

HON. JOHN W. GAINES, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Then follows a similar letter from Count Vinci, of the Italian embassy, of a like tenor, showing that all the leading governments of Europe find it necessary for their protection to have government armor factories, so as to prevent monopolies from robbing them as well as to get the benefit of private assistance in case of war.

Now, we simply occupy the position of being bound hand and foot and tied, helpless, in the grasp of this monopoly, and they have time and again held us up and demanded an increase in price, which we have by our thorough investigation proven to be too much.

With that statement of fact—I could add more—and the Senator from New Hampshire has a great many facts bearing on the subject, I will leave the question to the Senate. I have done, I believe, my full duty in exposing the frauds that have been perpetrated and which it is proposed to continue, and I leave it to the Senate to determine whether this trust shall continue to rob the Government or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate recede from amendment numbered 55. [Putting the question.] The yeas have it.

So the Senate refused to recede from its amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator want a yea-and-nay vote? I should like to see just how many vote "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER. No; we want another conference.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is nemine contradicente, it is all right.

Mr. HALE. It was not that; but it showed the feeling of the Senate. I want to be entirely frank with the Senate. What the Senate conferees want is an expression of the Senate upon the subject after the situation had been laid before them, as it has been. The only good that there would be in taking the vote by yeas and nays would be to demonstrate what is evidently the feeling of the Senate not to recede from its amendment. I do not think it is essential to take up the time by calling for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not insist at all. I have no desire to protract the proceeding.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am afraid that it might develop the lack of a quorum at this hour in the morning. There is not any doubt at all that whatever price may be fixed for armor, there is an overwhelming majority in the Senate in favor of obtaining a Government armor plant, especially as it is now recommended by the Navy Department, by Captain O'Neill.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to say that I was talking when the vote was taken, and I did not vote. I wish to add my vote to the strong chorus of votes opposed to receding from this amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments not agreed to and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments not agreed to and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the motion is put, I desire to inquire whether that includes amendments numbered 45 to 55?

Mr. HALE. All of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. All of them.

Mr. BUTLER. The chairman of the committee came in to get the expression of the Senate. As one member of the Senate I wish to say, before he goes to meet the conferees of the House, that I should be glad to see him, in order to make any compromise that may be necessary with the House, recede from amendments 45, 46, and possibly others, and I will not say 47, because I do not believe our protected cruisers have proven a success, and I do not want to see any more of them built. The ships that have proven to be most valuable by the late war are our battle ships and our armored cruisers. I have been and am now ready to vote for any number of battle ships and armored cruisers that the Navy Department may recommend or that it can be shown can possibly be built before another appropriation bill is passed or put under way.

I am in favor of a big Navy. I am in favor of authorizing the building of as many ships as we can do with dispatch and success. The House authorized three battle ships and three armored cruisers. I would personally be glad to see that many authorized by the bill, and as a member of the Senate and a member of the Naval Committee I want to go on record as saying and making this suggestion to the conferees of the Senate, that if it is necessary to make more concessions to the House further than the concession already mentioned by me, I trust they will yield on those two amendments and agree to the building of three battle ships and three armored cruisers.

Mr. CHANDLER. Only a word more. The Senator from Maine will understand how it happened that the Senate amendment limiting the price to $300 is applicable to the three ships of last year. It was made applicable because the House had provided $445 for the ships last year, and the Department wanted to give $545. So, of course, when the Senate substituted $300 for $445 it was applicable to last year's ships as well as to the ships contained in this bill. Yet it has been understood here by every one who investigated the subject that it would be advisable to allow the Department to go on and make contracts for the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio at $400 a ton.

Mr. BUTLER. I will put the suggestion I made in the form of a motion, if the chairman of the committee does not object to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he had better let the conferees go out without suggestion and see if they can not come to some agreement that we can all stand by. Let us end this war on armor at every session of the Senate. Let us get through with it.

Mr. HALE. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I repeat the suggestion. I trust—and I for one am ready to yield that—that the Senate conferees will yield as to the three battle ships, the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, the price mentioned a year ago, $400 a ton, but insist on the Senate provision as to the vessels authorized in this bill. That is a fair compromise.

Mr. HALE. My motion is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE LORD HERSCHELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State; which was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 3, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you, for the information of the Senate, that it has been arranged to hold a funeral service for the late Lord Herschell at St. John's Church at 5.15 p. m. on Saturday, the 4th instant. At the request of his excellency the British ambassador, the attendance of the members of the Senate is respectfully invited.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN HAY.

HON. GARRET A. HOBART.

Vice-President of the United States, United States Senate.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Daniel,	McBride,	Platt, N. Y.
Bate,	Davis,	McEnery,	Pritchard,
Berry,	Fairbanks,	McMillan,	Quay,
Burrows,	Prye,	Mallory,	Roach,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Sewell,
Caffery,	Hale,	Money,	Shoup,
Carter,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Teller,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Tillman,
Clark,	Kenney,	Perkins,	Turley,
Clay,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Pettus,	Wolcott.
Cullom,	Lodge,	Platt, Conn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, upon which the Senator from New Hampshire calls for a division.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will withdraw the motion that I may submit a conference report on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 24, 75, 77, and 88. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 22, and 76, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For custom-house and post-office at Newport News, Va.: For purchase of site and commencement of building under present limit, $55; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the completion of said building within its present limit of cost."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, 23, 140, 145, 146, 150, 161, 163, and 164 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,

A. P. GORMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,

W. H. MOODY,

THOS. C. McRAE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I can explain amendment No. 10 without its being read at the desk. The conferees found difficulty in the amendment disagreed to at the prior conference as respects the public-building bills, insisting, as they heretofore insisted, that no appropriation for a public building should be included except those that had passed both Houses of Congress and practically met the approval of the President. They were willing to agree to amendment No. 10 providing we would allow to be struck from that amendment Nashua, N. H., and Deadwood, S. Dak., Nashua, N. H., being also included in another separate amendment to this bill, Deadwood, S. Dak., having no place in the bill except in amendment No. 10.

The conferees on the part of the Senate refused to modify amendment 10 so as to exclude Nashua and Deadwood. Thereupon the House insisted that No. 10 should go into disagreement unless we could consent to the modification I have spoken of. Therefore, in making up the report, the Senate receded from certain amendments and the House receded from certain others, and amendment No. 10 was included in the disagreement. When this bill went back to the House, the House of Representatives agreed to No. 10 with an amendment providing for all the bills that had passed both Houses substantially as we had agreed upon it before, excluding Deadwood and Nashua. They have added that amendment or substituted an amendment—in other words, an amendment to our amendment No. 10, excluding Deadwood and Nashua. We, on the part of the Senate, endeavored to persuade them that those bills and amendments covering these various public buildings stood practically upon the same basis as those included in No. 10; that while technically they had not passed both Houses, they had been agreed to here in substantially the same manner as all the bills included in No. 10 had been agreed to and disposed of in this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? Upon what hypothesis, if I may be permitted to ask concerning a matter which occurred in conference, was the proposition made that the two buildings, one in New Hampshire and one in South Dakota, should be excluded and other bills which were in precisely the same status should be included?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no other having the same status included. They exclude from amendment No. 10 Nashua and Deadwood, and also exclude those separate amendments for public buildings at Salem, Evanston, and one or two others.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand now.

Mr. ALLISON. Those were separate amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Nashua and Deadwood bills were in the amendment which the Senator from Iowa offered, making appropriations at 50 per cent?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. The others were offered as Senate amendments and were not included in No. 10.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand it now.

Mr. ALLISON. So the House conferees said they were willing to agree to amendment numbered 10, which is embraced in the great body of public-building bills which passed both Houses. They insisted that we should exclude those two buildings, which were also embraced in amendment numbered 10, because they were bills that had not passed both Houses. We were not able to convince the House conferees that any bills should be included which had not received separate consideration in both Houses, and they invoked the rule—which has often been followed, and just as often violated as followed, in the consideration of these bills—that they would not include any public-building bills which had not received the sanction of the two Houses in separate measures.

The House conferees also declined to agree to the addition to the public building at Hartford, Conn., which was a separate amendment.

They also excluded from the agreement the public building at Cheyenne, Wyo., being amendment numbered 3, on the ground that the public building at Cheyenne was authorized in a separate act with a limit of $250,000; that that limit could not be enlarged in an appropriation bill, but that there must be a separate statute authorizing the enlargement of the limit, thus placing it practically on the same ground as the new public buildings.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask if the matter was fully weighed by the conferees? I wish to say that this amendment was not in the way of getting a larger and better building. It was simply to provide for what might naturally be termed an accident and extra expenditures coming from something unforeseen. It does not grow out of a desire on the part of the people to have a better or more expensive building; but sometimes accidents occur which put the Government in the dilemma of having a building partly up, and being in the position of having expended $25,000 extra on the lower part of a building and then be unable to properly complete the upper part unless the extra amount is granted. In this case quicksand and a general shaky condition of the ground caused over $28,000 extra expense in putting in a safe foundation.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate conferees urged that, and we had read the report made upon the subject by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in this Chamber, setting forth clearly and distinctly the facts in the case.

Mr. WARREN. The building at Cheyenne is in a different position from any of the others.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, we made that contention; but the House conferees said it was legislation increasing the limit fixed by law, and that an appropriation could not be made until that limit had been extended by law.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me another question, I observe in another place in the bill an amendment which I believe has been agreed to, but I want to ask a question about it, as it is a matter in which I am interested. I refer to the appropriation of $50,000 for a military post at Sheridan. I observe that the amendment was divided; that one-half of the amendment provided for $50,000 to be expended on a post in Kansas, and the other part provided $50,000 to be expended on a post in Wyoming. The Kansas amendment was accepted, and the other has been rejected. I do not quite understand that. I do not know that there was a law heretofore passed for expending $50,000 in Kansas any more than that there was a law expending $50,000 for a post in Wyoming—not that I wish to make any complaint against Kansas in getting $50,000 for its post.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator the page where that amendment comes in?

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry that I do not have it before me.

Mr. ALLISON. The difference between Leavenworth, Kans., and Sheridan, Wyo., consisted in the fact that the body of the amendment was for the construction and enlargement of military posts, $650,000, of which, of course, Leavenworth, Kans., is one; and the amendment which was adopted by the Senate provided that of this total appropriation of $650,000, $50,000 might be used in a particular place. In other words, it was a designation of an appropriation providing generally for all army posts assigning $50,000 to this particular post. So that was in the line of the requirements in regard to the Sheridan post, except that the House conferees contended—I suppose rightfully; I do not know—that there was no law establishing a military post at Sheridan, and until there was a law providing for a military post at Sheridan, we could not use any portion of the appropriation made for military posts at points where there were no military posts established by law. That was the contention of the House conferees.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is very kind, as he always is; but I want to state, in the first place, that there is a post to all intents and purposes at Sheridan. Troops are ordered there; it is necessary to support them there, and the Government is expending money there, so that the difference is simply this: The post at Leavenworth, Kans., is not being used to any great extent, because there are no officers for the school of instruction, etc., and it is a vacated place. There are no troops there of consequence, but there are quarters there many times as large as needed, while, on the other hand, at Sheridan there is a necessity for troops and there are not quarters enough for them. So that, as between the two, it seems to me the appropriation should have gone to Sheridan.

I have in mind another point. I am informed that there has been a post established in the State of Vermont, a large post, which is being occupied continually, and I have looked in vain to find any law anywhere on our statute books authorizing the establishment of that post, except that from time to time we have appropriated money for military posts, and slices have been cut off and a post established.

I do not blame the Senator who has charge of the bill. I presume these matters were not brought to his attention, but I think I am stating facts. It will be rather hard for me to explain to the people who are interested in the preservation of peace and order in Wyoming why, when the Government feels it necessary to establish a post and put troops in that Indian country, there can not be any money appropriated to provide quarters enough to accommodate them, but that troops must be put in tents, while other posts are being enlarged to which no troops are going, and there are still other posts being built out of "whole cloth" on authority and money granted in appropriation bills only, and by these cut off from the general lump sum.

Mr. ALLISON. As respects the military post in Vermont, that was authorized by law and a large appropriation—much larger than it ought to have been, I think—was made for the purchase of land at that post.

The contention of the House conferees, whether rightfully or wrongfully, was that there was no military post at Sheridan authorized by law, and that if the Secretary of War or if the Army had buildings or barracks there, they were in the nature of a temporary occupation and that Sheridan could not be designated as a military post.

If the Senator will turn to the appropriation, he will see that under that construction we were not able to find any authority of law for the establishment of a military post at Sheridan. The bill as it passed the House read in this way:

For the construction of buildings at, and the enlargement of, such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, and for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defense, $670,000; and of this sum $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the purchase of suitable building sites.

That was the text of the bill as it came to the Senate. We amended it by providing that—

The sum of $50,000 shall be used for the erection of barracks, quarters, gun sheds, and stables for one battery of light artillery at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Which is an established military post by law. Then we added an amendment providing also that the sum of $50,000 might be used—

Toward the construction of a military post at or near the town of Sheridan, Wyo., on lands now owned by the United States for the said purpose; cost of the same not to exceed $200,000.

The contention of the House conferees was that by this method

we were not only authorizing a post to be constructed at Sheridan, but we were also establishing a limit of the cost of construction of that post; that it was virtually a law inserted in this appropriation bill authorizing the establishment of a military post at Fort Sheridan. Therefore it was that we were constrained to recede from our amendment. That, however, has already been done, and it is not involved in this report.

Mr. WARREN. It is already done, I understand. However, may I ask whether there was any limit of that character in the last sundry civil appropriation bill in regard to the post in South Dakota?

Mr. ALLISON. At Fort Meade?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. Was there any limit of cost there?

Mr. ALLISON. There was no such limit there. There was an appropriation of $30,000 for Fort Meade, which, I believe, is one of the oldest posts in the Northwest. I am, however, not certain about that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The appropriation was for repairs and construction of new buildings, owing to the injury of the old buildings.

Mr. WARREN. I think I saw it in some print.

Now, we will drop that matter, for that is not in issue. But I understand that amendment No. 3, as to the Cheyenne building, has not been determined upon?

Mr. ALLISON. It is in disagreement.

Mr. WARREN. I ask, then, that the honorable Senator from Iowa will note as he goes along the rather unfortunate position in which Wyoming is placed in these three appropriations. One is already out, and the other two are in limbo. I hope there may be an effort made to save at least the color, so that we may sprout something the next time for that State.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have stated the status of the amendments as to the public buildings. All those that are not embodied in amendment numbered 10 as amended by the House of Representatives are still in controversy and contest; and unless the Senate shall adopt the House amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, all of the public buildings which have been authorized by law at this session will be still in controversy.

I do not believe there is any Senator on this floor who can characterize more strongly than I can and do the injustice and wrong which I believe is involved on the part of the House in rejecting these four or five or six buildings, which have merit certainly far beyond the merit of a great many buildings which are provided for in amendment No. 10, and which stand, in my belief, upon as strong a footing and foundation in reality as do the buildings provided for by amendment No. 10; but the conferees of the House of Representatives insist that because these separate buildings—five or six of them—have not passed the crucible of separate, independent consideration in the House of Representatives, they are new projects, for which we can not appropriate under the rules which prevail between the two Houses respecting legislation on appropriation bills.

So far as I am concerned, I intend, and I think so far as the Senate conferees are concerned, we intend, after expressing the views to which I have given utterance, to leave this question to the Senate for further consideration.

I should state that amendment No. 140 is an appropriation for Yaquina Bay. The House conferees refused to assent to the amendment adopted in the Senate making an appropriation for continuing the improvement there. They did so on the ground that the river and harbor bill, which is in conference, provides for a suspension practically of work at Yaquina Bay and a re-examination of that bay, the work to proceed in case a favorable report is made by the engineer.

Mr. FRYE. It also provides that no contract shall be made for the work.

Mr. ALLISON. It also, as stated by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], provides that no contract shall be made for the work there. There is now in the Treasury to the credit of that public work $25,000. The contention of the House conferees being that, inasmuch as a board of engineers is to make a report on that work and that no contract can be made until the report is made to the Secretary of War, that $25,000 will suffice until we meet next December. So they refused to agree to that amendment, and that is still open.

There is also an amendment appropriating $100,000 for the Missouri River. I will not go into the details of that, but the House conferees placed their objections to that amendment upon the same grounds as to the other, that there was no legislation authorizing it.

Mr. FRYE. I think we appropriated for that in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FRYE. I think so.

Mr. ALLISON. It would have relieved the conferees of a great deal of trouble if we had known that.

Mr. FRYE. I have stated my impression.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, would it not be well, just for the purpose of maintaining the dignity of the Senate, to say to these gentlemen that their public-building amendments will not be consented to by the Senate unless they consent to consider the public-building amendments the Senate has put in the bill? In other words, the suggestion I make is—I do not care to debate it—would it not be well to just state to these conferees that the Senate, under the present circumstances, will not recede from its action?

Mr. ALLISON. We have substantially told them that, because the amendments as to nearly every public building provided for in this bill are in disagreement; certainly all of those which recently passed are in disagreement, and are subject now to the control of the Senate, either to reject the amendment proposed by the House conferees and throw the matter into conference, if we think that is a wise thing to do, or agree to it.

In addition to the public buildings I have mentioned, there was an appropriation adopted in the Senate for a sanitarium for old soldiers at Hot Springs, S. Dak. This the House conferees refused to agree to.

There was also an amendment placed on the bill providing for the construction by the Government of the United States of a cable from some point on the Pacific coast to Honolulu, Hawaii. This the House conferees totally disagreed to, on the ground that there is no particular and distinct statute which authorizes the construction of a cable, and that, inasmuch as the House of Representatives have not considered that question independently, they can not consent to its incorporation in this bill.

So, Mr. President, we are confronted as to these amendments with a statement made by the House conferees, after many and long conferences upon all these topics and subjects, that they have agreed to our amendments as far as they can agree to them, and I now submit this report for the consideration of the Senate to do what seems to it wisest and best.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator another question, and that is, What does he advise the Senate to do?

Mr. ALLISON. That is an absolutely pertinent question, and I will answer as frankly as I can. This is a bill embracing a great many items covering necessary expenses of the Government respecting its public works and its administration in this city and elsewhere. My own conviction is that if we proceed further in the contention regarding the amendments in disagreement the result will be that the bill will not pass at this session. That is my belief. We can take just such course as we choose on that matter. My own judgment is that we are compelled to recede from these amendments; but I give no advice to others. I want every Senator to take his own responsibility and to act upon his own judgment respecting the matter.

Mr. STEWART. I inquire of the Senator whether, if the amendments in relation to public buildings were all left out of the bill—and they certainly can wait—it would be possible to get a cable, if we narrowed the difference down to that? The cable is very important.

Mr. ALLISON. I will give the Senator my best judgment on that question, which is, that if all the public-building provisions were agreed to, or all were eliminated from the bill, the cable provision would not pass the House of Representatives at this session.

Mr. STEWART. Then I would let the bill go.

Mr. FRYE. Did any of the House conferees suggest as a substitute the provision for a cable which was reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. ALLISON. They made no suggestion upon the subject, save the one that the cable provision was inserted as new matter in the Senate, that the House had had no opportunity of considering it as an independent measure, and therefore they could not consent that the cable provision should be inserted in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. STEWART. That would seem to be a denial of any right on the part of the Senate to make amendments, and it seems to me we have got to a point where that question ought to be determined.

There is no doubt that the public buildings might wait, but the cable can not wait without great loss to this Government. It will cost more to send ships across the Pacific Ocean and to get information and to send men and supplies to and from those points in the next two years than it would cost to build the cable. Everybody understands that it costs considerable to send a ship so far off.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand that it will cost two and a half million dollars in two years to send ships to Honolulu to get information?

Mr. STEWART. It will cost two and a half million dollars—

Mr. WOLCOTT. Merely for the expense of sending ships to get information?

Mr. STEWART. Not only by sending ships, but by the delay that will be occasioned if we have to send them there every time we want to carry on operations. That will occasion delay and expenditure which will be equivalent to more than $2,000,000. It has been exceedingly costly already in the mere sending of ships and keeping them there; and it will be costly and most troublesome when we have a large army on our hands and can not receive information or communicate with it as quickly as we should be able to do. It does not take very long to eat up $2,000,000 when you can not send communications to your army by any swifter means than by vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator that $2,000,000 is the estimate of the cost of the cable from the Pacific coast to Honolulu.

Mr. STEWART. The cable seems to me to be a necessity. I think the public buildings could wait for the next two years without any great harm coming to the country. I should let them all go if it was necessary to secure an agreement to have the cable constructed and laid. Let us take the responsibility, because the question must be decided some time. If the House deny to us the right to make amendments, a new order of things is being inaugurated. They reject our amendments because they say they are new things. Of course when we make amendments we put in new things.

Mr. ALLISON. The House does not deny to the Senate the right to make amendments.

Mr. STEWART. Of course they do deny our right when they say we can not put on new things, and that they will not consider our amendments because they are new. Our amendments must be new, because were they otherwise they would amount to nothing. We have a right to make amendments. The only question is whether they are proper amendments or not. If they will not consider proper amendments, we had better let the bill go and let the House take the responsibility of its defeat. Let us at least do what is right, and let the bill go, if necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not know that it will do any good to further discuss this matter, yet I can not refrain from calling the attention of the Senate once more to the status of this question.

The public-building bill in which I am interested, if I remember correctly—and I am sure I do—passed the Senate in the Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. It received a favorable report in the House in the Fifty-fourth Congress, but no public-building bills were passed in that Congress, and of course it failed with the rest. In the present Congress it was reported favorably by the House committee, but did not get quite far enough up on the list to get consideration.

While the House was considering those bills a very large number of House bills came here and were promptly passed. Any one Senator could have stopped the passage of one or all of them; but we permitted them by unanimous consent to pass. Then we added to the list a few public-building bills—four, five, or six—which had received the sanction of the Senate and the sanction of the House, so far as a favorable report was concerned, and the proposition is to let all the House bills that we passed remain in the bill and drop out those which we added by way of amendment.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me the height of impertinence for the other branch of Congress to say that the Senate had not a legal or constitutional right to put those items on this bill, and that they can in an arbitrary way send us an ultimatum saying that they shall be stricken from the bill. If I were representing the Senate in this conference I should give a counter ultimatum, and that would be that they should all remain or all be eliminated.

I think it is the duty of our conferees to at least make one more effort to reach the agreement that either the few bills the Senate added shall remain or that the large number of bills the House sent here, and which we in our good nature passed without any special consideration, should likewise be dropped from the bill, and that no appropriation whatever for public buildings should be made in this Congress.

It seems to me that the House fails to practice reciprocity with the Senate. We pass almost every bill that comes from the House. Practically every bill that has come to the committee of which I am chairman this year has been reported upon and passed. But if you go to the House Calendar you will find that the Senate has not been treated with that consideration; and while I do not especially complain about that, I do complain when the House arbitrarily and dogmatically says to the Senate that these amendments which we made to this bill can not under any circumstances receive the sanction of the House conferees or of the House itself.

Mr. PETTUS. That they can not be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. That they, as the Senator from Alabama suggests, can not be considered. The Senator from Nevada was right when he said that the House is establishing the doctrine that the Senate has not the right to amend a House bill, and that the House can, by some sort of fiction, insist that amendments put upon the bill by the Senate are obnoxious to some rule that is not written, and that we know nothing about here.

Now, Mr. President, I trust that we will remand this appropriation bill once more to conference, and that we will in some way give expression to the sense of the Senate that it is desirable and proper that either all the public-building bills shall remain or that they shall all be eliminated. I do not care particularly which course is taken, but I shall feel that the Senate has been wronged, grossly wronged, if the four or five little items which we placed upon the bill are stricken from it and all the House items are allowed to remain.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, this amendment, No. 10, contains a great many public-building bills which originated in the Senate, and after long delay and great endeavor consideration was secured in the House, and they were passed. Probably I am influenced very largely by the fact that two of these public buildings are in my State. They are Senate bills finally amended in the House and agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. President, while I concur with the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Nevada in large degree in their complaints and would gladly vote to put their public buildings on this bill, when we are assured by the Senator from Iowa that any further insistence on our part will, in his judgment, result in losing this bill, it seems to me that it would hardly be right to compel those of us who have bills which have passed both Houses by separate laws to sacrifice our public buildings simply in a fruitless attempt to obtain public buildings for the other members of the Senate whose bills have not passed both Houses.

I understand that the House of Representatives propose to abide by a certain rule. If any public building bill has passed both Houses in a separate measure, no matter from what State it comes, it proposes to allow it to go upon this bill. Having established that rule, if they live up to it, it appears to me that it is the part of discretion, so far as the Senate is concerned, to accept the amendment which they propose and adopt amendment numbered 10.

Mr. CLARK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHILTON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator believe in the general doctrine of the House of Representatives establishing rules for this body? Then if not a general rule, why in this special particular?

Mr. CHILTON. Here is my proposition: Of course, I do not believe in the House of Representatives establishing rules for this body; but what I say is that if certain meritorious measures can be put through on this bill under a rule which the House of Representatives is willing to adopt, it is not fair that all those measures shall be sacrificed in order to sustain other gentlemen whom we would gladly sustain, so far as we were able to do it.

Mr. CLARK. Then the Senator inclines to yield to an ultimatum and agrees that a rule established by the House of Representatives in any particular case shall bind this body in all cases.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, no, Mr. President; that is not the point at all. So far as I am concerned, I do not think their rules have any binding force here; but I treat this question as a practical one. I would be perfectly willing to send this bill to conference again if it were not for the statement of the Senator from Iowa that he believes that would result in the defeat of the bill; that it would result not only in the defeat of the public-building amendments on the bill, but in all the multiplied clauses of the sundry civil bill. If that is the alternative presented to the members of the Senate, I for one do not feel that any such sacrifice ought to be made simply for the purpose of passing public-building bills which have not had the separate indorsement of both Houses.

While I would gladly stand by the Senator from Wyoming and other gentlemen similarly situated if it were not for the peril which is presented, according to the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, I do not feel that it is fair to call upon Senators situated like I am, for instance, where public-building bills originating in the Senate have been sent to the House a long time ago and have waited there until finally, by stress of weather, we have secured the adoption of those public-building bills on the part of the House, that after we have thus waited until now, when it is proposed to make an appropriation to carry out those laws, we should be required to share the fate of other gentlemen who have not been so fortunate as to secure consideration of their bills in both Houses.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the Senator move to recede?

Mr. CHILTON. I understand that the Senator from Iowa proposes to make that motion.

Mr. PETTIGREW obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say only one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks the Senator from South Dakota to yield for a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. The first motion is to agree to the report, which does bring the Houses nearer together, because we have agreed to the two amendments.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Then it seems to me the next motion will be either to agree or disagree to amendment numbered 10 as passed by the House; and if that motion is agreed to, all the buildings embraced in the original amendment numbered 10, covering the bills that passed both Houses, will be assented to by the Senate; and if we do not wish to agree to the public-building bills which have passed both Houses, we will vote down the amendment of the House to amendment numbered 10.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the speech of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] reminds me of a story that was told of an old member of this body shortly after he left it. He said it was a body where no one cared what happened so it did not happen to him. The meritorious measures which the House have placed in this bill, which it is so desirous that we shall pass and make appropriations for, are well illustrated by the reports which I hold in my hand. The first is Blair, Nebr.:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10909) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Blair, Nebr., have considered the same and make the following report:

Blair, Nebr., is the county seat of Washington County, one of the richest agricultural counties in Nebraska. It is a railroad center of fair proportions, being the junction of the Northwestern system, running from Chicago to the Black Hills country, and the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad, running from Omaha to Minneapolis.

Both roads are the same. They cross at this point. The names are a little different, but they are controlled by the same company. A great railroad center!

The post-office facilities in Blair are very poor, and do not accommodate the growing business of that enterprising city.

It has a population of 2,500 people at the outside.

For some time complaints have been made by the citizens generally because of the poor post-office accommodations, and the Government could not make a better investment than by securing a site and constructing a public building thereon for post-office purposes.

For no other purpose. I do not know what rent they are paying, but my own experience in the West convinces me that they are not paying over $300 a year, and no statement is made as to the post-office receipts.

After a thorough investigation of the evidence produced favoring the purchase of a site and construction of a Government building thereon, your committee is of the opinion that the sum of $43,000 is adequate for such a purpose and that such an expenditure will accommodate the business of this city for a great many years.

There is no doubt about it, Mr. President. That little post-office will undoubtedly accommodate the business of the city for a great many years. In other words, the committee in the House do not expect Blair will grow, and nobody else does who knows anything about it.

Your committee therefore report the bill back in amended form, with the recommendation that the bill do pass, amended as follows:

That is—

In line 6, page 1, after the word "building," insert the following words: "with fireproof vaults thereon."

That is very important!

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the population?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not to exceed 2,500. I have been there, and I am a fair judge of the size of Western towns. I think, if we count every one of them of all ages, there are not 1,900.

Mr. BUTLER. What State?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. And what county?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Washington County. The report goes on:

In line 11, page 1, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "forty three" in lieu thereof.

They asked for $50,000 and got $43,000.

In line 5, page 2, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "forty three" in lieu thereof.

In line 5, page 1, strike out the words "cause to be erected thereon a" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to contract for the erection and completion thereon of a."

On page 2 strike out all after the word "alleys" in line 9.

Now, there is no United States court, nothing in the world but a post-office at a little country village; and this is one of the meritorious bills we are hastening to put in here so that the public business shall not be impeded!

Mr. GALLINGER. There is nothing said about the postal revenue?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not a word is said about the postal revenue or the population of the town, but there is simply a statement that "it is a railroad center of fair proportions and that the Northwestern has two lines which cross each other," and that is all there is to it. That is one of the bills in this amendment numbered 10.

Let us see how it compares with Deadwood, that they propose to strike out. They have taken amendment No. 10 back to the House and struck out the city of Deadwood. The city of Deadwood is in South Dakota, in the mining region. The Senate have passed a bill to erect a building at Deadwood every Congress since 1890. There is a United States court, where we rent a building for $3,000 a year. There is a post-office which has a net revenue of over $8,000 a year, and there is an assay office for which we pay $1,200 a year rent, and there is an internal-revenue office. In all we pay $6,000 a year rent.

It is the seat of the United States court for half of the State of South Dakota. The valuable records are kept there. This bill passed the Senate in the extra session nearly two years ago. The House reported it for $100,000. After they had passed this mass of bills, and among them the bill for this important emporium of Blair, they had plenty of time, since we put this amendment in the bill, to pass the Deadwood bill, and they would not do it. Do they consider measures upon their merits? Not only that, Mr. President, but here are 19 bills [exhibiting].

Mr. GALLINGER. All House bills.

Mr. PETTIGREW. House bills for towns of from 3,000 to 10,000 people.

Mr. CLARK. From two thousand.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And there are only one or two United States courts. They are post-office bills. The appropriations run from $43,000 to $100,000. There is no indication that there is any rent paid to exceed a thousand dollars. I have not been over all of them, but it would be interesting to read these reports. Now, we are given the ultimatum. We are getting used to ultimatums. In the case of pretty nearly every appropriation bill that comes over here to our conferees an ultimatum has been given.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit an interruption? I should like to ask the Senator what proportion of these bills are Senate bills and what proportion are House bills, if he can give us the information.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not examined that question. The bill for Blair was a House bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That I am aware of.

Mr. CHANDLER. Have you any more cases like that?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from New Hampshire asks if I have any more cases like the Blair case? Not so Blairing, but very bad. One at Janesville, Wis., a town of 10,000 people. The report says 13,000, but there are only 10,000.

Mr. SPOONER. What place is that?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Janesville, Wis.

Mr. CLARK. How about Carrollton?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not had time to read all these reports. There is one at Bristol, which purports to be a very great city. The population in 1890 was 9,500.

Bristol is the commercial metropolis of eastern Tennessee, its trade extending over southern and southeastern Kentucky, West Virginia, southwest Virginia, eastern Tennessee, and western North Carolina.

It is well spread out. It is a manufacturing center. It has no United States court. It has 5 miles of sidewalk. It has 7 miles of street railway; it does not say whether electric or horse railway.

It has two electric-light plants in full operation, and one gas plant.

The gas plant must have written this report. These are the meritorious cases that we must hasten to hurry through, while towns where the Government is paying $6,000 a year rent, with valuable records and valuable business, are excluded, and the ultimatum comes from the House.

It seems to me every single public building should go out of the bill or all of them stay in. The House have had time to pass every bill we passed since the conference was first appointed, and our conferees should give an ultimatum. I would like to see a little of that on the other side. Every bill that comes in here with a conference report has an ultimatum. Our conferees tell us that in their opinion the bill will fail. Let the responsibility go where it belongs. It is about time the Senate asserted its power and its right and did not abandon its power and right and functions and duty.

The Senator from New Hampshire has the other reports, but the 19 that I picked out of the 49 buildings in amendment numbered 10 are these village post-offices. I think there is only one where there is a United States court.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that in several of these reports I notice the population is not given.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. And nothing whatever is said about the postal revenues.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Here is a bill that went over there in 1890 and again in 1893, 1894, 1896, and 1898, and they report it and recite the facts about it that I have stated. Yet they say that we have no right to put a bill on here unless it has passed both Houses.

Mr. President, this comes with a reminder of strange facts that the Senate is not to be allowed to place any bill that has not passed both Houses on an appropriation bill; that new enterprises are not to be inaugurated or initiated on an appropriation bill. I say it reminds us of strange facts.

Two years ago the House of Representatives placed upon the sundry civil bill a provision to build a Soldiers' Home at Danville, Ill., the home of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in that body. There was no recommendation for it from the governors of the Soldiers' Homes or from any department of the Government. It was simply inaugurated and put on the bill anyhow. And now the House conferees, composed of the same persons, tell us that it is contrary to their most devoted principles to inaugurate anything new on an appropriation bill, and that the Senate shall not do it, and that is the ultimatum.

Now, at every session of Congress since, the sundry civil bill has carried hundreds of thousands of dollars for this Danville Home. Five hundred thousand dollars are appropriated in this bill; and yet the great principle is involved over which so many scruples are wasted, and the ultimatum is given to us that they can not violate those dear principles, that no new measure shall be inaugurated on an appropriation bill.

The bill for a soldiers' home at Hot Springs, S. Dak., was twice passed by the Senate as a separate bill. It never has been reported in the other body at all from the committee. It has been placed upon the sundry civil appropriation bill by the Senate and passed three times; and yet this great principle is invoked that no measure must be inaugurated on an appropriation bill, while Danville, towering higher and higher, with hundreds of thousands of dollars each session, becomes more and more a monument to the hypocrisy and falsity of the claim.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no question whatever that there should be an appropriation for a building at Deadwood. It is, as the Senator says, a United States court city, and the reasons for the appropriation are abundant. A bill has passed, and the item is in this appropriation bill, for a public building at Eau Claire. That is a place of over 20,000 inhabitants, as my friend knows. It is a United States court city. United States courts have been held there for ten years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is not in my list of nineteen.

Mr. SPOONER. But I want to ask my friend a question. That is a fair bill; it is a proper bill; it has passed both Houses. Does he think that it ought to be stricken out of this bill because the conferees on the part of the House will not consent to the passage in this bill of the Deadwood item?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state what I think.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that a fair theory of legislation?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am ready to answer the Senator's question at once. What I think is this. There is no doubt about it. These items will all remain in, if the responsibility is placed upon the House as to whether they shall stay in or not. They have in 49 of these public buildings; we put in 5 more; and I say they will all stay in if the responsibility is placed on them of killing this appropriation bill or not; and that is where it ought to go, because this practice has become too frequent. We met the same thing at the last session of Congress—ultimatums. We were told that about three or four of the great bills.

It is six hours until this Congress ends. Why, if you should read in detail these interesting reports on these village post-offices it would take the six hours without any trouble at all, independent of the discussion of armor plate and the numerous other questions. This session has been allowed to waste out, because we are dictated to by ultimatums. For my part I am not ready nor willing to submit to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator the question, because of his statement, whether these bills ought to stay in or all go out?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the Senate should take that position, and thereby assert its right to do the just and proper thing, for there is not one, I think, of the bills put on by the Senate that is subject to the criticism which lies at the door of the nineteen of these bills that the House is going to agree to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I do not justify in any manner the attitude assumed by the House, nor do I agree with the position that has been taken by my honorable friend on my right. It seems to me that the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] stated a practical question. The question is whether we shall secure a part or lose all of the legislation we desire with respect to public buildings in the sundry civil bill.

The Senator from South Dakota has directed the attention of the Senate to 19 reports upon public buildings. If his contention is insisted upon and the House does not recede from its position, as the distinguished Senator [Mr. ALLISON] in charge of the conference report believes it will not, then the bills to which the Senator from South Dakota has referred, and all others of like character, fall to the ground.

Mr. SPOONER. And the sundry civil bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And, as suggested by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, the sundry civil bill also. If these 19 bills fail, Mr. President, the blow is not alone struck at the House, but at the Senate also. "An absurdity," says the honorable Senator from North Carolina. Let us see whether that is true or not. How many of the 19 bills originated in the House, I ask the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. A large majority of those bills came from the House. They were passed by the Senate pro forma, and any Senator could have called them down, as the Senator from New Hampshire so well said. We passed them. We did not consider them. It is a burlesque to say that we considered them at all. We did not. We accepted the House bills, and, simply to put them in in order, passed them, and we passed them and railroaded them through by the wholesale.

I sat and saw it done; while for three terms I had passed a bill for Durham, N. C., and I have seen it go on and die in the maw. It is a town that to-day has $16,000 receipts from the post-office, $2,000,000 receipts from internal revenue, 15,000 population; and over half of the bills passed by the House are for towns that will not come within 50 per cent of it. I passed it three times, and it has gone over there to die and sleep.

Here came these bills, for little towns and villages, and I sat silent in my seat, when I could have held them up. Can you say that because we passed them, because we had the justice or the courtesy, whatever you may call it, to recognize the House bills and pass them, that shall be thrown in our teeth? And to say that towns that deserved to have public buildings before those towns were out of their swaddling clothes shall be put in the background is arrant nonsense and absurdity compounded.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from North Carolina has not answered the question I propounded, and it is immaterial whether he does so or not. Of the 19 bills mentioned by the Senator from South Dakota, 11 originated in the Senate. More than one-half of them originated here and passed the Senate. Shall they fail? Shall we undo the work already done? What proportion of the residue of the 49 public-building bills are Senate bills I do not know. But I am led to believe that more than one-half of them originated here. I so understand from the Senator in charge of the conference report.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Allow me for a moment. The House took up the least meritorious bills that we had passed and discarded the most meritorious and added to the number a lot of bills less meritorious and put them in the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota how many of the 49 public-building bills included in the sundry civil bill originated in the Senate?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Do not know? Then does the Senator know whether the House has dealt fairly with the Senate?

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. I desire to know from the Senator what is his opinion of the action of the House as reported by the Senator in charge of the bill?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I said I did not approve of it. That, however, does not warrant us in rejecting what we have a reasonable prospect of securing.

Mr. President, there remain but a few hours more, and this Congress is at an end. Shall we jeopardize the sundry civil bill? Shall we jeopardize the Senate public-building bills to which the Senator from South Dakota has specifically referred?

No, Mr. President, I sympathize with the Senators from New Hampshire, South Dakota, and Wyoming, and with any others who have failed to obtain just recognition. In good time they will secure what they desire and what they deserve. I beg of them to be generous and just enough to yield their present prejudices and objections, and permit us to secure the enactment of many of these measures for public buildings, which are quite as urgent, at least, as theirs.

Some of these measures are of the very highest importance. The provision in this bill for the construction of a building at Indianapolis is of the most urgent necessity. This is conceded by everyone. No one questions it. For many years we have been earnestly attempting to secure the construction of a building. The House has stood in the way, and shall we now, because full justice has not been done to our friends in some of their cities, utterly abandon the construction of a public building at Indianapolis? I think they would not ask so much. Longer delay can not be justified. The public interest demands that we should act, now that the opportunity is here.

I am impressed, as others no doubt are, with the opinion of the Senator in charge of the conference report. If, in his good judgment, further insistence upon our disagreement with the House amendment will endanger the sundry civil bill, I would suggest to our friends that they do not further press their opposition, and that they allow the adoption of the conference report. They should not involve us all in common ruin.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] expresses sympathy for certain States of this Union in regard to their position under the sundry civil bill. Speaking only for the State of Wyoming, I will say that she asks no sympathy from any State in the Union. She does ask, she believes she is entitled to, just treatment upon this bill, and I would be recreant to the trust I hold at the hands of my people if I sat idly by and saw a gross injustice done, even though it might by being done benefit the city of Indianapolis.

There is no danger of the sundry civil bill failing. So far as my recollection or knowledge of the proceedings of the Houses of Congress is concerned, no sundry civil bill has ever failed. The question is whether or not the Senate of the United States shall become as utterly powerless as is the House of Lords of England, the most useless legislative body in the world, simply sitting in the capital of England to record the will of the House of Commons.

The Senator from Indiana says this is a practical question. It is a practical question, I will answer the Senator, to the State of Wyoming, and I am speaking only in regard to that State. Not a single one of these great appropriation bills has passed but that the Senate in its wisdom has seen fit to place upon it some little appropriation for something that has been needed in the State of Wyoming. Not a single appropriation that has been put upon any one of these bills would be retained in conference if this amendment should fail. I say to the Senator from Indiana it is a practical question with us. I live in a town not large—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I simply say to the Senator that I wish he would not misunderstand me. I am in entire accord with him, so far as his purpose is concerned; and if I felt it was possible to secure this building, I certainly would favor any measure looking to that end.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will permit me. How will we ever know whether it is possible or not until our conferees make their ultimatum?

Mr. CLARK. There is no question on the face of the earth—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from New Hampshire heard the statement made by the chairman in charge of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. CLARK. With due respect to the Senator in charge of this bill, and no one has a higher regard for his judgment than I, I have no question on the face of the earth that if our conferees will go back and say one or all of these bills must go in or go out, they would stay in. I do not believe there is any doubt on the face of the earth about that.

The Senator from Indiana says we are assured that the House will not recede. I have heard within the last two days with my own ears an ultimatum delivered at the first sitting of a conference of these two bodies in the cloakroom just beyond, and the very first words uttered by the conferees on the part of the House were, "We will do so and so, and that is all we will do; and unless you agree to it, the bill will fail." No fair conference; an ultimatum from the start. We are facing them; we have faced them on every bill; we are facing them on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. President, I believe that the public building in which I am interested ought to go upon this bill. I believe it is a just claim. The city of Indianapolis, although large, has no more offices—the seat of the United States court, the seat of the land offices, which do not there exist, and the other public offices. It has a right upon this bill. Under the rules of the Senate it is upon this bill, and I believe it is the duty of the Senate of the United States to maintain the integrity of its rule and see that exact and even-handed justice is dealt out between all these claimants for public buildings.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I invoke the advice of the Senator from Iowa in charge of this bill. I have great faith in his wisdom, and I want his advice. I was very much pleased at the words he used in denouncing this attempt to establish a House of Commons at one end of this Capitol and a House of Lords at the other. Senators, we ought to think about that matter. We ought to think about it most seriously.

My attention has been called, since I have been here, to the fact that the Senate has abdicated—yes, it has abandoned—its right to inaugurate appropriation bills. Where do you get the idea that an appropriation bill must come from the House? You get it from that overweening despotism that we see exercised in the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. GALLINGER. And for no other reason in the world.

Mr. PETTUS. Congress is a body of two Houses. It is true that the House has a right to originate bills raising revenue. That right is given by the Constitution to the House, and therefore is prohibited to us. But there is no reason in the world why the Senate should not originate appropriation bills as well as the House. I implore Senators, if they would not be a House of Lords, to vindicate their rights to an equal participation in the making of the laws for this country.

Mr. President, we destroy the symmetry of the legislative body organized by our ancestors if we submit to this despotism any longer. We are here, and the Senator from Iowa has given us probably wise advice; at least I have great faith in his wisdom. If that Senator had in any degree sanctioned the conduct of the House of Representatives toward this body, if he had in the slightest degree sanctioned it, then I never would have asked for his advice in the world.

But we are here at this late hour of the session, and although I am in the same situation as some other Senators are in reference to these bills, I propose to submit for the moment, but never again—never. I do not propose to be converted into a lord without any power of any sort when it comes to legislation, for I do not remember the number of years, but it is a great number of years, since the House of Lords have dared to dissent from the House of Commons except in one case.

I do not want to consume more time. I am going to follow the advice of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I am inclined to repeat that remark. In the language of a gentleman who will commend himself to those on the other side—I quote from the distinguished Mr. Cleveland—"a condition confronts us and not a theory." I have not partaken much of the general run of the talk which has been going on, although I think I have suffered on this bill more than any other man. The post-office in Hartford was insufficient from the time it was opened in 1882. It was seven years building.

Now, we have a city that has grown with such unexpected rapidity, and some forms of business which add revenue to the post-office have so grown that in the last fiscal year the post-office at Hartford has netted to the Federal Government a hundred and eighty-eight thousand dollars. The postmaster has inclosed a part of the lobby that belonged to the public. He has thrown out conveniences that were desirable because they took up more room than other devices he could put in. He has branch offices out in the suburbs to help him out. It does not answer. There is not room for the men to do the business, and the Post-Office Department says that the enlargement of that office is absolutely indispensable to the discharge of its duties. That is thrown.

What we can do I do not stop to discuss. I do not think there is a better case here. I am not disposed to grumble about it. I am disposed to submit and make sure that the appropriation bills are passed, and although it may be that they are far from what I would prefer, I follow the advice of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CLARK. Do I understand the Senator from Connecticut to do what he was never known to do before on the face of the earth—surrender everything?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not surrendering everything.

Mr. CLARK. We have many things, I call the attention of the Senator, besides the post-office—

Mr. HAWLEY. I sympathize with the gentlemen from the West.

Mr. CLARK. The gentlemen of the West! Our people have many other things than a post-office. They are all included in the ultimatum.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know it is an unhappy situation, but I am disposed to surrender something.

Mr. McBRIDE. Mr. President, although it is late and although I do not wish to delay the transaction of important business, I have a duty to perform in justice to the people whom I have the honor to represent in part in this Chamber. Amendments providing appropriation for continuing the improvement authorized by the act of Congress of 1896 at Yaquina Bay have been twice inserted in appropriation bills and as often rejected upon the advice of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations upon a conference report.

On the 30th day of last June the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill, the senior Senator from Maine, a member of the committee of conference at that time; the senior Senator from Maryland, also a member of the committee of conference at that time, in advising the Senate to strike out from the bill and yield to the House conferees an appropriation of $100,000 for this improvement indicated that the appropriation ought then to be made, and I confidently expected that it would be made this session of Congress.

I can look upon the proposition to deprive the people of the State of Oregon of the benefit of this improvement as little short of an outrage upon my State. The improvement of Yaquina Bay was authorized in the river and harbor act of 1896. The limit of cost was placed at $1,025,000. But since that time proposals by the Secretary of War have been advertised for, and a contract has been accepted and signed by the contractors for the completion of the work at a total cost of $511,000, less than half the limit fixed in the act of 1896.

Now, I ask for a moment the attention of the Senator from Iowa in charge of this bill. It is proposed now to strike out this provision from the bill as a similar provision was stricken from a similar bill a year ago, upon the pretext that, an examination having been ordered in the river and harbor bill, the money will not be required until another appropriation bill shall have been passed. That I understand to be the suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no suggestion with reference to these amendments. I only state what I believe to be the facts. I am sure the Senator from Oregon, when he is confronted with another committee of this body, acting in concert about a very important bill, having tied up the Yaquina project until a thorough examination is made as respects its character, and the other House insists that until that examination is made no further appropriation shall be made, will say it is no part of our duty to say that unless it is made this bill shall not pass. That is the question.

Mr. McBRIDE. The Senator from Iowa will remember that a similar appropriation was yielded under similar circumstances in June, 1898. I wish simply now to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the examination provided for in the river and harbor bill can be completed easily within three months from this time, and the work can then go on if the money is appropriated in this bill, as it ought to be, in accordance with the estimate of the Chief of Engineers. I ask the Senator from Iowa and the conferees on the part of the Senate and the Senate to stand by that appropriation and to see that it is not stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate agree to amendment No. 10, as amended by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel it to be my duty, under the circumstances, desiring that this bill become a law, to move that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 23, 140, 145, 146, 158, 161, 163, and 164.

Mr. BERRY. Do those amendments include the public buildings and also the Hawaiian cable, I will ask the chairman?

Mr. ALLISON. They include everything in the bill not agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. Those items not agreed to are for buildings and for the cable?

Mr. ALLISON. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 23, 140, 145, 146, 158, 161, 163, and 164.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I for one do not like, with all due respect to one of the oldest members of the Senate and a Senator who holds the highest position in this body, to be told by our conferees that this bill will fail if we do not get down and surrender and humble ourselves before the other House of Congress after we have gracefully agreed to all of their bills. We have stopped the consideration of appropriation bills and conference reports and everything else at the request of the House and passed by the wholesale their public-building bills. Every Senator remembers the spectacle we had here for days. The Senate could have refused to pass any of them.

Now, for the House to come and tell us after we have agreed to their bills, which they railroaded through by wholesale, that those bills shall have prior right, shall stand higher, and shall pass to the discredit, detriment, and defeat of bills which the Senate has passed time and time again on their merits is cheek concentrated and gall compounded.

Mr. President, it is almost an insult to this body to have a co-ordinate branch of this Government send us such a message after the generous treatment we have given their bills—not consideration, for we gave them no consideration in any proper sense, but simply concurred in their bills as a matter of courtesy. It is untrue to say that the House bills occupy a different position because they have been considered in a legislative sense by the Senate, for they have not been.

The public-building bills that the House has passed have been accepted by the Senate without question. Are those bills to have a higher right to consideration in this appropriation bill than Senate bills, simply because the House has refused to consider our bills or even to pass them as a matter of courtesy as we have passed theirs? It is outrageous for the House to set up that claim; and did I not have such great respect for the conferees of the Senate, I would say it was outrageous for them to transmit such a claim here and father it, as they have done, and say to us that we should surrender and give up because the House says that its public buildings for little village towns of two or three thousand inhabitants have had the legislative indorsement and consideration of both Houses. It is not true.

I can understand how the House might put up such a false plea as an offset to be traded on in conference, but I can not understand how the conference committee of this body can accept it and seriously come and ask us to take it and act on it, and to recede from the bills for towns that are big enough to take half a dozen of these little villages inside of them and have room enough to spare, and ask us to surrender, to give up bills for towns that pay enough internal-revenue taxes in one year to pay the running expenses of half a dozen of these towns for five years.

Mr. President, it is known to every member of the conference committee and to every Senator here that if the Senate will simply be firm enough to stand by the four or five bills which have been discriminated against, every one of them will go into this bill, and the bill will not fail. Would the House ever surrender 50 bills for public buildings for little one-horse towns because, forsooth, they had been struck with such a streak of economy that they could not vote to add five bills for towns that had almost as large population as all the other towns combined?

Can any sane man tell me that the House would defeat this bill, with these items amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, to say nothing of the public buildings that they have got, simply because we insist upon four or five public buildings, every one of them more meritorious than the majority of the bills which they have added?

Mr. President, I have great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. He is ripe in knowledge and ripe in experience as a lawyer, but if he were more familiar with this body and its ways of doing business I do not think he would have surrendered so easily as he did. He says, however, that he will never do it any more; but if he does he will find himself a year from now—two years, three years, four years, five years from now—in the same position he is now in.

I have been here but four years, and I have waked up each year with the same bitter experience I had when I surrendered in my first freshman year as the Senator from Alabama has just surrendered.

I regret, Mr. President, that the veteran chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has seen fit to surrender. I do not know what consideration moved him.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will tell the Senator presently, if he will allow me.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad to know.

Mr. HAWLEY. Respect for the good character of the Senate, love of my country, the desire to do orderly business, the desire to submit to the majority of the Senate. In view of the fact that this session ends at 12 o'clock to-day and every man's mind is made up, why not, in the name of mercy, humanity, justice, and political wisdom, stop this everlasting useless talk and vote? That is what I mean.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator from Connecticut admit that he is whipped? Does he surrender and retreat?

Mr. HAWLEY. I never said such a thing. Do not make me say such a thing.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator is not whipped, why is he running before he gets whipped?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not whipped and I am not running. Those are offensive phrases. I am submitting to what seems to me, as undoubtedly it is, a very considerable injustice, and taking my share of that injustice, but my common sense has not deserted me. I say we have got to submit to the will of the majority in this Senate, that that will is made up, and that the Senator is running the risk of an extra session, by the failure of important bills, owing to this everlasting succession of words.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. BUTLER. As the Senator from New Hampshire stated this morning, there are some things worse than an extra session.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to repeat that?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I will call attention to the fact that no one of these bills is necessary for the public service until the 30th day of June next. It is not necessary that next week, or the week after, or next month, or the month after that, all these bills should become laws. The Congress of the United States has until the 30th day of June, if it chooses to meet in extra session, to deal with these questions.

Mr. President, for one I am tired of having all the great appropriation bills of this Government crowded into the last two weeks of the short session of Congress. The Senate has passed at this session a proposition for a constitutional amendment by which the term of the short session of Congress can be lengthened until the 4th of May, and the House of Representatives pays no attention to it.

I have been here a great many years, and I have been here at six of these closing sessions on the 4th of March, and I never have been so much impressed as I have been this year with the utter unwisdom of the management of the business of Congress during the short session.

Mr. President, these controversies arise, and they come in here within the last week. They ought to be settled according to their merits, and they would be settled according to their merits, but at the last minute we have clubs thrown at us and fists shaken at us; and we are told that if we do not submit to this or if we do not submit to that and do not go without this or do not go without that, there will be an extra session of Congress. Suppose there should be.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator if he does not think that our conferees are not just as busy throwing clubs and shaking fists at the other fellows as they are at us? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose they are. This is a free fight all around, and it is sure never to be bigger than when the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] takes a hand. [Laughter.]

What is Congress for? Mr. President, you draw $5,000 a year for attending to the business of the Government in this body, and by what rule you are to go off and shirk the business that should be attended to and expect to earn your one year's salary in three months' work I do not understand. I think I might just as well say everything there is in my mind now, if the Senator from North Carolina will allow me.

Mr. BUTLER. Go ahead. You are doing well.

Mr. SPOONER. How long will it take the Senator to do it?

Mr. CHANDLER. If Senators will let me alone and not interrupt me, it will not take a great while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will protect the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know the Chair will. [Laughter.]

I am of the opinion, decidedly of the opinion, at this moment, that rather than submit to the propositions that are being crowded down our throats and relinquish the things that are desirable to be done between now and the 30th day of June next, there had better be an extra session of Congress; and for one I advocate it and shall vote accordingly until 12 o'clock at noon to-day.

I do not know whether the Committee on Appropriations will let us adjourn then, but they will some time before Sunday noon, and I propose to vote here and now, and from this time on, to bring about an extra session of Congress, at which we can consider the business of this Government, which we are paid to consider and perform according to our judgment, until we can go and do it as we ought to do it, and not be rammed and crowded in the way we have been for the last day or two. We ought to do our duty.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Colorado has my permission to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I supposed the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] had the floor.

The Senator from New Hampshire referred to our remuneration from the Government and said that we are sent here for the purpose of doing our duty. I ask the Senator if part of our duty is not in finishing up our business in order that we may adjourn within the period which the Constitution prescribes and not throw upon the country the enormous expense and trouble of an extra session in order that we may build a public building up in Nashua? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I think that is a fair question, except the latter part of it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not mean to refer to any individual State, but I mean any public building.

Mr. CHANDLER. As to the intimation regarding the public building at Nashua, I am willing to surrender the public building at Nashua if it will end this session.

In reply to the Senator, I will say yes; it is our duty to come here and get through by the 4th of March if we can, and do all the business that we can practically do by that time, but it is not our duty to undertake to do as much work as we have been undertaking to do for the last fortnight, and to attack as much public business as we have been compelled to attack during the last fortnight. If the session is only three months, it is the duty of the House of Representatives to expedite its business more than it does expedite it, and it is the duty of the great committees of this body to so bring in the bills that we are to pass upon that we can deal with them without being crowded into the night in the closing hours of the 4th of March.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, one other question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. How can the great committees of the Senate deal with these appropriation bills until the House sends them over here?

Mr. CHANDLER. They can not, and the House is delinquent in not sending them over here at an earlier date; and when they come here, they are allowed to drag. There is no doubt about that; and the Senator from Colorado can not alter the fact that it is not carrying on the business of the Government correctly nor in an orderly and appropriate and dignified manner to go on as we have been going on here for the last twenty-four hours.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BUTLER. I do.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish simply to say in this connection that the fortifications bill, the deficiency bill, and the Army appropriation bill, carrying more than $100,000,000, were never considered by the Committee on Appropriations of this body at all. They came here in the closing hours of the session, having been only considered and reported by the subcommittees to the Senate; and we have run through them in such a way that I do not suppose there is a member of this body who has ever read all of them through. If that is consideration, when we expend one hundred and odd million dollars, it seems to me it is such consideration as the American people hardly ought to tolerate and we ought not to endure. Yet these bills were held back week by week until the last forty-eight hours of the session, and we are going over them in this same manner.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is not a question whether five public buildings will defeat this bill or cause an extra session. It is a question whether or not those who insist upon having appropriations for public buildings at every country crossroads town and at the same time discriminate against places that deserve public buildings tenfold more than they do will force an extra session or succeed in this raid on the Treasury for buildings less meritorious than those left out of the bill.

Since I have been a member of this body I have been in Washington over two-thirds of the time. There is probably not a member of this body whose private business has been more neglected for the last four years than mine. There is probably not a member who is more anxious personally to get away from Washington and to give his personal and private business attention than I am, but I was not elected Senator by the legislature of North Carolina to give my chief attention to my private business. I was elected to give my whole attention to the public business, and I am ready to do it, if it needed it, and I am not to be lectured even by the oldest Senator in this body and told to stop this everlasting talk in order to give him or anybody else who has got what he wants in this bill or other bills a chance to get off and attend to his private business.

Mr. President, I have on a dozen occasions refrained from discussing important measures as fully as I desired and contented myself with a brief statement or with putting into the RECORD, without discussion, facts and data that I have been weeks and months preparing, in response to the appeals of Senators to hasten business and prevent an extra session.

Mr. President, I have not taken as much time as I might legitimately have taken, and was entitled to take, on many matters of importance to my State and to the country. I have done all I could to facilitate business. Therefore, Mr. President, I resent the suggestion from the youngest or the oldest member of this body that I have in any measure been guilty of delaying business or of indulging in "everlasting talk," or of any other kind of talk that was not pertinent and proper to the questions under consideration.

There is no one personally more anxious than I am for Congress to reach a proper and decent conclusion of its labors by noon on March 4; but I do not want to be humbugged. I do resent what looks like trifling with or an attempt to bulldoze the Senate, and I resent demands from another body which are unreasonable. I do not charge bad faith to our conferees; but I do want to say that, in my humble opinion, if they had pursued a different course, if they had laid down ultimatums, instead of having ultimatums laid down to them on all occasions, justice would have been done the Senate in the matter now under controversy and the bill would have been passed before now.

I regret that I have felt that the interests of my State in this matter compelled me to take any of the time of the Senate at this late hour. But, as the Senator from Alabama said if our conference committee dump us now, after all that has been said, I will for the present submit, but I serve notice that I will be with the Senator from Alabama a year from now and will not then surrender, even if it forces an extra session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10.

The motion was agreed to.

Any company charging or collecting an amount in excess of the rates herein prescribed shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $50 for each and every offense, to be collected as other fines are now collected in the District of Columbia."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "25;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,490;" and the Senate agree to the same.

ESTATE OF NEIL M'ENENY.

Mr. STEWART. There is a little lost-bond bill that I think ought to be passed. It is a House bill. The bond was lost in the Johnstown flood. The member from that district is very anxious to have it pass the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read for information.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is so late in the session to legislate now, I have about made up my mind that I will—

Mr. STEWART. Will not the Senator make an exception in this case?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, sir; I can not. I made an exception in one case, and that did not get through. I do not want to be discourteous, but I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. PETTUS. What is the bill?

Mr. STEWART. It is a bill for the relief of the heirs of Neil McEneny, of Johnstown, Pa.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amount involved?

Mr. STEWART. It is only a small amount. We have reported six or seven like it from the committee, and all have gone through except this one.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we can have an understanding among ourselves that this is to be the last bill that is to go through this Congress besides appropriation bills and necessary measures, I will yield to my friend from Nevada.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope unanimous consent will be given, and that it is not to interfere with bills from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8623) for the relief of the heirs of Neil McEneny, of Johnstown, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to issue to the heirs of Neil McEneny, Johnstown, Pa., a duplicate in lieu of United States 4 per cent coupon bond issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, for $500, with interest coupons attached dated October 1, 1888, and subsequently the bond and interest coupons having been destroyed by the Johnstown flood May 31, 1889.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 43, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, and 55.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and not more than two of the seagoing battle ships and not more than two of the armored cruisers herein provided for and not more than two of the protected cruisers herein provided for shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 52, 53, and 54, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendments, and strike out, on page 58 of the bill, in line 17, after the word "dollars," all down to and including the word "Government," at the end of the amended paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That in procuring armor for the seagoing coast-line battle ships and the harbor-defense vessels of the monitor type authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes, approved May 4, 1898, the Secretary of the Navy may contract for suitable armor for said vessels under the limitations as to price for the same as fixed by said act: And provided further, That no contracts for the armor for any vessels authorized by this act shall be made at an average rate exceeding $300 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case shall a contract be made for the construction of the hull of any vessel authorized by this act until a contract has been made for the armor of such vessel;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. A. BOUTELLE,
S. G. HILBOEN,
AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask for a little time to examine the report before the question is put.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think I comprehend the effect of the report, but I should like to have the Senator from Maine state briefly to us exactly what it does.

Mr. HALE. I think perhaps there has been no appropriation bill where the action of the conferees has been beset with more difficulties than in this measure. The difference between the two Houses has been radical, and it has been enforced by votes in each House. The provisions as to the number of ships, upon which we could agree without much difficulty; the provision as to the price of armor plate, a very difficult question, and the provision of the Senate for a new armor plant were subjects upon which when we first approached them in conference it seemed almost impossible to arrive at any result. I felt so myself. I felt depressed. I could not see my way. The Senate had put in a provision for a limitation in the purchase of armor to $300 a ton, which not only applied, under the provisions of the amendment, to the ships authorized by this act, but to those of last year, and hung them up, depending upon that strife. How to get at that was another difficulty.

In one conference and another the conferees eliminated all the other items, and in this conference they struck out the Gathmann gun, which the Senate had put in, and came to this agreement about the vexed questions, the best we could do on the armor plant. I myself am free to say that as I look at the future, if we are going to build a large navy, I am more and more impressed that at a near day both Houses have got to consent to an armor plant, so that the Government may have that hold over the combinations for furnishing armor by private establishments.

But I may say that we found in this matter that the House would not for one moment accept it. Two votes were taken in the House, and the proportion of votes was larger on the second than the first. We found the House conferees upon that subject, although courteous, obdurate, and they would not agree to any proposition at the present time which involved such an establishment. That being the case, we had to do the best we could with the other important items, and this is what we have arrived at. We have fixed the number of ships as the House fixed it—battle ships, armored cruisers, and protected cruisers—and we provide—

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator state the number? Are three of each provided for?

Mr. HALE. Three of each and six small ships.

Mr. BUTLER. Six protected cruisers?

Mr. HALE. Yes; six protected cruisers.

Mr. PERKINS. And the same provision was restored as to where they shall be built?

Mr. HALE. All those provisions are in the bill as they have been in the laws for years. We fixed for these as a basis for the future the Senate proposition of $300 per ton. The Secretary of the Navy is forbidden to make any contract for any armor for these ships at a rate higher than $300 per ton. The House also agreed to the proposition of the Senate that no contracts should be made for the hulls of these vessels until a contract was made for armor.

Mr. FRYE. They do not contemplate building any.

Mr. HALE. That is a practical question. Undoubtedly none of these ships will be authorized or nothing more than the plans and specifications will be drawn between now and December.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Would those now being built be finished?

Mr. HALE. I will come to that. The six cruisers will be built, because they are not armored. That is the way we left that provision. The House conferees conceded that point reluctantly, but finally conceded it.

Now, as to the ships authorized year before last, we go back and provide that all of the vessels authorized by the act of March 4, 1898, shall be subject to the limitations as to the cost and price of the provisions of that act, which fix the rate at $400 per ton. We leave those ships as they would have been left if there had been no legislation this year.

Now, Senators, that is the substance, the meat of this whole proposition. It leaves out the armor plant, because we could get no recognition of that now. It adopts the price of the Senate, $300 per ton, for all the battle ships authorized by this act, and for those authorized in 1898 we leave them just as the law left them, without interfering in any way.

Mr. FRYE. Did we get any armor at four hundred?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. So the probabilities are that those ships will be completed?

Mr. HALE. We have been paying $400 for armor lately. That is all there is of the report. It does not suit anybody very well. It does not suit me very well.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand the situation, we are to build 3 battle ships, 3 armored cruisers, and 6 protected cruisers, as authorized by the House; we have yielded to the House on the point of the armor plant by striking the paragraph entirely out of the bill; we have yielded away three ships authorized by the last act, and we will pay for the armor exactly what was contracted for under the former act. As to this bill we simply reduce the price to $300 per ton, and stop there.

Mr. HALE. And provide that no contract shall be made for a greater price in the case of the vessels authorized by the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the hulls shall go with the armor.

Mr. HALE. We provide that the hulls shall go with the armor. That is to prevent any possible claim which might be had by the builders of the hulls if they went on and hurried up their work and claimed damages for the delay.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is a final report?

Mr. HALE. It is a final report.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill, inasmuch as it is a final report, whether he thinks that under the terms of the agreement with the House conferees we will build any ships next year, whether we will get any contract for any ships, or any contract for armor?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not think that under this bill anything more will be done than to get out the specifications and plans and to decide upon some questions which are in doubt about turrets and barbettes work, and have them all ready for any action which Congress may take next December. That was the best we could do. If we build an armor plant, we can not build it in certainly less than a year, if we authorize one hereafter. I am by no means certain that I should not vote for an armor plant at the proper time. As I said, we had to meet the situation.

Mr. BUTLER. We could get an armor plant in operation, if we authorized it now, three months after we passed the next appropriation bill. We would have the armor plant at work in that time if we provided for it in this bill.

Mr. HALE. That, of course, is true; but, as I said, we were confronted with this situation. We ran right up against that wall. Both sides had to yield something.

Mr. TILLMAN. But if the Senator from Maine will allow me, it seems to me we yielded everything and they yielded nothing.

Mr. BUTLER. I was about to ask what we got for all of this yielding. I have not been able to see it. I want to be fair to our distinguished chairman.

Mr. TILLMAN. The only thing we get out of it is that the ships we order can not be contracted for until we can get armor at $300 a ton.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not consider that to be a gain.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not consider that anything is, because we have had this thing hanging over those people twice before by majorities in this body which ought to have shown the House that the Senate was in earnest. Yet, as soon as an exigency arose or some condition favorable to the demands of these people, they came here and under stress of circumstances which we all felt we could not withstand they got us to go back up to the same $400 price. A year from this time the work will begin to slack in the shipyards, and the pressure will be to have the ships constructed which we have authorized.

The armor manufacturers, with their monopoly, will be safe from competition because twelve months from this time it would take us then fifteen months further on to get an armor factory ready, and that will put us over into 1901, when we would absolutely be without anything on the stocks. We would have to go over this whole fight and confront this monopoly again and have it over. Why not settle it now?

Mr. HALE. Well, because we can not settle it now.

Mr. TILLMAN. We can settle it one way. We can let the House take the responsibility of having an extra session.

Mr. HALE. It will not be the responsibility of the House. The responsibility will be on us as well as upon that body. I have not the least sympathy with these concerns for the building of armor.

Mr. TILLMAN. But why should we lose a year?

Mr. HALE. I have not the least sympathy with them. I think this controversy has risen largely from this plan of theirs of leaping out a hundred and forty-odd dollars in price upon the claim that they have a greatly superior process. I do not know anything about that, really, and yet I am impressed with it as a man of some affairs and some experience and some judgment is impressed with things that he has not accurate knowledge of. The more I think of it the more I believe that there is not in that process as much actually as is claimed for it. I think that that is a forced performance on the part of those concerns, and I have no sympathy with them.

Now, I have not any fear of any influence that they will have as monopolists over any legislation. The feeling in this branch of Congress has grown in favor of a Government armor plant. It will grow in the House. The next House will be in better condition to consider the subject than the present House.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him why we should lose a year before we order the armor plant to be built, supposing that next winter this feeling will have grown?

Mr. HALE. We should not lose that year if we could help it. But I am dealing with conditions as we find them; and I do not look upon it as hopeless, for at a near day in the future, being in a condition where we can control these men and hold them to reason, we will make our armor. But we can not do it now.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me analyze, if you please, just the condition we are in. We have three battle ships and four monitors authorized, which will take at least 15,000 tons of armor. They will not need that armor until year after next, according to the report of our own Secretary. Then they will be in the condition of completion necessary to get it and put it on them. We have time to build our factory and make that armor ourselves. But in order to give these people $1,500,000, for that is the difference between $300 and $400 a ton, we defer action in ordering an armor plant. We give them enough money in this contract to build one, and at the end of the time we are at their mercy still or we have got to go over this whole fight again.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me, the armor contractors will make enough profit out of the contract to buy not only the site for a public library in the city of Washington, but four or five library buildings as well as the site.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Maine allow me just one word?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I will tell you what will be the result. The feeling against building a navy at all is growing in the country. If we have got to build it under the control and dictation of this monopoly and we can not get away from it, there will be a strong feeling in favor of stopping the building of the Navy at all, because if we get into any trouble we do not know what they may do. They have done so badly and made so many threats, they have changed their position so often, and they have charged so much, that the people are beginning to feel that they have got us in their power and we are not a free government. I think the building of the armor plant will cost $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. If we never use it at all, if we had it there so that we could control the prices and make the people feel that we had an honest deal, there would be great satisfaction.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator. My mind is coming to that conclusion. But, as I have said, we can not get it at the present time. Now, as to these monopolists. The provisions we put in the bill do not suit them by any means. They are not suited by it—

Mr. TILLMAN. But will my friend—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will address the Chair and get permission.

Mr. HALE. But I have some hope that leaving the vessels that we provided for in 1898 with the Secretary under that act, that he will be able to make contracts for a part of them, or all of them, as we have left the provision so that work may go on. I think he would have made contracts if it had not been for the scheme, we have sat down upon so hard, of exaggerating the price away up to $545, because of that process. If that had not been sprung upon Congress, I think the Secretary would have made contracts under the act of 1898 for the ships provided for in that act.

Mr. TILLMAN. There have been certainly eight or nine months since the Secretary had authority, and the war was on, which should have pressed him forward to make the contracts for the armor. He did not do it. Why, I do not know. We have had that discussed, and I shall not repeat what I have said.

Mr. HALE. I think I can see how it was, for Secretaries as well as contractors take monition from the acts of Congress and the debates in Congress, and the feeling they find in Congress. This debate has done good. Whatever comes out of it, it has done great good. It will work well in the Departments; it will work well with these contractors. I think they came with an idea that we were going to put the $545 proposition right through. The Committee on Naval Affairs in the House reported it, and I think the contractors expected it. This discussion and the act of the Senate now fixing $300 as the limit of the price of armor for the other ships will certainly be a very strong reminder to these people that they have no influence here in Congress, and it will do them good.

Mr. TILLMAN. They seem to be omnipotent in the other House; and we are giving away to other people, losing a year, under the coercion of this armor trust, in the construction of a plant.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator ought to say that the acts of anybody in Congress are under coercion, because Congress is composed of honorable men in both branches. We disagreed, and it was no easy matter, I will say to the Senator, to get the House to the point of $300. That was looked upon, when first struck, as the abomination of desolation, as being about the worst thing that could happen, as an outrage, and the conferees felt that it was so different—$245 less than they had reported—that it was very difficult to bring them to the acceptance of it.

But they had to yield something, as we had to yield something. We have done the best we could, and practically, so far as the new vessels are concerned, we get them authorized and ready for the action of Congress when it will have more time for deliberation at the next session. Then the authorization is out of the way; that is done. We are to have them as an addition to the Navy, and then, with the specifications and the new light the Department has, and the new light that has forced itself into the minds and eyes of these contractors, we shall take up this subject and deal with it as it should be dealt with; while if we do not do it in this way now, we are confronted with losing the bill.

As I have said, the provision does not suit me. I wish we had a result out of it that went further. But I believe that, all things considered, we have done the wisest thing we could do. We submit it not to the prejudice of anyone, not to what any Senator would like if he could write out his programme, but to the good judgment of Senators under the present conditions. With three hours between now and the time when the gavel falls, can we do better than to leave it in this way? With the chance of the ships already authorized in the last year being built, with the authorization of the new ships this year and with all we have on the stocks, it is no great harm if we put the matter over until next winter, when we can take the subject up and when we will not be pushed and crowded and driven by the menace of the hour that is so near when the Congress expires.

On those considerations the six gentlemen composing the conference have presented this result to the Senate. It is the best we could do, Senators.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, as I said a little while ago, we yield to those people the manufacture of 15,000 tons, which will give them a profit, at a hundred dollars a ton, of $1,500,000. Contracts are to be let for the three battle ships and four monitors. We lose a year's time, in which we could have our plant constructed and be in readiness to manufacture the armor for the new ships here authorized.

It appears to me an anomalous proposition that the Senate, feeling and believing that the only protection to this Government lies in erecting its own armor factory, so as to give us a club with which to hammer these people into decency, should turn around and make them a present of a million and a half dollars in the contracts that are hereby authorized, and defer the day when we will give the Government protection by getting our own plant.

These are my feelings, and I never was so strongly tempted in my life just simply to say this thing can not become a law; but I have every assurance from gentlemen on the other side that they will next winter insist on putting this matter straight and correcting the villainous wrong that has been going on for ten years, yes, twelve or fourteen, I think, ever since the new Navy was begun, during which we have contributed to the coffers of this monopoly not less than $12,000,000 of excess price far beyond any decent profit on the cost of the plant, and have given them their plant.

Mr. HALE. There is another thing, and what the Senator now says recalls it to my mind. For one, I propose to say to the Secretary of the Navy that one of the things he must do—and he will be glad to do it on the suggestion of myself and other Senators, between now and December—is to collect information and facts in reference to the building of an armor-plate establishment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why must he? Here is this volume of 500 pages, and all the plans and specifications and every detail, and estimates of the factory and steel plant, with the machinery needed, and we could be ready to begin to-morrow if you would authorize it to-day.

Mr. HALE. No; if we were to authorize it to-day, we could not go ahead to-morrow. Time has changed a good many things.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has not changed, except that you put in 1 per cent of chromium. Everything else, according to Captain O'Neill, is identical with the Harvey process.

Mr. HALE. We would not build the same armor plant that we would have built five years ago, or anything like it. The Secretary of the Navy, if he is a good man, a wise man, a good public servant, will, with his subordinates, collect the information and facts, which he will be able to give us with reference to this very question next December; and I for one shall take it upon myself to make that adjuration to him, that he do that, and that will help us.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill his opinion. I will follow the plan adopted by the Senator from Alabama in asking the Senator from Iowa for information. In his opinion will it be to the best interest of this Government now, deliberately, to pursue a policy which will mean that we will not build a single ship or contract for the building of one or begin the building of one until next year?

Mr. HALE. To begin with, I do not think that under any conditions much will be done about the building of the ships between now and next December. The yards are full. The contractors are not anxious to take on these ships. I doubt, if there was no controversy here, whether there would be any perceptible progress, in fact, any actual, material progress, whether the sound of a hammer, the laying of the keel, the building of the structure, would take place between now and December under any circumstances. The smaller cruisers, which are not armored, can be built.

Mr. TILLMAN. There are only three shipyards, if the Senator will allow me, which can build battle ships.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is probably right about that. One or two other yards think they have developed and will be in competition with the other yards, but there are only three yards that are fully equipped and which have shown a capacity to build. So I do not think we change that materially by this proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. Therefore the result of the bill is this, and it is worth the attention of Senators: A year ago we provided for the building of three battle ships and the furnishing of the armor at $400 a ton. That is the law now unless this bill repeals it. What does the naval bill do in addition to that? Absolutely nothing. I ask the chairman if I am not correct when I say, providing this bill does not repeal existing law—the appropriation bill which we passed last year—that then, as far as concerns the increase of the Navy or the increase of equipment, or any vessel ordered, or the contract for any vessel authorized, it does absolutely nothing.

Mr. HALE. I keep saying, in reply to that question, that the six smallest ships, which are very useful, can be proceeded with. They can be built outside of the big yards referred to. There have been years when we had no other programme, when we had no battle ships. We are not badly off in battle ships. With those that are now being finished we have a very formidable force of battle ships.

Mr. BUTLER. Our protected cruisers are the most worthless vessels we have in the Navy to-day. The late war has proved that the most valuable fighting vessels are the battle ships and the armored cruisers like the New York and the Brooklyn and the torpedo boats. The protected cruisers were almost absolute failures. So if we have learned anything from the war, it seems to me we have learned not to waste any more money on that class of ships as fighting machines.

Mr. HALE. So far from that being true, the war and any other war that has taken place within the last dozen years has not demonstrated either the great usefulness or the value of big ships or big guns. It has been the reverse. Almost all of the shots that riddled and sunk the vessels of the Spaniards at Santiago came from the 6 and 8 inch guns. The picturesque battle in Manila Bay, where the Spanish fleet was annihilated by our fleet, was all done with 6 and 8 inch guns, and there was not a ship in the fleet, including the Admiral's flagship, that was anything but a protected cruiser or of a rank and type lower than the protected cruiser. The Olympia alone, after getting into Manila Bay, could have destroyed the whole Spanish fleet without the assistance of another ship. She is nothing but a protected cruiser.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose she herself had been struck? It is a fairly good fighting machine if it is not hit by the enemy. Then it is almost defenseless.

Mr. HALE. There were no battle ships at Yalu. The nearest approach were the smaller ships of the Chinese, with light armor upon them, and they were defeated. There was not a battle ship in the line of the Japanese navy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina to ask a question of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if he does not believe that the Oregon can whip a dozen ships like the Olympia and sink them all?

Mr. HALE. I think if the Senator were to post the Oregon at sea as you would a chessman, and place the fleet of the enemy to suit us, she would easily destroy every one of the Spanish battle ships. I have no doubt about that; but there are infirmities about big ships and big guns, both.

I doubt whether the world will be making the most enormous of these battle ships five years from now. It is very certain that it will not arm them with big guns. They have all passed into desuetude. I would not, if I had my way, put a gun on one of our ships over 10 inches. There will not be any over 12 inches. The big guns so much talked about and about which so much pride was felt are disappearing from the navies of the world, and the big battle ships have very decided infirmities.

If you want to be a commercial nation, a nation that runs around the world and carries the flag with the sun, we want a large number of these cruisers. In nine cases out of ten they will do everything that a battle ship or a protected cruiser would do in time of peace, and you can maintain four of them for what it would cost to maintain one of the battle ships.

Mr. BUTLER. All the officers of the Navy with whom I have had the opportunity of talking do not have that opinion.

Mr. HALE. Some of them do not and some of them do, I know. Of course officers of the Navy like to have big battle ships and big cruisers. It is nice to command them, and all that; but the others are needed.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the Senator think that the objection—

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to hear what is going on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will speak louder. They can not be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. I am deeply interested in the question being discussed by the two Senators, and I should like to have an opportunity to hear it.

Mr. HALE. It is a very interesting conversation.

Mr. ALLEN. I am satisfied it is. Knowing the Senators and their capacity to converse, I am anxious to hear the conversation going on.

Mr. BUTLER. I bow to the Senator from Nebraska, and will proceed. However, I do not promise to be so interesting as I have been.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me a word before he goes on?

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from New Hampshire will not be so bright as to make my remarks tame in comparison with his.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill ought to go to the House pretty quickly. I have been interested in the conversation of the trio of Senators. I have refrained from joining them and thus making it a quartet.

Mr. BUTLER. I admire the Senator from New Hampshire—

Mr. CHANDLER. I do hope if he yields to anybody he will yield to me, whether I am on my feet or not at the time. I want to say a few words.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think the American people will look upon the passage of this bill with favor if they realize that in the shape in which it now passes it means that it does not add a single vessel to the American Navy for the next year. That is the net result. We are not representing American sentiment when we pass the naval appropriation bill with that blank in it.

It is true that the bill nominally provides for the contracting for certain war vessels—three battle ships, three armored cruisers, and six protected cruisers, and so on with the smaller vessels, I think—but the chairman of the committee has just told us in open Senate that the net result, by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, will be that a year will roll round without a single one of these ships being contracted for, and the net result will be the same as if there was not a line in the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to build or contract for or begin to build more battle ships or cruisers or any other kind of war vessels.

Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the efforts of the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from New Hampshire, and the small part I have played therein, put forth to relieve this Government from the grasp of a most unconscionable trust—laudable efforts I, think, with the best of intentions, with motives not conspiring against the building up of the American Navy, but with motives to make it easy and cheaper to build up a better and bigger navy—will result in building no navy at all. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that whatever I may have put forward has resulted in accomplishing just the opposite result to that I desired to accomplish.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, we want more ships. We are willing to take all these ships. All we ask is that the Government be prepared to put the armor on them. Instead of that we do not build any ships. We wait a year. We give these people in the meantime enough money to build a factory, and twelve months hence we will have to start over again on the ships and the factory, because if we are to get the factory we have got to educate the next House of Representatives out of its friendliness, if that word is euphonistic enough for my friend the Senator from New Hampshire, to this combination.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina must realize that whenever the House says so and so and lays down an ultimatum, that is the end of it; and whenever the armor trust lays down an ultimatum and says it will not do so and so, that ends it, and this Government must not move till it gets the permission of the trust. Congress has the power to free the Government from such domination and robbery. Will it refuse to do it? Last year we offered $400 a ton in the midst of war, but they wanted more. They claim now that they have a new and improved process for making better armor, which is, in my opinion, a mere pretense to try to induce us to pay them $545 a ton for armor that can be made for $225 a ton. They tell us we must pay their price, or get no armor.

The Senator from South Carolina must not be surprised at that. He has been here four years, and he has seen it happen every year. He has seen Congress three times reduce the price of armor, and he has seen each time that it has not amounted to the paper on which it was written. Why? Because the Congress did not provide for the building of an armor plant by the Government if the trust refused to furnish armor at a fair price. The first thing the conference report does is to strike out that provision from this bill. Therefore the reduction of the price of armor is simply playing to the galleries, while in fact we surrender to the trust, and will get no armor and will build no ships for the next year, and never again till we either build an armor plant, or surrender completely to the trust.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question any further, because it does no good; but I do want to repeat, and I state it with emphasis, that I do regret exceedingly that any effort of mine to reduce the price of armor and to provide for an armor plant to give us better armor and cheaper armor should result in contracting the American Navy and stop the building of new battle ships. I had no such purpose, and it is against my every desire and wish, and such would not be the result if we would keep in this bill the provision for an armor plant. The responsibility is on those who oppose providing for building the armor plant. If we keep that provision in, we will get the armor at the price named.

When the Senate committee voted to reduce the number of battle ships, I doubted its wisdom; but we were told that we had authorized all that could be built, adding 2 battle ships, 2 armored cruisers, and 3 protected cruisers. I thought there was no use adding a vain thing, if that is all we could build in the next year. There was no use authorizing any more, although I would cheerfully have voted for the whole number offered by the House. Every fight we will have in the future will be a naval battle, and when the United States is mistress of the sea she will be mistress of the world, as far as defense is concerned. I hope we will never become an offensive nation, seeking to attack and destroy other governments without provocation.

Mr. President, we will stand in a position where all the powers would not dare to attack us when we have a navy such as we shall have. I should be glad if we had it now, and I trust we will have it soon. We need no big army. Without a single soldier enlisted in the Regular Army, we can put more volunteers on the frontier than every other nation in the world can muster and land on our shores to fight our volunteers on land. I should be glad to see this bill provide for the building of more war ships, and for the sure means of speedily completing them.

I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, if he thinks we could add materially to our Navy by submitting to the trust for the next year, and agreeing to pay their price for the armor we want for three battleships and three armored cruisers. I am so much in favor of building them, and can see how they can be vitally useful to this Government, that I say to you frankly, if we are at their mercy and the House refuses to open its eyes I am almost ready to get down and vote for any price you name. Does the Senator think if we were to submit to them lock, stock, and barrel, and pay any price, that we could materially add to the force of our Navy?

Mr. HALE. As I have stated before, if there were no controversy here, I do not think anything could be done in the next nine months to amount to anything. If we were giving them all they ask, I do not think they would be making any armor for the ships we authorize here.

Mr. TILLMAN. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Could he not take the conference report and go into conference and have the Secretary of the Navy authorized to construct one of the small ships at the Kittery Yard or in New York or elsewhere, just to demonstrate whether the Government can not make it cost as little as the contract price that we pay for the other ships?

Mr. HALE. We know that already. Nothing has been demonstrated so plainly as that.

Mr. LODGE. It takes them longer and costs more.

Mr. HALE. Every ship that has been built in the navy-yard—I have the figures—has cost from 30 to 60 per cent more than the corresponding ship built in private yards. It has taken a longer time, and when she goes out she is not so good a ship.

Mr. TILLMAN. If that is true, why do we make our own guns?

Mr. HALE. That is another question.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; the same question must govern in this matter, simply because if we can make guns cheaper than we can buy them, then we can build ships as cheaply as we can buy them.

Mr. HALE. I have very considerable doubt about whether they are cheap, but a part of the guns are now made in private factories. They are assembled, finished in the navy-yards. We do not make the guns.

Mr. BUTLER. How could the Cramps take a contract and sublet it to the Government and make a profit of from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars on small jobs? That is the testimony we had before the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I do not know of any instance of that kind. There may be an exceptional case. It is not done to any extent. I did not know it was done at all.

Mr. BUTLER. We had the testimony before the Naval Affairs Committee, and there is also the case of the contract with an English firm, which was sublet to the American Government.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. I wish to go on record as expressing my regret that any effort of mine in what I have considered to be a proper, laudable, and necessary endeavor toward securing necessary action in this body should result in contracting and doing damage to the American Navy. I would submit to the trust for a reasonable amount to add to the Navy if it is necessary and right to do it.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I merely wish to make one remark. The same statements came before the Committee on Education and Labor in regard to the Cramps subletting work to the Government and some English firm subletting work to the Government, and we investigated the matter and found that there was no foundation at all for either one of the reports.

Mr. BUTLER. I can not make any reply to that, because Government employees gave testimony and we did not investigate it.

Mr. LINDSAY. We did.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator's committee investigated it, undoubtedly he knows of what he speaks.

Mr. HALE. Of course they could not sublet to any navy-yard. That is impossible.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I have to say to my friend the Senator from North Carolina and my friend the Senator from South Carolina that this compromise is not wholly a concession by the Senate to the House of Representatives. That some compromise was necessary is very evident unless there was to be an extra session of Congress. I have already expressed myself as willing to have such an extra session, but such is not the judgment of the Senate or of the members of the House of Representatives, I think; and if there is not to be an extra session, this conference report should be adopted within the next ten minutes and should go to the House of Representatives, where it has to be engrossed before 12 o'clock. So, Mr. President, I only wish to say a brief word.

The practical effect of the bill undoubtedly is to delay the building of the battle ships and the armored cruisers, but I repeat what I have already said in this debate, that we now stand with eight battle ships likely to be constructed and put into commission within one, two, or three years and four harbor-defense vessels. That is a very large addition to our Navy, and that addition reconciles me to the fact that we shall have to wait six months or eight months or a year longer for the ships that are authorized by this act than is desirable.

Mr. President, the three battle ships authorized a year ago and the harbor-defense vessels are to have the armor put upon them at $400 a ton, and we now have the statement of the manufacturers that they can put the Harvey armor upon those ships at that price and make a profit; and I want to say right here that I have not yet been convinced that the Krupp armor is any better than the Harvey armor. That is to be demonstrated to me. I was not informed of it in any formal shape until a fortnight ago, and I am not yet convinced.

We shall get these ships. The Senate has succeeded in defeating this combination to compel us to pay $545 for armor. We have held the price of armor down to $300, so far as statute law is concerned, so far as we authorize new armored battle ships and armored ships in this bill.

Mr. FRYE. We will not get any ships.

Mr. CHANDLER. We shall not get the battle ships or the armored cruisers within the next year, but we have got, as I said before the junior Senator from Maine came in, eight battle ships approaching completion now, and those will do for the present. There is no need of becoming quite so insatiate on the subject of large battle ships and armored cruisers as some Senators are.

Now, Mr. President, under those circumstances I think it would be unwise to contend longer. I believe that the Senate and House of Representatives in the next Congress will be able to deal with the question of armor, to find out what should be the composition of armor, and what is a fair price for it, and accomplish what we certainly have hitherto failed in accomplishing—a solution of this much vexed question of armor. Therefore I hope there will be a unanimous vote in favor of the adoption of the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate take a recess for an hour. That will be until half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw his motion until I can get some printing done. I trust there will be no objection to that.

Mr. PETTUS. I can not do so. I have been here all night.

Mr. MASON. So have I been here all night, and I have waited for an opportunity to get before the Senate and before the public a report made by a Department to this Senate, and if the Senator—

Mr. PETTUS. There will be plenty of time to do that.

Mr. MASON. I ask, Mr. President, that the Senate will not take a recess, but will give me an opportunity to have printed the investigation in regard to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. There seems to be a determination to shield somebody by keeping the result of the investigation locked in a vault, I judge, from the way the Senator objects.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

Mr. PETTUS. I made the motion for a recess; and I insist on the motion being put.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator not yield, that I may have passed a resolution calling for information from one of the Departments on another subject?

Mr. PETTUS. I can not do so.

Mr. MASON. That is exceedingly kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, that the Senate take a recess until half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Allison,	Daniel,	Martin,	Simon,
Berry,	Davis,	Pasco,	Spooner,
Butler,	Fairbanks,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,
Caffery,	Hawley,	Pettus,	Turley,

NOT VOTING—43.
Aldrich,	Foraker,	McLaurin,	Roach,

Faulkner,	McEnery,	Proctor,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until 10.30 o'clock a. m. (Saturday, March 4, 1889). At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MASON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] to my request to print all the evidence taken before the commission of investigation in regard to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I have made my statement repeatedly, but the Senator from Kentucky has not had an opportunity to look into the matter, and I feel that it is due now that either the evidence be printed or that some good reason be given why it should not be printed. The type has been set up, I am informed, in the Printing Office, but only a part of the evidence would have been printed under the resolution I formerly offered. The part that was printed was the evidence of the Director of the Bureau, the assistant director, the paymaster, the paymaster's clerk, the chief of the bindery, and the foreman in the plate-printing division.

The Senator from Kentucky felt that all the evidence ought to be printed. I have no objection to that. What I want is that the Senate may have an opportunity to know the facts in this case, and I ask unanimous consent that all the evidence taken in that investigation may be printed as a public document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, several days since a resolution to print a portion of the evidence taken by this investigating commission was introduced and referred to the Committee on Printing, reported back, and adopted. My attention was called to it the next day, when I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted. That motion is still pending.

This investigation was not a Congressional investigation. The Secretary of the Treasury, when he assumed control of the Treasury Department, selected a commission to investigate the various divisions and bureaus of the Department, and among others he investigated the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The commission reported to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he took such action on that report as he deemed proper, and that seemed to be the end of the investigation.

Some time since, upon the motion of some one the Senate printed the report of the investigating commission, printed the response of the superintendent of the Bureau, and the rejoinder of the commission. So the matter seemed to end. Now it is proposed to print, at the expense of the Government, the evidence taken by the commission.

I do not know what this evidence proves or tends to prove. I never have read a word of it, and I think I may assume that the Senator from Illinois does not know what it proves or tends to prove, and that he has never read a word of it.

Mr. MASON. That is true. The Senator is right.

Mr. LINDSAY. Now, we have the question whether or not the Senate shall print the testimony taken by a commission of one of the Departments in which the Senate has no interest, the character of the testimony being utterly unknown to every member of the Senate, merely to gratify some persons who fancy they have an interest in this testimony.

It is manifestly unjust to print only selected portions of the testimony. If any portion of it be printed, all of it ought to be printed, in order that all the testimony read by the Secretary of the Treasury shall go to those people who desire to review his action in this matter, which is purely confined to his Department.

I can see no good reason why the Government shall go to the expense of printing this testimony, but if the Senate shall think it ought to be printed, then I insist that no matter how much of it there may be, or how much it may cost the Government, all of it shall be printed, so that whoever reads the testimony shall be able to see and understand all the testimony that was taken in the case.

I am not protecting anybody; I am not desiring to shield anybody. It is merely a question of policy whether the Senate is going to enter upon the business of publishing not only the reports made in cases like this, but all the testimony taken by the Departments in all the investigations they may see proper to order. That is all I have to say about the matter.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky, in order that there may be absolute fair play and no complaint made by anyone, I will move that all the evidence in the case be printed. The type for more than half of it is already set. I can see the justice of the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky that a part of the evidence ought not to be printed if anyone interested wants it all printed.

The Senator has not sought to delay me. It was not the Senator from Kentucky who did that. He made no objection to my having a hearing, but the trade and labor unions have been engaged in a controversy with the superintendent of the Bureau, and they have asked to have this evidence printed in the way I presented it.

Now, I move that the testimony of all the witnesses who appeared before that commission may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LINDSAY. Unless the resolution which has been already adopted be reconsidered, I do not very well see how that can be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands this is a different motion. The original motion was to print a portion of the report. The pending motion is that all of the report be printed.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is for the Senate to say whether it desires to print the evidence or not. If it desires to do so, I shall have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to print the report referred to by him.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF ANTI-CONTRACT LABOR LAWS TO HAWAII.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11247) to extend the anticontract-labor laws of the United States to Hawaii.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to object to that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, that motion is debatable. I am led to object to the consideration of the bill not for any capitious reason. I object to it because there is an intention, as I understand, when the bill is taken up, to put an amendment on it carrying the national banking laws over into the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There is no such purpose on the part of the committee. The committee will object to any amendment to this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. If there is no intention of that kind, and if that is not to be done, I have no objection to extending the anticontract labor laws to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I shall, on behalf of the Committee on Immigration, object to any amendment being put on the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I believe in the bill itself, but I do not believe in the proposed amendments.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the bill be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information. The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. My colleague [Mr. MORGAN] made an objection to this bill yesterday or the day before. He is temporarily absent from the Senate, and I therefore object to the consideration of the bill until he comes into the Chamber.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to make a few brief remarks with regard to the subject, and perhaps the Senator from Alabama will have returned by the time I shall have finished.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, we annexed the Hawaiian Islands on the 12th of last August and made them a part of the United States. In the debate which then occurred the opponents of annexation stated that the climate was a tropical climate, and therefore that it would not be peopled by Americans or races of our blood; that the population would remain a tropical population; that the population would be such as to be incapable of maintaining self-government under our Constitution.

I do not now wish to discuss the question, but I wish to put in the RECORD certain facts with regard to the immigration to Hawaii since annexation. On the 23d of December, 1898, there were 14,397 Japanese and Chinese contract laborers or slave laborers employed upon the Hawaiian sugar plantations, and there were 7,601 day laborers so employed.

Since our flag went up in Hawaii, from August 12, 1898, to the 6th day of January, 1899, there have been imported 7,630 contract laborers. Since the 6th of January and up to the 2d of February of this year there have been 2,782 contract laborers brought to the Hawaiian Islands, or a total to February 2, 1899, of 10,412. This labor is slave labor. The laborers are under contract for a term of service. They are liable to be whipped and imprisoned. To-day Europeans, shipped there under contract since our flag went up, are working on the streets with all sorts of criminals because they refuse to subject themselves to the punishment of their taskmasters.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD a list of the importations of those laborers, giving the ships on which they came and their numbers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The papers referred to are as follows:

ONE YEAR'S ASIATIC ARRIVALS.

The following figures, obtained from the records of the board of health, show the number of Asiatics who have been attended to in Honolulu's quarantine station during the past year. It is a handsome increase of good "American citizens" for annexation year:

In connection with Mr. Shingle's interview in the San Francisco Call, giving the sugar planters 40,000 contract Chinese and Japanese laborers, the following official figures may be of interest. They are made up to October 1.

Laborers.	Chinese.	Japanese.	Total.
Contract	5,609	9,245	14,854
Day	1,062	5,152	7,144

Of whom 14,854 are contract laborers and 7,144 are day laborers. So much for the "confidential" agents' veracity and the Call's love of accuracy. To be generous we will add another 1,000 Japanese arrived since then—December 23, 1898.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On the 25th of August last, thirteen days after annexation, the Odd Fellows of Hawaii issued the following circular to the people of the United States:

A WARNING FROM HONOLULU.

HONOLULU, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS, August 25, 1898.

To all Odd Fellows, greeting:

The annexation of these islands by the United States has caused many of brethren to project attempts to better their condition or to find employment in what they consider a new country.

Such we consider it our duty to warn and to speak to in plain terms.

The social and business communities of these islands were old and well established before the rush to California.

This is in no sense a new country.

The only opportunity here is for the man of large capital.

There is no employment here for mechanics of any kind or for unskilled labor. Many men of ability, of good habits, and first-class recommendations are now here practically stranded. There were idle men in Honolulu before the American flag replaced the Hawaiian flag.

All lines of small business are fully filled and in most cases overcrowded. Do not come here unless you have the assurance in advance of steady employment, or have the capital to engage in land-development enterprises requiring large means.

We spread this positive advice because we wish to save brethren disappointment and distress. We state the facts as in more than honor bound, and trust sincerely that this circular will accomplish its mission.

This circular is issued by Excelsior Lodge, No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands

The Masonic body of Hawaii have issued a similar circular, which I will ask to have printed without reading. In that circular they make this statement, among other things:

For clerical work, bookkeepers, shopmen, stenographers, typewriters, etc., both male and female, the supply for the past two years has been greatly in excess of the demand, and for unskilled labor neither climate or pay is adapted to the white man.

Here is our contention, Mr. President. We contended that the climate and the wages paid for labor were not adapted to the white man and that he would not go there.

Outside of Honolulu and Hilo there are really no towns or villages, unless plantation camps may be classed as such.

I now ask that the entire circular may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The circular referred to is as follows:

To our Masonic brethren, greeting:

In view of the fact that the recent annexation of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States has drawn the attention of the public, more especially the people of the Pacific coast, to this group, and in view also of the fact that many people know but little of Hawaii, except the information gleaned from sensational newspaper articles, it is reasonable to suppose that large numbers of the unemployed will desire to rush to what they believe to be a new country, with a fine climate, a rich soil, a sparse civilized population, and large tracts of land lying idle and only awaiting ownership by possession of the first newcomer.

The influx of strangers has already begun, and while, no doubt, the experience of many disappointed seekers of employment will find expression in the newspapers of the coast and elsewhere at an early day, and perhaps deter some intended emigrants from "making the leap in the dark," still the several fraternal societies of Honolulu deem it a duty to sound a note of warning to their brethren in the hope that much suffering and disappointment may be averted.

To that end Hawaiian Lodge No. 21, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, have appointed the undersigned as a committee to communicate with the Masonic grand lodges, respectfully petitioning them to advise the brethren of their jurisdiction through their local lodges of the present state of affairs at the islands, and warn them that there is little or no opportunity for those who, being unemployed, are seeking a livelihood. For mechanics who are skilled workmen there is occasional demand. But there is no certainty of continual work, as the resident master workmen as a rule are equal to all requirements.

For clerical work, bookkeepers, shopmen, stenographers, typewriters, etc., both male and female, the supply for the past two years has been greatly in excess of the demand, and for unskilled labor neither climate or pay is adapted to the white man. Outside of Honolulu and Hilo there are really no towns or villages, unless plantation camps may be classed as such.

In the professions—medical, dental, and law—we have been more than overcrowded for several months before annexation took place, and dozens have come here only to meet with disappointment, and some with distress, and happy when assisted to their homes.

This fraternal warning is by no means intended to dissuade the brethren from visiting the islands and settling here should they find the opportunity. The mechanic, the merchant, and the professional man who has the means and the leisure will find much to interest him, and perhaps in due time the opportunity to engage in his calling, and settle here, and will be cordially welcome. The hotels are good, the cost of living not much more than in San Francisco, upon which we depend for most of our food luxuries and many of our ordinary food supplies.

But we are separated from the nearest Pacific coast port by over 2,100 miles of deep-sea water, and the man coming to our port without means and unable to obtain employment would soon find himself stranded in a country from which he could not return on foot, a distressed stranger in a strange land.

J. A. HASSINGER, P. M.
M. E. CROSSMAN, P. M.
ALEX. MACKINTOSH, P. M.

HONOLULU, September 13, 1898.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offered an amendment to the resolution annexing Hawaii embodying the repeal the contract-labor law. That amendment was voted down in this Senate. We have waited eight months, and here is the first effort to repeal the contract-labor law. We have tried to pass this bill for days, but its consideration has been objected to by one of the commissioners who went to Hawaii to frame laws for the government of that unfortunate and unhappy country.

We find, then, this situation: The contract laborer is filling the place of the day laborer; the sugar planters are bringing in their help at the rate of 3,000 a month; and now it is proposed that they shall be permitted to continue to import slaves until Congress meets again.

No American free laborers have gone there since annexation, and those who had gone there before have been unable to find employment, while 10,400 Asiatics have been brought in, and yet the Administration, representing the Republican party, the party that owes its being to its protest against slavery, is responsible for this condition of affairs, and has refused to furnish legislation for the government of that Territory.

They have refused to repeal the slave-labor laws of Hawaii. What would Abraham Lincoln, Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, or Charles Sumner say if they were asked to indorse this policy? Yet this is the Republicanism of to-day. If living, would they be Republicans? And the commissioners sent there have blocked this legislation in the interest of the sugar planters, who want to secure slave labor to work their plantations, while they are selling their sugar to the American people and paying no duty upon it, resulting in a profit to them in remitted duties alone of $10,000,000 a year.

Are the agents of the sugar planters in this body? Does not the constant and earnest effort of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to prevent the passage of this bill indicate that they are?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, early in January I introduced a bill similar to the one now pending. It was referred to the Committee on Immigration, who took it up and duly considered it. A short time subsequently a like bill was introduced into the House of Representatives, passed that body, came to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I have the honor to be a member. It was duly considered by that committee, and referred to the Committee on Immigration. That committee took the House bill, amended it, and it has been upon our Calendar for several weeks.

I really feel greatly disappointed and I believe it will be against the best interests of the people of this country if this bill should fail to become a law. There is no reason why the people of any Territory of the United States or any State in the Union should be exempt from the provisions of the law which provides that no contract laborer can come into the United States. As a matter of fact, the people of Hawaii are to-day importing into those islands thousands and thousands of Japanese peons and other servile laborers, for whose labor they are contracting for one-half, aye, for one-third, of what the beet-sugar raisers of California and Nebraska and the cane-sugar raisers of Louisiana are paying for their labor.

Early in January I addressed a communication to Mr. Powderly, Commissioner-General of Immigration, and I send that communication to the desk and ask that it may be read, for the information of the Senate.

I trust when this question is considered, even in this closing hour of this Fifty-fifth Congress, that we shall act upon it, and that the bill may yet become a law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER-GENERAL OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, for your information, copy of a report from William M. Rice, commissioner, in regard to the efforts being made to anticipate the extension of our immigration laws to the Hawaiian Islands.

In addition to the facts stated therein, the Bureau has recently received information of a confidential nature to the effect that 250 Italians have been engaged to perform agricultural labor in said islands.

Respectfully, yours,

T. V. POWDERLY,
Commissioner-General.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate.

YOKOHAMA, JAPAN, December 19, 1898.

SIR: I beg to inform you that during a few hours' stay at Honolulu I had an interview with Mr. Taylor, the Hawaiian commissioner of immigration, and learned from him that the board under which he acts has approved order for 6,000 Japanese coolies for the current year, which are being filled by the several Japanese immigration companies. I am informed here at the consulate that in view of the probable application of the immigration laws of the United States to Hawaii contract laborers are being rushed to the islands as fast as they can be secured.

In view of my understanding that it is expected that this jurisdiction of the United States over the islands would be completed by July 1, 1899, it occurred to me that this information might be interesting to you.

Respectfully, yours,

W. M. RICE, Commissioner.

COMMISSIONER-GENERAL OF IMMIGRATION,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill was objected to in order that the senior Senator from Alabama might come to the Senate before it was taken up. I ask the Senator if he will not waive his objection and let the bill pass?

Mr. MORGAN. How did the bill get before the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. It was taken up on motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was taken up on motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS].

Mr. MORGAN. Has it been voted up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been voted up. The Senate voted to proceed to the consideration of the bill after objection was made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What is the Senator's motion? It could not be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The motion appears to be lost.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. The motion is not debatable, but I wish to be permitted to say that there are the nominations of one or two judges that ought to be considered by the Senate, if possible, before we adjourn. I hope the motion will prevail for a few moments at any rate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. They will not be acted on if we have an executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I desire to state that I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. As he is absent, I shall have to withhold my vote. I will vote anyway, I believe. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], and the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. The junior Senator from Rhode Island will stand paired with the junior Senator from Georgia, and the votes of the senior Senator from Georgia and myself can stand.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 22; as follows:

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock m., Saturday, March 4). Senators, in a few moments the Fifty-fifth Congress will pass into history. It has been a Congress distinguished beyond most other Congresses for remarkable achievements. During its life, unlike any other session in the history of our country, this Congress has witnessed the inception, prosecution, and conclusion of a war with a foreign power, undertaken in the interest of humanity and conspicuous for the brilliant deeds of the Army and the Navy, by whose valor an imperial domain has been added to our possessions and millions of people to our population.

But not only has this Congress been a war Congress; it will always be memorable as a Congress of peace, and in securing it this body has exercised its constitutional function as a part of the treaty and peace making power in a way to command the approval of the country.

These facts alone would have made this Congress eminent in the long line of our National Legislatures; but for other acts and results, not to be enumerated at this time, the Fifty-fifth Congress has likewise been notable, and now, its constitutional life ended, it becomes a part of our national history and leaves to its successors for settlement many problems that will be perplexing, important, and of the very highest concern to our people.

We feel assured, however, and the American people may well feel assured, that future Congresses will meet these grave questions with wisdom and patriotism, and solve them soundly and righteously. To doubt it is to doubt the true American spirit and to lack confidence in the strength of our political institutions. I have faith in both.

The hour of adjournment is now at hand. For the unfailing courtesy and unvarying cordiality which have characterized the attitude of the Senate toward me as its presiding officer I am profoundly grateful, and I can not let this opportunity pass without this public expression of my deep appreciation of kindness received at the hands of each member of the body, and particularly I can not close the Senate without recognition of the efficient services of the officers and reporters of this body, whose efforts have been so faithful and whose duties have been so courteously and diligently performed.

For the Senators who remain and for the Senators who retire from this body I desire to convey my thanks for the kindly sentiments so often expressed, and it only remains for me now, in the exercise of the duty devolving upon me, to declare that the Senate stands adjourned without day.

HON. JOHN W. CRANFORD.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I have the sad duty of announcing to this House the death of one of my colleagues, Hon. JOHN W. I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and move their adoption. But, Mr. Speaker, before the reading, permit me to say that owing to the fact that this Congress must adjourn today, it would be impossible for the House to adopt, and I do not propose to ask it to adopt, the further resolution usually agreed to in cases of this kind, that the House stand adjourned out of respect to the memory of the deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. JOHN W. CRANFORD, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That a committee of eleven members of the House, with such members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral at Sulphur Springs, Tex., and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were adopted.

O, Thou Infinite and Eternal Spirit, through whose divine care and gracious providence we have been brought as individuals and as a nation to the present hour, we bless Thee for all the manifestations of Thy love and care, and fervently pray for a continuation of the same, that we may unfold and develop all the powers within us here in this life that we may be prepared for whatever awaits us in the great beyond.

Again we are admonished by the death of two of the members of this House within the present week of the uncertainty of this life and that we should be prepared for the transition which awaits us all.

DISCUSSION OF TREASURY AND FINANCES.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to renew my request to occupy one hour—not to interfere with privileged questions and reports—at such time as may be convenient, twenty minutes of which I propose to yield to those gentlemen who may desire to be heard in reply, and with the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD, upon the question which I suggested yesterday—the history and present condition, etc., of the reform of our Treasury, banking and currency. I have spoken to all the gentlemen who objected, and I think there is no objection this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, we may as well not have any misunderstanding about this matter. I shall not object either to the time being given to the gentleman from Massachusetts or to the printing in the RECORD of any remarks that he may see fit to publish. I simply say, in behalf of myself and others, that we shall throw ourselves upon the generosity of the House, and if occasion demands that a reply be made, we shall ask an equal time. With that understanding and with this announcement distinctly made, there will be no objection on my part, for I neither fear nor invite criticism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to ask whether the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield me fifteen minutes?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know how this time is to be used. I might want some of it myself. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

PENAL CODE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to House bill 8571, known as the Alaska penal code, and that we agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

Mr. BAILEY. Pending the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARNER], I want to ask him whether this bill, upon which a conference is now requested, goes any further or does any more than simply to reenact the laws which now exist in Alaska?

Mr. WARNER. It goes this much further: It provides a high-licence law for the Territory—

Mr. BAILEY. Is that the only change?

Mr. WARNER. That is the only one that I remember, except that there is a provision adopting a general license law for various branches of business.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not what I am trying to get at. Is it not true that under the provisions of this bill, with the three district courts it creates or which exist in Alaska, a man can be indicted, for instance, within 20 miles of where the offense is committed or where he resides and be taken five or six hundred miles to another part of the Territory for trial?

Mr. WARNER. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that this bill does not change the judiciary system at all.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman from Texas is referring to another bill.

Mr. WARNER. Yes. This will not change the judicial system. There is a bill pending providing for three judges, but this is a different measure.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I do not object.

Mr. MADDOX. That is an entirely different bill from the one to which the gentleman from Texas refers.

Mr. BAILEY. I make no objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the motion of Mr. WARNER was considered, and agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WARNER, Mr. GIBSON, and Mr. MADDOX as conferees on the part of the House.

RETURN, FREE OF DUTY, OF CERTAIN EXPORTED ARTICLES.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7271) to allow the return, free of duty, of certain articles exported from the United States for exposition purposes, approved May 18, 1898, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agrees to the same as follows: In line 11, after the word "act," insert: "Provided, however, That the provision of this amendment shall apply only in such cases as those of foreign-born animals taken abroad, and inventories of which are filed, prior to their leaving the country, with the collector of customs at the port of their departure."

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 2, and added a new section to the bill, as follows:

"That on and after the passage of this act wheat imported by actual farmers, residents of the United States, for use by them, respectively, as seed on their own lands in the United States, and not for sale, shall be free of customs duty under special regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That not more than 500 bushels of wheat shall be imported under this act by any one person during any one year."

SERENO PAYNE,

J. P. DOLLIVER,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. C. BURROWS,

O. H. PLATT,

H. CHILTON,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 7271 make the following statement:

The Senate entered a proviso to the bill at the end thereof, as follows:

"Provided, however, That the provision of this amendment shall apply only in such cases as those of foreign-born animals taken abroad, and inventories of which are filed prior to their leaving the country with the collector of customs at the port of their departure."

The managers on the part of the House recede from their disagreement to this amendment.

The Senate also added an amendment, as section 2, to the bill, providing for the free importation of seed wheat in quantities not to exceed 500 bushels by any one person in any one year. The managers on the part of the Senate recede from this amendment.

SERENO E. PAYNE,

J. P. DOLLIVER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the general object of this bill to which the report refers?

Mr. PAYNE. It is a bill to enable the importers and proprietors of menageries, circuses, and exhibitions of that character, containing domestic or foreign wild animals, to be permitted to return them free of duty to the United States. The House passed the bill, as the gentleman will remember, but the Senate put a restriction on the reimportation, requiring that inventories should be filed with the collector of customs at the port of departure prior to their leaving the country.

A MEMBER. What is the object of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the great object of the bill is to get back into this country, for the education and edification of the youth of the country, Barnum's menagerie and circus. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is this what is known as the nightingale bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. If it brings in any more wild animals, perhaps we ought to object to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTER. Does this include the reindeer imported for the benefit of the starving miners in Alaska?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this does not refer to Alaska at all. I ask the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same; and the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID H. MERCER,

J. D. HICKS,

J. H. BANKHEAD,

Managers on the part of the House.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,

J. LEE MANTLE,

E. MURPHY, JR.,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to House amendment numbered 1, and agrees to the same, the effect of which is to provide room in said building for the Weather Bureau.

The House recedes from its amendment numbered 2, the effect of which is to increase the amount authorized by the act for the purchase of additional ground and the construction of said building from $2,500,000 to $2,500,000.

DAVID H. MERCER,

J. D. HICKS,

J. H. BANKHEAD,

Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MONUMENT TO SAMUEL HAHNEMANN.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate joint resolution 48, granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted the Hahnemann monument committee of the American Institute of Homeopathy to erect a monument in honor of Samuel Hahnemann in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., other than the Capitol or Library Grounds, as shall be designated by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, and the chairman of the monument committee; and the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the building of a foundation upon which to place said monument; said monument to be presented to the people of the United States by the American Institute of Homeopathy, kindred associations, and citizens.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a second on that.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. DALZELL, a second was considered as ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution is identical in terms, with a single exception, with one that was passed in the last Congress, but which went to the President too late to receive his signature. The difference between this resolution and that consists only in the fact that in this resolution the Chief of Engineers is designated as one of the parties who shall select the site, whereas in the former resolution the party in charge of the Library building was so designated, and he was so designated because General Casey in his lifetime was an enthusiastic advocate of the placing of this monument upon the Library ground.

The members of the Senate committee are opposed to putting any monuments of any kind in the Library grounds. Hence the change in the resolution.

Now, the ground upon which it seems to me this joint resolution ought to pass is a double one. In the first place, as a work of art this monument is finer by far than anything of the kind in the national capital. It has passed the scrutiny of a committee of sculptors and a committee of architects of the United States. It has been secured at a cost of $75,000, and it is a complete monument in itself. No money is asked for the pedestal. The pedestal accompanies the monument, and all that is asked for is such an appropriation as will build the foundation. It may be a few hundred dollars, it may be a thousand dollars; it can not exceed $4,000. I have here at my desk some pictures that will give members of the House, if they desire, a conception of the character of this monument.

In the second place, I put it upon the ground that the subject of the monument is one who is worthy to be honored in the national capital. In a country like ours, made up of citizens representing every clime and race, it is entirely appropriate that men of genius of whatever nationality shall be recognized, and the great mass of the homeopathic following in this country who have subscribed this immense amount of money, $75,000, are certainly entitled to so much space upon the public grounds of the national capital as will afford an opportunity to place a monument there. I can not for the life of me see how there can be any objection to this proposition.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, to me the objection to this is twofold, or rather one objection grows out of the other. I very seriously doubt if either in the grounds of the Capitol or in the Capitol itself there should be placed the statue or the picture of any person who has not been connected with the service of the Government. It seems to me that that is the true line of distinction, and when you go outside of it and admit to this privilege men of the various professions and pursuits in life, you must sooner or later involve yourselves in the controversies between the rival schools of medicine and law and theology, and those other pursuits which, though useful, are still not connected with the Government.

It seems to me that this Capitol and these grounds, dedicated as they are to the great purposes of the Government, ought to be reserved in all respects for those who have served and those who are to serve the people in a chosen capacity. If that be true, then it certainly follows that the Government ought not to appropriate money for such a purpose. I believe if these gentlemen came bearing this as a gift, and asking no dollar from the public Treasury, that they ought not to be permitted to place in the grounds or in the building the representation, either in marble or on canvas, of men who have had no connection with the Government.

Mr. Speaker, this, in brief, is my objection. Now I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from Texas makes it unnecessary to add anything else to what may be said in opposition to this bill. He has stated the whole "law and gospel," so far as it relates to the proposition now pending. Up to this time the Government of the United States has never appropriated a dollar, as I remember, for the foundation of any such monument.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. DOCKERY. If so, it ought not to have been done. Congress should not appropriate for any monument to a citizen, I care not how distinguished, unless that citizen was connected in some way with the civil or military service of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Texas stated the correct policy. If I remember aright, the amount asked for is larger than ever asked for a like purpose.

Mr. DALZELL. No.

Mr. DOCKERY. And as I recall it—and the gentleman from Iowa is before me, and if I am mistaken can correct me—we appropriated $2,500 for the pedestal of the Sherman monument.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it was more than that.

Mr. DOCKERY. My recollection is that we appropriated $2,500 for the Sherman monument, and also $2,500 for the pedestal of the Hancock monument.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have just come in, and I have not got my mind on the matter before the House, but I am under the impression that it was $10,000 in each case.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think I am right; but that is not material. This appropriation is for a foundation for a monument. Now, then, if it be proper at all to pass the bill, certainly the generous contributors to the fund that has been raised to build this monument should complete the entire work, and not ask the Government to donate $4,000 for the foundation. But I do not rest my opposition on the appropriation asked, although I think it is unwarranted. It is against the policy I protest. If we are to enter upon the work of recognizing distinguished citizens in this way, who have not been connected with the public service, then, as the gentleman from Texas stated, you enter the domain of controversy. If a great homeopathist is to be recognized by a contribution for a pedestal for a monument of Samuel Hahnemann, then an allopathist should be recognized in an appropriation for a monument for Dr. S. D. Gross, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. It has been.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). Or some other allopathist. Not at the public expense.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; the money for the foundation was furnished by Congress, and the monument stands in the public grounds of the Medical Museum.

Mr. DOCKERY. At the expense of the Government?

Mr. DALZELL. The pedestal was furnished at the expense of the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a fact that has come to my knowledge for the first time. That fact only emphasizes and strengthens the opposition to this bill. It inaugurates a bad practice, and if you follow the vicious precedent the result will be that other societies will be clamoring for like recognition for other distinguished citizens. This bill ought to be voted down, and I hope it will be. I reserve the balance of the time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question, and that is, if the monument to Dr. Gross was erected to him, not because he was in any sense the founder of a school of medicine—

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Or because he represents any particular idea in regard to the practice of medicine—

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all; but because he was a genius in his profession.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But because he was one of the surgeons who attended Garfield?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He was a great surgeon.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield a minute or two to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, Congress is the common council for the District of Columbia, the nation's capital, so that in this matter we have full and complete power in the premises. About our beautiful parks are many statues of the great heroic dead. Most of them for those whose military service and whose memory dwell in the hearts of the people. Now, there are some here and there who achieved greatness in civil life. There are some here in this Capitol of men who were not in the military service—some who were great in civil life—and while I welcome statues of the men on horseback, if you will allow me that expression, yet I am glad here and there we have a work of this kind that will commemorate the memory of men who were great in civil life, and by virtue of their genius and industry have given benefits to the race. Already the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of a statue of this kind for a man who was great in his profession. That is to be found in the Smithsonian Park.

I do not know as to the schools of medicine, and I do not care about the schools of medicine, but Dr. Hahnemann was a man of genius, and without regard to jealousies in the profession we are all proud of his memory and of his achievements. Now, when citizens, his admirers, give us this work of art and come and ask of the common council of the District that it may have its place somewhere in the public reservation within the District, and only ask, not for a pedestal, but a foundation at a cost not exceeding $4,000, I am glad that they come here and I am glad of the opportunity to vote for it, and think it ought to pass.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that where a donation or gift is about to be made to the nation, and simply a small amount is asked for an appropriation for the building of a foundation, the exact cost of which is not known, but in no event to exceed $4,000, it is wise that a work of art of this character should be accepted. People in civil life who have attained distinction ought to be recognized in the great capital of this nation, and inasmuch as this is a resolution which calls for an appropriation only for the foundation for a work of art which is finished and ready to be delivered, it seems to me it ought to be accepted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. I had some little experience in this Congress in an effort to get through a bill to permit the erection of a statue of a distinguished citizen of the United States, but we were required in that bill to provide that it should not be put on the Capitol grounds or on the Library grounds. Is that provision in this joint resolution? I have not been able to get a copy of it.

Mr. DALZELL. This resolution excludes both the Library grounds and the Capitol grounds.

Mr. DOCKERY. Was not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] required to strike out the appropriation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was not by the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield such time as he may want to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, without attempting to discuss this bill, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that I have looked up the records of the Sherman statue, and I find that we appropriated $50,000 for the pedestal and the foundation there. We also appropriated the same sum for the Logan statue.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much time is there remaining to the opposition, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, surely, if the rule that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] laid down with regard to statues to be erected in the city of Washington is not to prevail, there ought to be some rule or limitation to guide us. I think that the rule as laid down by the gentleman from Texas is a sound one. It commends itself to my judgment. But if gentlemen are not willing to limit the statues so as to honor men who have served the Government of the United States, perhaps they are willing to limit such honors to men who have lived in the United States or have been citizens of the United States. We have before us a proposition to erect a statue of a German physician who lived and did his work and died in the country of Saxony, now a part of the German Empire. Until we have erected statues to our own heroes, it does not seem incumbent on us or necessary that we should erect statues to the learned or great of foreign countries.

Whether Dr. Hahnemann was indeed a genius and whether he did discover medical truths that shall be for the healing of mankind is yet a disputed question in his own profession. He is the founder of a peculiar school of medicine. We all know that homeopathy is widely practiced in our country. Others belonging to the old school do not accept Hahnemann's teaching. The dispute between the two systems of medical treatment is earnest, if not bitter. Whatever may be the worth of Hahnemann's work, it is the work of a foreign scientist, not of an American scientist. He never saw our shores, and he never knew anything about our country. Until we have more fully distributed laurel wreaths to our own great men, it seems unnecessary to go into the work of erecting here on the public grounds of our beautiful capital statues to foreign scientists, no matter how great or beneficial their discoveries may have been. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely convinced that a man who has so reduced in size the doses of medicine and who sugar coats the pills is entitled to a monument. [Laughter].

Mr. HANDY. Yes, but ought he not to have a smaller monument? [Laughter].

Mr. SLAYDEN. But I do not believe that this Congress is a competent critic of works of art. Nor do I believe that we ought to authorize the location of this monument here until we are satisfied that it is a work of art; that it will serve as an educator and be a thing of beauty forever. Furthermore, I do not believe that this Congress has in justice or law a right to waste the public money in this way, or rather to expend the public money in this way, until the Government has first made provision to settle the just debts which are due to individual citizens of this country.

It is a matter of knowledge to the House in general, and to nearly every member of the House, that there are claims pending before this Congress—claims which have been pending for a large number of years—the justice of which is not questioned, but payment of which has been deferred until the claimants are dying of old age and in poverty. It seems to me that these claims ought to be settled, these just debts of the Government should be paid, before we go into this matter of erecting monuments to the memory of men who moved and lived and had their being in countries far distant from here and whose monuments are already erected in the hearts of their followers. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to use some of the time on his side.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know anybody who wants to speak over here. I have eleven minutes. I do not wish to occupy more than two.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am willing that the vote be taken without further debate.

Mr. DALZELL. So am I.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell the House what this gentleman has done for medical science that justifies the erection of this monument to his memory? I have read his works on medicine, and I would like to know what benefit has accrued to the world from the doctrine of similia similibus curantur which he undertook to establish.

Mr. DALZELL. I will answer the gentleman in the language of Sir John Forbes, physician in ordinary to the Queen, and who belongs to the same school of medicine that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLARDY] belongs to. This distinguished medical authority says:

No careful observer of his actions or candid reader of his writings can hesitate for a moment to admit that he was a very extraordinary man, one whose name will descend to posterity as the exclusive excoordinator and founder of an original system of medicine, the remote, if not the immediate, cause of more important fundamental changes in the practice of the healing art than have resulted from any promulgated since the days of Galen himself. He was undoubtedly a man of genius and a scholar; a man of indefatigable industry and dauntless energy.

I will say further to the gentleman from Kentucky that Hahnemann was not only one of the greatest scholars of his time, but one of the greatest scholars of all time.

Mr. CLARDY. That may be true; but the gentleman has not answered my question as to what this man did for the benefit of the world as a medical authority, as the establisher of a medical system. If the gentleman will allow me, I will tell him the real benefit which has accrued to the world from the Hahnemann system. It has, in my judgment, very clearly demonstrated the fact that it is very largely the "medicatrix natura" which cures disease, and not the drugs they take. And this conviction has allowed a great many people to die a natural death. Still I hardly think even this great benefit entitled him to a monument.

Mr. DALZELL. I have answered the gentleman's question in the language of one of the most distinguished English physicians. This monument is not proposed here to a distinguished citizen or merely to the founder of a school of medicine, but to a man of genius, who belongs neither to place or time, but to the world, and if there were no other reason for the erection of this monument, a sufficient reason would be found in the fact that it ought to be placed in the public gaze as an exposition of what American genius is capable of in the way of sculpture. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 62, noes 73.

JOHN CLYDE SULLIVAN.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill (S. 1840) for the relief of John Clyde Sullivan was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to reappoint John Clyde Sullivan a paymaster in the Navy with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander at the foot of the list of paymasters having the relative rank of lieutenant-commander.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand, this is the case of a paymaster who was tried by court-martial and dismissed, but to whom, as the Treasury Department afterwards found, the Government was really indebted.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. And this is the second or third unanimous report that has been made in favor of the bill?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, sir; it has been passed twice by the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe, Mr. Speaker (if this is the case which I have in my mind), that the finding of the court-martial in pursuance of which this man was dismissed from the service was a gross injustice and that the bill ought to be passed. I make no objection.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAYTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

VICTOR VIFQUAIN.

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 5090) to authorize Victor Vifquain, colonel Third Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, to accept the decoration of the "Order of the Double Dragon" from the Emperor of China was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Victor Vifquain, colonel Third Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the Emperor of China the decoration of the Order of the Double Dragon, in recognition of the valuable services rendered by him to the Chinese residents of the Republic of Colombia during his term of office as consul-general at Panama.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MAJ. GEN. JOHN M. SCHOFIELD.

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4933) to authorize John M. Schofield, major-general, United States Army, to accept a testimonial from the President of the Republic of France.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John M. Schofield, major-general, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the President of the Republic of France the cross of the commander of the National Order of the Legion of Honor.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIEUT. COMMANDER RAYMOND P. RODGERS.

Mr. HITT. I want to ask present action on the bill (S. 3640) authorizing Lieut. Commander Raymond P. Rodgers, United States Navy, to accept a decoration of the cross of the Legion of Honor from the Republic of France.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lieut. Commander Raymond P. Rodgers, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a decoration of the cross of the Legion of Honor, conferred upon him by the President of the French Republic, in June, 1897, while on duty at Paris as naval attaché to the United States embassy there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIG. GEN. A. E. BATES.

Mr. HITT. I also ask consent to consider the bill (S. 5050) to authorize A. E. Bates, brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, to accept the decoration of "The Legion of Honor" from the President of the French Republic.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That A. E. Bates, brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the President of the French Republic the decoration of "The Legion of Honor" awarded at the conclusion of the Grand Manœuvres at Moulins, France, in September, A. D. 1897.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered and was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JOHN R. WILLIAMS.

Mr. HITT. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker—this being the last of the bills of this character—for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3712) to authorize John R. Williams, first lieutenant, Third Artillery, United States Army, to accept the decoration of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor from the President of the French Republic.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John R. Williams, first lieutenant, Third Artillery, United States Army, military attaché to the legation of the United States at Berne, Switzerland, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the President of the French Republic the decoration of the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, awarded to him at the conclusion of the grand manœuvres in northern France last fall.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was considered and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ROBERT COATES.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That Robert Coates, now employed in the cloak rooms of the House, shall be retained on the annual rolls of the Doorkeeper at the compensation he is now receiving, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Texas?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

JAMES GEISSINGER.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5758) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James Geissinger. This bill is on the Speaker's table, and I ask consent to concur in the Senate amendment which has been made to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to consider the Senate amendment to the bill the title of which has been stated.

There being no objection, the Senate amendment was considered, and agreed to.

B. F. PARLETT.

Mr. BARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11577) for the relief of B. F. Parlett, collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of B. F. Parlett, the collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, with the sum of $6,077.70, the same being the net value of certain beer stamps received by the collector from the Eigenbrot Brewing Company, Baltimore, Md., in exchange under the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 13, 1898, and which stamps were stolen from the custody of said Parlett in the city of Baltimore, Md., on the 15th day of July, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know something about this matter.

Mr. BARBER. The report of the committee shows fully the circumstances of the case.

Mr. CANNON. Perhaps the gentleman will save time if he will permit me to ask him one or two questions. Are these for stamps that were furnished him and lost?

Mr. BARBER. These were stamps returned by the brewer. They were the old issue of stamps, and were on their way to Washington to be returned. The Government does not lose a cent by them.

Mr. CANNON. And it does not grow out of an effort to evade the law?

Mr. BARBER. Not at all. I have already stated that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommends that this bill be passed.

Mr. DOCKERY. But what about the law part of it?

Mr. BARBER. It is all embodied in the report, I would state to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think we had better have the report read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. Yost) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11577) for the relief of B. F. Parlett, collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass:

The Treasury Department recommends the passage of this bill for the reasons fully set forth in the affidavits submitted herewith.

The letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1899.

SIR: Replying to your letter of this date inclosing copy of a bill (H. R. 11577) for the relief of B. F. Parlett, collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, and asking my recommendation thereon, I have the honor to advise you that, after careful examination of the facts upon which this claim for relief is based, and being satisfied with the merits of the case, I recommend the passage of said bill for relief.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

N. B. SCOTT, Commissioner.

Hon. JACOB YOST, M. C.,
Chairman No. 5 Subcommittee on Claims,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the following affidavits:

BALTIMORE, MD., July 15, 1898.

The act of June 13, 1898, provides that the tax on fermented liquors should be increased from $1 per barrel to $2 per barrel.

It also provides that stamps in the possession of brewers at the time the increase of tax went into effect might be exchanged for new or imprinted stamps representing the new rate of tax, upon presentation to collectors of internal revenue, and the following instructions in regard to such exchanges were promulgated by the honorable Commissioner of Internal Revenue by letter dated June 9, 1898, viz:

"For the guidance of collectors and others interested, the following instructions in regard to such exchanges of stamps are hereby promulgated: 'Brewers will prepare on Form 33, to be obtained from the collectors of their district, a claim for the redemption, by exchange, of all stamps representing the old rate of tax in their possession at the time the new rate of tax goes into effect.'

"Each claim must be accompanied by a schedule of the stamps presented for exchange, showing in columns, under appropriate headings, the number of each denomination, date of purchase, discount allowed at time of purchase, if any, and amount paid.

"Upon receipt of stamps for exchange, with a claim and schedule as above provided, accompanied, where necessary, by money to make good deficiency in stamps returned, collectors will, as soon as practicable thereafter, have the stamps counted, and if found correct note the fact on the schedule. The dates of purchase, discount allowed, and amount paid should then be verified by the records in the collector's office.

"If these are found to be correct, the claim should be certified on page 2 by the collector and new stamps of net value equal to the net value of those returned and of cash transmitted, if any, therewith should be forwarded to the purchaser. The stamps returned for exchange, together with the claim and schedule furnished by the brewer, should then be forwarded to this office by registered mail. The stamps of each person must be separately returned."

In accordance with the provisions of the law, and in conformity with the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Eigenbrot Brewing Company, brewers in Baltimore City, on June 20, 1898, presented for redemption by exchange the following beer stamps, viz:

	Number.	Value.
Barrels .....	100	$100.00
Halves .....	927	463.50
Quarters .....	23,749	5,937.25
Eighths .....	178	22.25
Total value .....		6,523.00
Upon the above quarter-barrel stamps a discount of 7 per cent had been allowed at the time of purchase. This amount being deducted .....		445.30
Made the net value .....		6,077.70

These stamps were received by William H. Bishop, Jr., a clerk in this office having charge of all claims, and were by him placed in the vault of the office until such time as he could have time to properly count them and make the exchange desired.

On July 15, 1898, Deputy Collector H. J. Halbert, who was assisting the claim clerk, counted the stamps, and, finding them correct as stated, delivered to the Eigenbrot Brewing Company stamps of the new issue of an even value. He then delivered the old stamps, with schedules, claim, etc., to Samuel Fletcher, the messenger of the office, who, in accordance with the instructions heretofore given, made them into one package, addressed them to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and took them, with three smaller packages, to the registry division of the Baltimore post-office, in the same building, for the purpose of sending them by registered mail to the Department at Washington. The public room in the registry division is a small one, about 10 feet square. The said Fletcher, having four packages to register, placed the heavier one on a desk about 3 feet away from the counter while registering the smaller ones. Three of the packages were properly registered and receipted for and Fletcher turned to the desk for the fourth (the Eigenbrot package), but it had disappeared.

The package was quite a bulky one, probably 18 or 20 inches square and about 9 or 10 inches thick. Fletcher was at all times within easy reaching distance of the package, and, owing to its nearness to him and the small dimensions of the room, it must have been abstracted by a very expert thief.

The disappearance was at once reported to the collector, who immediately placed the matter in the hands of the detective department of the Baltimore city police department, and also dispatched special officers to each brewery in the city to warn them not to purchase the stamps and to cause the arrest of anyone who might offer them for sale.

Messrs. Joseph A. Abbott and William E. Carr, clerks in the registry division of the Baltimore post-office, both remembered distinctly seeing the said Fletcher enter their office with the package of stamps referred to and placing it upon the desk while handing in the smaller ones through the registry window.

Respectfully submitted,

BENJAMIN F. PARLETT,
Collector Internal Revenue, District of Maryland.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public of the State of Maryland in and for the city of Baltimore, on this day, February 23, 1899.

I. A. BARBER, member of Congress, on January 13, 1899, I, Wm. H. I further swear that I am thoroughly familiar with the facts as set forth in the annexed statement, and that they are true, and that the lost stamps in question have never been returned to the collector's office.

I further swear that upon entering the registry division, which is a small apartment, I placed the heavier package containing the redeemed stamps of the Eigenbrot Brewing Company on a high standing desk in full view of the registry clerks while presenting the three smaller packages for registration at the receiving clerk's window, a little more than an arm's length from the desk; that when the three smaller packages had been properly registered and receipted for, I turned to the desk for the package of beer stamps, but it was not there, which fact I immediately reported to the collector of internal revenue.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand from the reading of this report, these stamps have a money value?

Mr. BARBER. They have no money value.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand from the gentleman that they are of the old issue, before the tax was increased on beer under the war revenue act, and that they can not be used under the new tax law.

Mr. BARBER. The only way in which they can be used is by passing into the hands of a brewer and being brought back to the collector of internal revenue for redemption in that way. But a debit and credit account is kept by the collector of internal revenue with every brewer, and in case anyone should attempt to do that, the Department would discover that he had returned more than he had ever bought, so that the deception would be found out and he would be heavily punished. This bill is simply to square the debit and credit account of the collector with the Government.

The charge will stand forever against his bond unless relief is afforded by Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. As a matter of fact, the package was never receipted for by the registry clerk, was it?

Mr. BARBER. No; it was in the act of delivery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARBER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BENJAMIN F. VENNUM.

Mr. DOVENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 718) for the relief of Benjamin F. Vennum, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va., which bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Benjamin F. Vennum, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va., who served under the name of Franklin Vennum in Company D of the Third Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry in the Mexican war, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from that regiment on the 17th day of August, 1846, and that the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge as of said date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOVENER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LAND TITLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6359) to quiet land titles in the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. JENKINS. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to hear an explanation of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa desires an explanation.

Mr. JENKINS. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that that bill has been discussed in the House here for some time and thoroughly explained, at least two hours being taken up in explaining the bill. The amendments have been placed upon it by the Senate in order to render it a little more certain.

Mr. LACEY. This is for the extension of a patent, is it not?

Mr. JENKINS. No; it is to give the people in the city of Washington paper title to land where they are otherwise entitled to it.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is satisfied with the explanation.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

NEW DEPOT FOR SIXTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3293) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for a new depot for the Sixth light-house district, and to erect the necessary buildings, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this requires unanimous consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move to concur, with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will have consideration by a committee before concurrence is ordered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri object?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I think the committee ought to examine that matter, as it is a new departure. I suggest to the gentleman that he get the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to examine it. It has not been the custom to incorporate appropriations in these bills.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The situation is this: The House bill appropriated a certain amount, and the Senate have increased it, and I have an amendment here—

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from South Carolina is mistaken in regard to that; that there was no appropriation in the House bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The House fixed the amount.

The SPEAKER. There was a limitation of cost, but no appropriation. The Senate have put in an appropriation, and the Chair, without undertaking to make a permanent ruling on that subject, is impressed with the idea that it is within the purview of our rules. Therefore unanimous consent is required to take this up.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask unanimous consent, stating that I propose to offer an amendment with a view to limiting the cost.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take the bill up.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman can make an explanation—

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand a moment ago what this bill was, and I would like the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw its consideration until the gentleman from Illinois can be consulted. I do not care to state the reason why.

Mr. DOCKERY. There he is.

Mr. MOODY. I think the gentleman had better take a reference of the bill or let it lie on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DOCKERY. Have the committee passed on the Senate bill?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I have the consent of the chairman of the committee to call up this bill. It has been lying on the Speaker's table for several days.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I object. That settles it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

CHARLES SWEET.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 914) removing the charge of desertion against Charles Sweet, with a Senate amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ROBERT PERSLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1773) granting a pension to Robert Persley, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM HAZELBECK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8854) to correct the military record of William Hazelbeck, of Portsmouth, Ohio, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SYLVESTER F. HILDEBRAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8607) to correct the military record of Sylvester F. Hildebrand, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment. It is simply a little correction.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN DINSBEER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8119) granting an honorable discharge to John Dinsbeer, late second lieutenant in Company C, First Regiment of Missouri State Militia, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment. It is an attempt to do the same thing as the House attempted.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANK DUNN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2419) for the relief of Frank Dunn, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. HENDERSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8506) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John P. Henderson and to grant him an honorable discharge, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ANSON W. GILLET.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6062) for the relief of Anson W. Gillett, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LAWRENCE RESSLER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5046) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Lawrence Ressler, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment. It simply fixes the date.

The motion was agreed to.

OUTSTANDING CERTIFICATES ISSUED BY THE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Missouri. This is the bill which he requested should continue to lie on the Speaker's table.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9780)—

Mr. DOCKERY. The bill offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have examined that bill, and I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I have no further objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9780) to redeem outstanding certificates issued by the board of public works of the District of Columbia, held by W. D. Williams.

With an amendment of the Senate, which was read.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. Just one word. I am advised by the gentleman in charge of the bill that these claims have been approved by the auditor of the District.

Mr. JENKINS. I can say to the gentleman from Missouri that the auditor of the District called at the room of the Committee on the District of Columbia and went over each and every certificate, and gave it his unqualified approval.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to add to my remarks, for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Missouri, that I hold in my hand the written approval of the auditor of the District for the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], who has unanimous consent to address the House.

[Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy the time only for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. He was talking a bit ago about a committee, composed of certain members of this House, having been appointed to take into consideration the banking and currency question and devise a system of banking and currency to be presented for the legislation of the regular session of the next Congress—a Republican caucus committee. Now, do you expect that the next Congress, on the eve of the next general election, is going to pass any banking and currency legislation at all? For my part I do not.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I want to say that I expect it will result in the certain and sure defeat of the Republican party if it does. There is more dynamite to the square inch in anything connected with the United States Treasury and banking and currency system than any other subject that can be presented for legislation. And the people who are benefited by the legislation to which the gentleman refers are now fooling with free silver, and if you attack this question at all it is certain to swamp the party, and the Speaker of the House knows that that has been my opinion from the first. I was interested in having the committee educated on what should be done—now? No; but what shall be done in the future, when we can be in a position where it will be possible for us to do something.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The point I desire to make, Mr. Speaker, is simply this—

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman—

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Tennessee made his remarks yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts declines to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if banking and currency reform is postponed until the next Congress assembles you will find this Administration and the leading Republican members of this House declaring that it is dangerous to tamper with the currency, that it will influence a certain element at the polls and lead to the defeat of the party, and thus you will find that no action will be taken, and banking and currency legislation will, indeed, be dead.

But if this Administration will do its plain duty to the people of this country, if it will call a special session of Congress, not to give it a hundred thousand men to crush the liberties of an alien people, but to take up the subject of banking and currency reform now, and if, when that session assembles, the Administration will lend its active assistance to the movement, Congress can take up and consider the subject of banking and currency legislation.

It can pass a just measure of reform and put it on the statute books in ample time to vindicate itself before the next general election, for the people will by that time appreciate the benefits and blessings of such legislation. The party will then have done its entire duty to all sections of the country and will have made its calling and election sure when the vote is taken at the polls. I make the point here and now, sir, and I want every banking and currency reformer in this country to understand it, that the President of the United States does not intend to give banking and currency reform a fair show. If he does, let him call, I repeat, a special session of Congress to enter upon the discharge of the work.

Those who believe in banking and currency reform, and their name is legion, have their eyes on the President of the United States in this great emergency. They have heard him declare that he would call a special session if the Army bill was not passed. Now, they ask whether or not a great measure of internal reform is sufficient to command his consideration and his respect.

I saw it stated the other day in the Washington Post that a conference had been held of leading Republican Senators at the White House, at which the President was present, and that they had determined to accept the compromise Army bill, because thereby they would avoid a special session of Congress, and that the idea in avoiding that was that they would avoid the discussion of the money question, and also give to the President of the United States nine months of uninterrupted time during the adjournment of Congress in which to solve the question of expansion in the Philippines.

And yet the President of the United States, sir, told his auditors at Boston, in his banquet address, that the Philippine problem was a question to be settled and determined entirely by the American Congress. Verily, Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States is the embodiment of candor and fair dealing in his statements to the American people!

[Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. For the purpose of securing bimetalism by an arrangement with other nations. This charge that the gentleman makes against me is true.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman can not reserve his time after he has taken his seat without reserving it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The charge that the gentleman from Massachusetts makes against me, I say, is true. In all my career in Congress I have never failed to vote for every measure that was before the House that was demanded by the platform of my party in national convention assembled, except on this particular question.

Now, every man on the floor of the House is familiar with the conditions that led to the introduction of that plank into the platform of the Republican convention that met at St. Louis. It was not expected to accomplish anything. It was known when it was adopted that it was impracticable and that it was not possible for it to be carried into execution, and that even if it was possible to be carried into execution it would be detrimental to the gold standard rather than a benefit to it.

I recognized that fact, and I was not willing to lend my voice and vote in this Chamber to enact a thing which all past experience had shown was impossible of attainment and which subsequent events has clearly demonstrated was impossible to be secured. The bill became a law. The commission was appointed, went to Europe, and failed to secure an international conference or agreement, just as every sensible person knew it would do.

Mr. SULZER. It was a subterfuge to catch votes, was it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is what it was, and as a sincere Republican I repudiated it because I knew the purpose for which it was designed. I opposed the bill, also, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of principle. What, sir, was the primary and principal purpose of the Republican party in constructing the monetary plank in its St. Louis platform? It was to declare for and maintain the single gold standard against silver monometallism and bimetalism, which it was plainly apparent would lead to silver monometallism.

I knew from the experience of my country, the experience of England and of every other nation that had ever tried the experiment, that it was absolutely impossible by arbitrary legislative enactment to have genuine bimetalism in any country where the market value of the metals differed. That was tried in the early history of the United States—it was tried, and failed—and although we had bimetalism by statutory enactment, yet, as a matter of fact, we had silver monometallism.

We subsequently changed the ratio and again failed, there being a difference in the market's ratio, silver going to a premium over gold. England tried it time out of mind, and failing in her efforts, was at last compelled to adopt a single gold standard. I knew very well, Mr. Speaker, that the legislative edict of the whole civilized world, even if it could be obtained, would never be able to control or prevail over the immutable laws of trade and commerce. I realized that an international agreement for bimetalism, even if it could be obtained, would be the greatest evil that could possibly come to the single gold standard, to which the Republican party was pledged.

In voting as I did I kept the real pledge of the party and put aside that which was only designed to catch votes, and which, had it been carried into execution, would, I again declare, have resulted in silver monometallism instead of genuine bimetalism. The charge which the gentleman from Massachusetts makes against me, mark you, sir, is not that I stood against the single gold standard, but that I stood against that which would have resulted in the silver standard in this country if carried out, and the gentlemen who charged me with a dereliction of party duty in this matter are welcome to all the solace that they can get out of it.

It has been customary to read me out of the Republican party of late, Mr. Speaker, by certain gentlemen, because I have been opposed to allowing the gentleman in the White House to commit my party to wrong and oppression. These gentlemen have been active in circulating reports in the press throughout the country that I am not in good standing in my party.

I have never cast, sir, but one Democratic vote in my life. With the exception of that one vote, I have invariably voted for the candidate and principles of the Republican party. I have, ever since my majority, with the possible exception of one campaign, been on the stump in Indiana laboring for the principles of the Republican party, and I have cordially supported every particle of legislation demanded by my party platform that has come before Congress since I have had the honor to occupy a seat in this body.

There has not been a single financial measure, there has not been a single tariff measure, there has not been a single measure looking to the right of free suffrage before the House in all that period that I have not responded to the expectations of the Republican party and stood for it on this floor. I want this thing once and for all distinctly understood, that no amount of mendacity can change a man's real status in this body as marked by the roll calls. I opposed the Spanish war, patriotically upheld the hands of my country when the war was once declared, and have consistently opposed the policy of expansion, which no Republican national convention has every yet demanded.

The reason of all this effort to read me out of the party, Mr. Speaker, is that I have been opposed to the policy of the gentleman in the White House, who is just now writing with his own hand in human blood the saddest and most disgraceful chapter in the history of our country. I have been an outspoken critic of the gentleman who is giving to the nation the antithesis of Henry Clay's famous aphorism, "I would rather be right than be President." I have, as a Republican, sought to call a halt upon the shameful conduct of the man who has done more than all the other Presidents who ever occupied the Presidential chair to impeach the wisdom of the fathers in framing a Constitution which permitted a Chief Magistrate of the Republic to be eligible for a second term.

I have protested against his effort to commit the party to which I belong to the commission of a great wrong; have objected to his loading it down with error and leading it to inevitable defeat by according to the Democratic party the right side of a paramount issue which is destined in the next campaign to take deep hold upon the hearts and the consciences of the people. This is the sum total of my offending. The time will yet come, sir, when supine submission to the unwise and unpatriotic policy of the Chief Executive will not be the test of anyone's Republicanism, however it may be at the present hour.

Mr. BARRETT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will suspend for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Let me finish.

Mr. BARRETT. Is the gentleman from Indiana proceeding by unanimous consent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. No; I am speaking in my own time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is speaking by permission of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The crime I have committed consists in having opposed a gentleman who has given to the country and the world the antithesis of Henry Clay's famous declaration, "I would rather be right than be President." Gentlemen, the time will come in the history of this country—

Mr. BARRETT. I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to yield the remainder of his time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BARRETT. The hour of the gentleman from Massachusetts expired some ten minutes ago.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I did not yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BARRETT. I was very careful to note the time, because my colleague [Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts] had agreed to give me thirty minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. The time occupied by the gentleman from Massachusetts was granted by the House as a compliment to him.

He used all but ten minutes of the hour, and yielded none of his remaining time to anyone.

Several MEMBERS. That is true.

Mr. HENDERSON. Therefore this proceeding is by unanimous consent. I do not make a point of order, but I desire that the facts be understood.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, let me say one thing in conclusion—

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] yielded to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I did not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. If I can be allowed to state—

Mr. EVANS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] is recognized.

DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. EVANS. I now call up from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10253) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been returned from the Senate with amendments. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read the amendments.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. As these amendments would be subject to a point of order, unanimous consent is necessary for their present consideration.

Mr. EVANS. I ask unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

The question being taken, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11712) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library, returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

The amendments were read.

Mr. MERCER. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. It will require unanimous consent to consider the proposition.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate amendments to the bill as just read.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

FOG SIGNAL, SABINE BANK, TEXAS.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I move to suspend the rules and pass, with amendments, the bill (S. 1114) for the establishment of a light and fog signal on or near Sabine Bank, Texas.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a light-house and fog-signal station on or near Sabine Bank, Texas, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

AMENDMENT TO PENSION LAWS.

Mr. RAY of New York. I present a conference report for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4706 of the Revised Statutes of the United States having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:—

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill of the House, and agree to a new amendment, and that the House also agree to the same, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 4706, Title LVII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following additional provisions and provisos, to wit: Provided further, That in case a resident pensioner of the United States shall for a period of over six months desert his lawful wife, she being a woman of good moral character and in necessitous circumstances, or, if he have no lawful wife, shall desert his legitimate minor child or children under 16 years of age or his permanently helpless and dependent child, the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby directed, upon being satisfied by competent evidence of such desertion, to cause one-half of the pension due or to become due said pensioner during the continuance of such desertion to be paid to the wife, or, in case there is no wife, to the legal guardian of the child or children: Provided further, That when a soldier or sailor enters into a State home for soldiers or sailors as an inmate thereof one-half of his pension accruing during his residence therein shall be paid to his wife, she being a woman of good moral character and in necessitous circumstances, or, if there be no wife, then to his child or children under 16 years of age or his permanently helpless and dependent child, unless such wife and children shall also be inmates of the same institution or of some home provided for the wives and children of soldiers and sailors: Provided further, That if any such pensioner is or shall become an inmate of a National Soldiers' Home, one-half of the pension drawn in his behalf or to which he may become entitled during his residence therein shall be paid by the treasurer of that institution of such pensioner's wife, she being in necessitous circumstances and a woman of good moral character, or, if there be no wife, to the legal guardian of the minor child or children or the permanently dependent and helpless child or children of such pensioner, on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions: Provided further, That hereafter no pension under any law of the United States shall be granted, allowed, or paid to the widow of a soldier, sailor, officer, naval or military, marine, marine officer, or any other male person entitled to a pension under any law of the United States unless it shall be proved and established that the marriage of such widow to the soldier, sailor, officer, marine, or other person on account of whose service the pension is asked was duly and legally contracted and entered into prior to the passage of this act, or unless such wife shall have lived and cohabited with such soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death, or unless the marriage shall take place hereafter and prior to or during the military or naval service of the soldier, sailor, officer, marine, or other person on account of whose service the pension is asked or claimed. This proviso shall not apply to or affect the widow of any soldier, sailor, marine, officer, or marine officer, serving or who has served in the war between the United States and the kingdom of Spain.

"In all cases the questions of desertion, entrance into a home, necessitous circumstances, and of good moral character shall be ascertained and determined by the Commissioner of Pensions under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, and the treasurers or governors of the several soldiers' and sailors' homes shall be advised of such action from time to time."

GEO. W. RAY,
GEO. W. STEELE,
EDMUND H. DRIGGS,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The bill is intended to provide for the payment of a part of a soldier's pension to his deserted wife, if a woman of good character and in necessitous circumstances, or to his minor children, if there be no wife, and such children are deserted by the soldier. As originally passed, the bill made no provision for cases where a soldier entered a State or National Soldiers' Home, and made no provision in cases where the wife deserts the soldier.

The effect of the conference report is to provide that where a soldier having a wife and minor children or a permanently helpless child dependent upon him deserts them, and where a soldier drawing a pension enters a Soldiers' Home and his wife or minor children or permanently helpless child is not a member of the same or some other institution for the care of soldiers and sailors, or a soldier drawing a pension enters a National Home, leaving a wife or minor children or a permanently helpless child, that one-half his pension accruing during the time he is an inmate of such Home or during the time of such desertion shall be paid to the wife, or, if there is no wife, then to the minor child or children or the dependent helpless child or children, provided the wife deserted or left outside such institution is in necessitous circumstances; and to further provide that where the wife deserts the soldier husband she is not to draw a pension.

The questions of desertion, entrance into a home, necessitous circumstances, good moral character, etc., are to be determined by the Commissioner of Pensions under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, and the Commissioner of Pensions is also to advise the treasurers and governors of the Soldiers' Home of the action taken by him.

It is highly proper that in cases of desertion or entrance of the soldier into a home, leaving a wife of good moral character in necessitous circumstances or children under 16 years of age or a permanently helpless child, that at least one-half his pension shall go to the wife or child or children, as the case may be. The soldier himself is always well cared for in the Home, and he should not be permitted to be thus provided for at the public expense and draw his full pension while his wife and minor child or children or dependent child is left a charge on the public.

Originally the bill did not provide that the deserted wife must be left in necessitous circumstances, or that the wife must be in necessitous circumstances when the soldier enters a soldiers' or sailors' home, either State or national.

GEO. W. RAY,
GEO. W. STEELE,
EDMUND H. DRIGGS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question, with his consent.

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is there anything in the report of the committee which would deny pensions to the widows of soldiers who may die hereafter?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not unless they desert their husbands.

Mr. RIDGELY. I did not catch exactly the reading of the report. I knew some legislation had been proposed on that question. It does not affect any of these widows, then, except in cases of desertion?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not at all.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska presents a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 710) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the customhouse, in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the erection of a new public building thereon for the accommodation of the Government service in said city, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its amendment to the title.

DAVID H. MERCER,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. P. GORMAN,
E. MURPHY, JR.,

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agrees to the same, the effect of which is to reduce the amount authorized by the purchase of additional ground for a site for said building from $125,000 to $100,000.

The House recedes from its amendment numbered 2, the effect of which is to authorize the construction of a new public building for the accommodation of the Government service in said city at a cost not exceeding the sum of $1,500,000.

The House recedes from its amendment to the title, the effect of which is to harmonize the title with the act as agreed upon in this conference report.

DAVID H. MERCER,
J. D. HICKS,
J. H. BANKHEAD.

Mr. MERCER. I move to agree to the conference report.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman if the effect of this amendment is to add a million and a half more to the public buildings authorized by Congress at this session?

Mr. MERCER. We are passing the Senate bill as it came to us.

Mr. PAYNE. Does it increase the authorization a million and a half?

Mr. MERCER. It increases the action of the House just that much.

Mr. PAYNE. A million and a half over what has already been done; and this is the result of the House consenting to send to conference the three bills where the Senate had put on amendments authorizing an additional building on each of the House bills?

Mr. MERCER. In each instance the Senate made the increase.

Mr. PAYNE. The Senate had made the increase, but the question whether we should consider the amendment at all and send it to the committee came here before the House and required unanimous consent. When that unanimous consent was given, it was given with the understanding that the House conferees should insist that those additional buildings put on to the House bills should be stricken out of the bill in each case. Now here comes the third bill with an agreement to add a building to cost a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. MERCER. The House conferees have been insisting for some time upon that proposition, but have failed to convince the Senate, and in order to save any part of the proposition we were obliged to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would have been better for the conferees of the House to have carried out what was the express understanding in the House, on which unanimous consent was obtained, rather than to give a million and a half more for public buildings at this session of Congress on a bill originally providing for $125,000 for the purchase of additional ground for the building already erected in Baltimore.

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman from New York is mistaken. The only thing that came up with reference to unanimous consent was the Stockton, Cal., bill, and I kept my word with the House and fought it out on the floor. That is the only bill to which the statement of the gentleman applies, and I kept my word.

Mr. PAYNE. Unanimous consent had to be asked in reference to this bill. It could not get to conference without that. Here was an amendment that had to go to the Committee of the Whole, and the bill could not have gotten before the House except by unanimous consent. I understood the same arrangement was made in reference to the other bill for Lockport, N. Y., to which they had added a public building in Pennsylvania, and that these three bills were called up by unanimous consent and were enabled to get into conference because the House expected that the House conferees would insist on the contention of the House to strike out these additional buildings.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Have we any remedy now?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see how we have any remedy except to vote down this report.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us do it.

Mr. PAYNE. And instead of increasing a $125,000 House bill to $1,625,000, I should hope ordinarily—I do not know that I have much hope now, after what we have seen—that the House would disagree to this report and still insist that we have some rights in legislation as well as the Senate.

Mr. FARIS. Why do you not move that this conference report be rejected?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Nebraska has moved to concur. That will bring the question before the House, and I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. MERCER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCINTIRE].

Mr. MCINTIRE. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the objection of the gentleman from New York will not prevail. I want to say to this House that there is not a public building that has been provided for during this discussion that is so much needed as the one proposed to be erected at Baltimore. I want to remind you that that structure has been visited by the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and they have declared—every one of them—that it is a most unfit structure for the Government service.

You will be surprised to know that the building first used for Government business was constructed in 1818, built for hotel purposes. It has become absolutely inadequate for a port that is the third, and in point of fact this year the second, in the United States as regards both imports and exports.

I also desire to remind the House that there seems to be no hesitancy about appropriating a large sum for New York, no scruples about the Cleveland appropriation, and that there is no more asked in this bill than has been provided for Indianapolis, which has been passed without challenge. There is no more embodied in this measure than was asked for Cleveland—in fact, one million less.

I want to further remind you gentlemen, and call the attention of the House to the fact, that Baltimore has had but one appropriation for a public building since 1818. I wish to remind you, furthermore, that in that time there has been but three millions to the credit of Baltimore City in the way of public improvements. I desire to ask your indulgence for just one minute, and then this proposition, so far as I am concerned, will be left to the intelligent judgment of this House. The expenditures for public buildings, as gathered from the Treasury Department, in other cities of the Union shows that New York has had $16,000,000 thus expended.

That is the city represented by the gentleman who now finds fault with this proposition. Philadelphia has had $8,000,000 expended on her public buildings; Boston, $7,925,000; St. Louis, $7,145,000; Cincinnati, $6,000,000; New Orleans, $5,571,000; San Francisco, $4,200,000; Charleston, S. C., $3,729,000. Now comes Baltimore, with a population of over a half a million, with one public building, a post-office, to the credit of the Government. With half a million of people, and being, as I say, the second port in this country, all that has been expended in the way of appropriation there has been $3,729,000.

It is strange that these gentlemen have not seen objections to these buildings that have already been appropriated for, and that they did not manifest this same regard with reference to their own cities. Not one objection, not one thing was said, no charge was made that the Treasury was being looted, as the gentleman from New York would have it in regard to this bill for a custom-house for Baltimore. I ask you now, gentlemen, what you have done for other cities to do for Baltimore, and what I ask you to do will be less than was done, relatively, for any other State in the Union.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAHANY. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is it not his opinion that the Baltimore Federal building is one of the most needed public improvements in the United States?

Mr. MERCER. I will say, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the gentleman from New York, this is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate providing in section 1 for the purchase of part of the site. The present site in Baltimore upon which the custom-house is now situated is in the shape of a letter H. The Government owns all the letter H except one leg. Section 1 provides for the purchase of this one leg of the H.

Mr. PAYNE. At what price?

Mr. MERCER. The Senate bill contained a provision for $125,000. When the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were in Baltimore investigating the present building generally we talked with the merchants and business men, and we learned that it ought to be bought for less than $125,000. The committee therefore cut down this proposition, amended it to $100,000 for the site, and we struck out section 2 of the bill. I am frank to say that the situation in Baltimore is the most serious situation of any city in this country that I have noticed.

Mr. MAHANY. In other words, it is an imperative need that this improvement should be made.

Mr. MERCER. It is a very serious situation. It is really worse than the New York custom-house situation.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, having the whole matter in charge, should report 70 bills and omit this bill to build the Baltimore custom-house?

Mr. MERCER. I did not catch the question.

Mr. PAYNE. Why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should bring in here over 70 bills during the three days, and should call them up one after another and leave out the bill for the Baltimore custom-house, if there is such great necessity for it?

Mr. MERCER. The reason why we struck out section 2 is that we did not think the Government could condemn the additional site and purchase it before the meeting of the next Congress, and we thought it would be time enough after the site was condemned and purchased for the next Congress to authorize the building of the custom-house. We went to the conferees of the Senate, and they insisted, as they have time and again, that the Senate bill as it passed the Senate should be legislated into law, and that is why the House conferees have been compelled to come back and submit this report to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. There was some discussion of this bill before the committee, and I heard it all. I did not get any idea from what the chairman of the committee said that we were to have a new custom-house in Baltimore as the result of that legislation. I heard the debate, and I understood that this was simply to give them a little more land.

Mr. MERCER. That is what I am explaining to the gentleman; that was the action of our committee.

Mr. PAYNE. The House is in this condition: It passes a bill to buy a little more land, costing $100,000, and it comes back from the Senate with a million and a half dollars added to the bill for a new building. The committee come in and ask the House to concur, and we can not get any idea how much money they are expending. A public-building bill comes in here subject to an amendment by the Senate, and unanimous consent is given to consider it, with the assurance that on these bills we shall not agree to the Senate amendment.

They come back here from the conference with a good deal of strength among the members for some reason or other, perhaps for the reason that we should all stand by each other in this matter; but they get a good deal of strength in the House, and one is adopted and another report is made, and the chairman of the committee himself now moves to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate. Now we have the final chapter, of a bill carrying $100,000, and a million and a half dollars is added to it, and the House is asked by the chairman of the committee to concur in that amendment. I would like to inquire if there is anything back that is to come in?

Mr. MERCER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he has ever been on a conference committee in competition with the conferees at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. PAYNE. I have had that honor. Does the gentleman want to pursue the inquiry?

Mr. MERCER. I know it is absolutely necessary that this site should be purchased now; otherwise it will be lost to the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. How long have we had that site that we have now?

Mr. MCINTIRE. Since 1818.

Mr. PAYNE. Almost eighty years; and yet the committee comes in here and says it is absolutely indispensable that we should have this land, and this building there, and we can not wait a moment longer.

Mr. MERCER. I want to say to the gentleman that on one leg of this letter H stands an old building, and people stand ready to purchase the ground, and it is only because of the public spirit that they have been held back in order to give the Government a chance to complete its title to the ground. If the Government does not take advantage of it now, it will lose it forever. That was the reason why I thought it was enough for this Congress to complete its title to the land and let the future Congress take care of the building.

Mr. PAYNE. And yet the gentleman, with that club in his hand, going to the Senate conferees, allowed them to insist upon attaching a million and a half dollars' expenditure to this bill carrying a hundred thousand dollars, when he could have suggested to the Senate conferees if they desired to kill this legislation, they might be responsible for it.

Mr. DALZELL. And when the bill came over to the House the House struck out $25,000 and also the one million and a half of dollars, and the bill went back to the Senate and now comes here again in the shape in which the Senate passed it in the first place?

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman is correct except as to price of site.

Mr. DALZELL. And the proposition is now that the House shall yield to the Senate?

Mr. MERCER. That is the proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. Your committee struck out the million and a half of dollars?

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. And the House itself approved of that action?

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the House ought to stick to its own action.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, if my recollection serves me aright, in the Fifty-fourth Congress a number of public buildings were authorized in exactly the same way that it is proposed to authorize this Federal building—that is, by the House conferees yielding to the Senate demands and the House adopting the conference report.

Now, it seems to me that after millions of dollars have been appropriated for public buildings in small interior towns of little commerce and less industry, it would be an unfair discrimination against the great city of Baltimore to refuse to authorize this appropriation. And I say, furthermore, as a Representative from the State of New York, that we have a selfish interest in this matter, because anything that facilitates the commerce of the Atlantic cities feeds the commerce of New York.

Mr. MERCER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. BARBER].

Mr. BARBER. Mr. Speaker, this whole question resolves itself into this: Does Baltimore City need a new custom-house, or does it not? The proposition as accepted by the House in the first place authorized the purchase of ground. What for? Because Baltimore needed a custom-house building and required ground for that building.

The proposition that comes from the other end of the Capitol is that, Baltimore needing a new custom-house building, we shall go ahead and provide for its erection as well as for purchasing ground. Baltimore, as I have said, needs a custom-house to-day—has needed it for years—and therefore is entitled to the favorable consideration of this House along these lines.

Furthermore, I presume that from a Senatorial standpoint the representatives of the State of Maryland in that body have the same right in regard to her interests and those of Baltimore and are entitled to the same consideration as the members of this Chamber.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I hope this conference report will be adopted. The Senate passed a bill authorizing the appropriation of a million and a half of dollars for the purchase of additional ground for a site in the city of Baltimore and constructing on that plot of ground a custom-house, post-office, etc. The Government now owns a custom-house in Baltimore which is entirely inadequate. The building is very old and dilapidated. This conference report proposes to purchase additional land for $100,000 adjoining the present site and the present building; and it proposes that the cost of this building be limited to a million and a half of dollars, including the additional ground.

Baltimore, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps the second or third city in the Union with respect to custom-house receipts. We have authorized the construction of a public building in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, to cost twice this amount; we have authorized one at Indianapolis for more than this amount; we have authorized one in New York for nearly four times the amount, and to my mind no more meritorious proposition has been brought before this House, so far as public buildings are concerned, than the one contained in this report. I sincerely hope the House will adopt it. This is all I care to say.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, Baltimore absolutely needs a new custom-house, but the position which our committee took in the committee room and on the floor of the House was that it is only necessary at present to purchase the site. This, it will be remembered, is a Senate bill, passed by the Senate. When it came to our committee, we cut out section 2—the part authorizing the construction of the building.

Mr. LLOYD. What is the objection to that? Why did the committee cut it out?

Mr. MERCER. We cut it out because we thought it impossible for the Government to do anything, under section 2 of the bill, at this session of Congress.

Mr. LLOYD. But does the section to which the gentleman refers not correspond with like sections in all the other bills?

Mr. MERCER. This is a Senate bill, and it has the usual limitations.

Mr. LLOYD. But is there not a similar section in all of these public-building bills?

Mr. MERCER. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. Then, why take it out of this bill?

Mr. MERCER. It was deemed better by the conferees, after a full consideration of the matter, to report the bill back in this form.

This building in Baltimore was constructed, I am informed, in 1818, and I wish to say that it is decidedly the worst public building that I ever visited. Members of the committee and others with us in going through the building were obliged to leave the lower part of the building because they could not stand the foul odors which were prevalent, the result of poor ventilation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What building is the gentleman referring to?

Mr. MERCER. The old custom-house in Baltimore.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there not a new post-office building there, or practically a new one?

Mr. MERCER. There is a building which was built some ten or twelve years ago for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were—ayes 86, noes 36.

So the report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

J. G. CANNON,
 W. H. MOODY,
 THOS. C. McRAE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I move to adopt the conference report.

Mr. BERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question before that. Is amendment numbered 107 changed in any way in the bill? It was put in by the House at $30,000 and increased by the Senate to $40,000.

Mr. CANNON. Thirty thousand dollars was agreed to in the conference report.

Mr. BERRY. I would like to make a motion to fix the sum at $40,000.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman could only do that, of course, by voting down the conference report.

Mr. BERRY. I was hoping that the conference committee, when they take the unadjusted matters into consideration, would make the change themselves.

Mr. CANNON. This matter will not be in conference again.

Mr. HULL. It has been agreed upon.

Mr. BERRY. I see the gentleman has me in sort of a corner, and I will have to deal with it as best I can.

Mr. CORLISS. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I understand that the conferees disagree with reference to the cable amendment.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Michigan, there is no agreement touching that subject. There is a disagreement. We have agreed, in other words, to disagree.

Mr. CORLISS. It seems to me that it would be well at this time to take up the question and have definite instructions given to the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Let us first adopt the report, and then these unsettled questions will come up in their order.

Mr. CORLISS. I move to amend by receding from the disagreement and accepting this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. That motion would not be in order now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CORLISS. Then I move to instruct the conferees on the part of the House to recede.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will possess himself in patience for a moment until the question of the conference report is adopted, it will then be in order to take up these several matters upon which there is a disagreement and determine the action of the House upon them.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CORLISS. As I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill, the motion is to concur so far as the conferees have agreed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is a conference report announcing a partial agreement.

Mr. CORLISS. Well, as to the matters that they had not agreed upon, they would be referred back to the conferees, would they not?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the House saw fit to do it.

Mr. CORLISS. Very well, then.

Mr. CANNON. I move to adopt the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the remaining Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. CORLISS. Will not the gentleman eliminate the last amendment from his motion?

Mr. CANNON. What is the number of that amendment?

Mr. CORLISS. The last one.

Mr. CANNON. I except amendments 163 and 164 from that motion. Now, is there anybody else who wants an amendment excepted?

Mr. KITCHIN. Amendment No. 4.

Mr. CANNON. What is No. 4?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is in regard to the public building at Durham, N. C.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman wants that excepted also from the general motion?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. And I want the building at Deadwood excepted.

Mr. CANNON. That is a part of amendment No. 10. Now, as to the remaining amendments, I will ask that my motion be put.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the House further insist upon all the amendments except 4, 10, 163, and 164, on which a separate vote is demanded.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House further insists on its disagreement to all the remaining amendments except those which the Clerk will now report in their order.

Mr. PAYNE. There is one item, amendment 88, which was included in the motion of the gentleman from Illinois on which I wish to offer a resolution in the nature of instructions to the conferees.

Mr. MOODY. I make the point of order that it is too late now.

Mr. PAYNE. No; the House insists upon its disagreement. You could not make a motion of that sort before conferees were authorized.

The SPEAKER. It should be made before the conferees are appointed and after the conference is ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I offer the following resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order at present.

Mr. PAYNE. I thought the conferees had been authorized.

The SPEAKER. They have not been authorized, nor have four amendments been disposed of. The Clerk will read the remaining amendments.

In order that the House may understand the situation, the Chair desires to say that the House has adopted the motion to further insist upon all the amendments except four specified ones which have not been voted upon, and a separate vote is to be taken on each of those.

The Clerk will read the first amendment, No. 4, upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Durham and State of North Carolina, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized.

Mr. KITCHIN. I desire to make a motion to recede and concur in this Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that would take precedence of my motion, or at least would be considered first, I making the motion that the House further insist.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] moves that the House recede and concur, and the vote will first be taken upon the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CANNON. Now, does the gentleman want to be heard? I can not yield the gentleman much time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to make a statement—about five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the bill which is practically this amendment passed the Senate in December, 1897. It was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that committee favorably reported it; but it was not considered in the Committee of the Whole for the simple reason that it was not reached. You gentlemen all remember how we hurried with those bills which the committee had reported in order to reach this one. There were 71 bills reported by the Public Building Committee ahead of it. For the motion I have made there was a precedent set yesterday, when the bill for a building in the city of Los Angeles was added to the bill for a building in the city of Stockton, and another precedent was set when New Brighton was added to the bill for Lockport, N. Y.; and you have increased the appropriation for the building at Baltimore this morning.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this town of Durham. I hope everyone will listen to these facts:

The post-office receipts of the town of Durham in 1885 were $5,545. In 1898 they were $16,430.79 gross, and gave the Government a net revenue of $3,096. It is a free-delivery post-office. The post-office now pays for rent, light, and fuel $1,000 a year. The internal-revenue department for rent of office for stamp clerk now pays $275 a year. The internal-revenue collections for the last fiscal year in the town of Durham were $960,718. The internal-revenue collections for the last calendar year were $1,253,090.42. The population of Durham in 1885 was 5,000; on September 30, 1897, it was 11,715, and it is now estimated to be 13,500.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this Congress does not pass the appropriation for such building this year, I fear it will not pass it next year; and as you have already appropriated millions for expositions, for temporary purposes, I think you will be serving a better purpose to erect this permanent improvement in Durham, which the needs of the public require, and I ask you to give the town of Durham this $75,000 for a public building. On yesterday you appropriated $500,000 for Toledo and another $500,000 for Buffalo, for temporary purposes, for holding expositions, and I ask this for a permanent purpose, to meet the needs of the Government; and I trust gentlemen whose districts and sections have been so thoroughly favored in the last few days in these matters will stand with us in this matter, for it was not my fault that this bill was not reported higher up on the list. I have been diligent in this matter from the beginning of this Congress. I hope that it will be nobody's fault that this bill does not pass. I hope every member will vote for this proposition and give us this appropriation by concurring in the Senate amendment, as I have asked.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I simply requested these two minutes in order to second the motion of my colleague, Mr. KITCHIN of North Carolina. A few years ago this city of Durham was a mere railway station. It is now one of the greatest tobacco centers, and therefore promises, in the near future, to be one of the greatest sources of revenue of this Government in any part of our Southland; and I most sincerely trust that all gentlemen on this side of the House will join with those on the other side and give us this small sum that we ask for.

I fear that our modesty, and the small amount that we request, militates against us. North Carolina has had comparatively little, considering the position she occupies in the constellation of the States of this Union. And I hope that gentlemen on this side of the House will join cordially in supporting us and give us this $75,000 we ask for a building at the city of Durham. It has so recently emerged from a town that I keep calling it a town; but it is a city now, of large proportions, considered with others—15,000 or 20,000. It grows so fast that I can not keep up with it. [Laughter.] I assure you it will rival some of your Eastern and Northern and Western cities, if you will only encourage it, and we ask you to encourage us in this way.

A MEMBER. Equal to Tupelo?

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. It includes Tupelo, including the union station, where they talked about young ladies coming to town at 4 o'clock and drinking out of old, worn-out, rusty tin cups. There are plenty of trains, plenty of stations, plenty of money, and plenty of tobacco. Why, gentlemen keep the cloak-rooms perfumed with Durham tobacco every day—

Mr. SHERMAN. If they had young ladies coming there in train loads, would not they use their pictures instead of taking the pictures of animals?

Mr. WHITE of North Carolina. Oh, we get those pictures from New York for advertising purposes. [Great laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh!

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to gentlemen that in amendment No. 10 are to be found appropriations for a large number of buildings, all in the same amendment. Most of them are authorized; that is, the bills have passed both the House and the Senate. A few of them are not authorized. One or two have never passed either the House or the Senate, so that there is a disagreement as to No. 10; but at another conference undoubtedly all bills included in No. 10 will have the appropriation recommended to the House and Senate where the bills have passed both Houses. I state this so that gentlemen may understand the condition. Now, this is amendment No. 4.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to have order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please be in order and take their seats. If there is no objection on the part of the House, perhaps it would be well to have the Sergeant-at-Arms instructed that no more cards are to be sent in.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the request that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to send in no more cards to members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. This is amendment No. 4, and covers one public building, viz, at Durham, N. C., a proposition that has never passed either body and appears here for the first time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman is in error there. It passed the Senate in the Fifty-fourth Congress and also in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CANNON. Well, then, it has passed the Senate twice, but it has never passed the House, nor has it been considered in Committee of the Whole. Now, I am not going to discuss the merits of Durham, N. C., for a public building. For aught I know it has merit. I am told that the post-office receipts are $16,000. But I am going to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are a number of public-building measures on this general appropriation bill by Senate amendment that have not passed the House, and some of them that have never passed either House or Senate except as they have passed the Senate by amendment.

Now, I should not have anything to say, as busy as I am under the order of the House, if this building were pending as a measure before the House, as other matters that come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; but I do antagonize it with what little force I can command, as I would antagonize any public-building bill that comes here on a general appropriation bill by the way of Senate amendment; because an appropriation bill carrying, as this bill does, almost $50,000,000, under decent parliamentary usage, under the rules of the House, under the practice of the House, has been kept heretofore, and ought to be kept now, an appropriation bill. For that reason I am going to ask the House in this and subsequent amendments to keep the rule of the House inviolate, and not allow the Senate to dictate, by amendments which are against their rules and amendments that violate the spirit of all rules, as to what we shall consider.

Later on there is an amendment of much greater importance than this—viz, to construct a cable to Honolulu—that will involve an expenditure of $3,000,000, and then it will only half complete it, a proposition that there has never been any legislation about. The House considered a bill for a part of a day and failed to agree, and yet the Senate takes that matter up. If it were proposed in the House, a single point of order would cut it off, but the Senate puts it on and sends it back to the House with its compliments, and says, "By the grace of the Senate we will give you an amendment, or amendments, that you may consider, and we will put enough of them on, hoping to group them together so that a combination may be formed that will carry them in whole or in part."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the gentleman going to ask the House to concur in that $3,000,000 item?

Mr. CANNON. I am going to ask the House to disagree to it and to say to its conferees that it does disagree to it, and if I voice my own action touching all these amendments that involve legislation and appropriations without authorization, I will ask the House, and hope it will sustain me, to say to the Senate that not one of them shall go upon the general appropriation bill.

Now, I say to the gentlemen from North Carolina, both of them, who are greatly interested in a public building at Durham, N. C., that I am not antagonizing that public building. However much merit it may have, or however little merit, I am not discussing it, but I am saying that it ought not to go upon this bill by the grace of the Senate, or by the command of the Senate, because it is legislation as well as authorization, and I stand defending the integrity of the rules of the House and defending good and orderly legislation. I ask the House, without regard to the merit of this matter, to stand by its conferees along the line of sustaining proper parliamentary usages and preserving the great appropriation bills, which should only carry appropriations if we are to have safety to the Treasury and decency in legislation.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman claim that the Senate has acted in an improper manner in adopting this amendment?

Mr. CANNON. I claim, first, that the Senate by unanimous consent has suspended its own rules when it puts this amendment on a general appropriation bill. I claim, second, that if this amendment were moved in the House a point of order would keep it off the bill. I claim, third, that we only consider matters of this kind, which are not authorized by legislation, because we are forced to do so; and I stand here to say to the coordinate branch of Congress, so far as my vote and voice are concerned, that this House will preserve its own dignity as a coordinate branch and insist that the Senate shall not disregard its own rules and then undertake to compel the House to violate its rules. I take this position in the interest of orderly, proper legislation.

Mr. KELLEY. How can the gentleman claim that the Senate transcended its powers when it took action by unanimous consent? Is it not a fact that on various occasions legislation is enacted in that manner in this body? Has not the Senate a right to amend appropriation bills? Is it not done in every Congress?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the Senate has the right to amend appropriation bills, but when the Senate does that against the spirit of the House rules and makes an appropriation bill, which on its face is to carry appropriations in pursuance of existing law, a legislative bill, then it is time for the House to assert its own prerogative; and it is time for men who desire good legislation, orderly legislation, honest legislation, to say that the House will perform its functions and that the Senate must be kept to the performance of its functions. Therefore I ask the House to stand by the motion which I shall make to disagree further to this amendment—

Mr. KELLEY. Does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations take the position that the Senate of the United States has acted in a manner that contravenes the rules of the House of Representatives?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman, and I shall speak of the Senate respectfully. I am not speaking of individual Senators. The Senate of the United States is a coordinate branch of Congress.

Mr. KELLEY. I thought so.

Mr. CANNON. Senators are elected for six years. The Senate is a small body. It works with great facility when it wants to [laughter]; it does not work at all when it does not want to. [Laughter.] I speak respectfully of that body. I am not going outside of the rules of the House. But during the quarter of a century that I have been in the House of Representatives the Senate of the United States has not only performed its own function, but it has been in constant warfare, in season and out of season, trying to coerce the House of Representatives in the performance of its functions. And always heretofore the House has insisted, and I apprehend that always in the future as a coordinate branch of Congress it will have to insist upon its rights and its functions or become a tail to the kite of another body, a coordinate body.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has not the gentleman been trying for about ten years to get into the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has too much brains to resort to that method of debate. But I may state to him that I have known an eminent gentleman from Tennessee who desired to break into the Senate to reform it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman will allow me to say that, as I understand the situation, it is this: The Senate, in the exercise of its wisdom, and, as I take it, considering that it was necessary to do so, has amended this bill by putting upon it this meritorious proposition. I believe the gentleman from Illinois will concede that it is a meritorious measure. The facts show it to be such.

Now, when it comes here as a proper Senate amendment and I move to concur, I am not asking the House to violate any of its rules. The question is not a question as to the rules of the House, nor their construction, but whether the House will agree to a proposition which many members on the floor know to be a proper one and which everyone who has heard my statement must concede to be meritorious. In other words, Will we concur in that amendment or refuse to agree to it? On that proposition, in my opinion, the House should act solely on the merits of the proposition itself. When we come to the cable amendment embodied also in this bill, and which the gentleman has alluded to, we can also vote on that upon its merits.

Mr. Speaker, there is no other way in which we can do justice to these people; no other way in which we can do equity to them, except by prompt and proper action upon this amendment. It is a case of urgent necessity. It is true that the time is short and we have no opportunity of presenting the case as it ought to be presented. But let us at least vote upon the merits of the case and not on the assumption that we are violating some rule which is not applicable here.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a single word further, and then I am ready for a vote. The gentleman from North Carolina, of course, wants this amendment agreed to. That is entirely natural. I am appealing, however, to this side of the House and to that side of the House, and I think I have the right to do so without regard to the merits of the proposition, not to agree to this legislation proposed by the Senate.

Now I am ready for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a single moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want to call attention to the fact that of the large body of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and which are provided for in this bill, the Senate bills have been treated precisely, with reference to appropriations, just as the House has been treated with regard to its bills. We passed, as gentlemen will remember, several bills here, taking them up in their regular order, and now I claim that it is not right for that body to impose upon the House bills which have never been considered by the committees of the House or by the House itself.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, I am only occupying the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to my friend.

Mr. KITCHIN. The only reason that this bill, which was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—I ask the gentleman's attention to this statement—the only reason that this bill was not considered and passed in the Committee of the Whole House was because the time allotted for consideration of such bills expired before it could be reached. The gentleman knows that the Committee of the Whole House had but a limited time. The Public Buildings Committee considered it and reported it favorably and unanimously.

Mr. HENDERSON. But the statement of the gentleman would open up the whole question. That is not the point involved here. The only point is that the Senate bills are treated precisely as the House bills. All had the same treatment, and there was no preference shown to either; and that alone should protect the House from the consideration of matters that ought not to be considered at this late date in the session, when there is no time, owing to the pressure of public matters, to examine into them, as they should be examined into and considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But this bill was reported from the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Let me call the attention of gentlemen also to the fact that the Army bill was enlarged, modified, and increased in the other body by amendments which were never considered in the House or in the Committee on Military Affairs. They presented a new bill practically.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote on the proposition of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to recede and adopt the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KITCHIN) there were—ayes 85, noes 96.

Mr. KITCHIN. I call for tellers.

Mr. CANNON. I hope my friend will let us get on with the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. This is a most important provision and I do not know how we can spend the time better than in its consideration.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Speaker, we might just as well have the yeas and nays, for the purpose of saving time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 117, answered "present" 7, not voting 121; as follows:

The SPEAKER. He has not answered.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I wish to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. EVANS. I understand that I am paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. BAIRD. That being so, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I beg to announce that I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. MORRIS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF ORDER FOR PENSION SESSION.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] desires to make a request.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, owing to the condition of the public business, which will require this House to be in almost constant session until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and owing to the impossibility of doing any effective pension legislation, I ask unanimous consent that the rule for a Friday evening pension session be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] asks unanimous consent to suspend the rule with regard to a pension session this evening and also for the recess which is ordinarily taken under that rule. Is there objection?

Mr. RIDGELY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask if the pension bills which have come to us from the Senate have all been acted upon?

Mr. RAY of New York. Everything has been acted upon except one bill, which is now on the Speaker's table, and we shall act upon that in a few minutes. The Calendar of the House is clear, so far as pension bills are concerned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for a separate vote on the amendment relative to the public building at Deadwood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota withdraws his request for a separate vote on amendment No. 10. If there be no objection, it will be considered then as disagreed to, the House insisting upon its disagreement.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment is 163, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, after line 25, insert:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT.

"Pacific Cable: That there shall be constructed by the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for military, naval, and postal purposes, a submarine telegraphic cable and connecting land lines from a Pacific port in the State of California, to be designated by the President, to the city of Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands.

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to detail one or more vessels of the United States for the purpose of making surveys and taking careful necessary soundings in order to determine the most practicable route for said line of cable.

"That the construction and laying of such cable or cables shall be under the general control and direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and he is hereby empowered and required, immediately after the passage of this act, to prescribe and cause to be prepared plans and specifications for the construction and laying of said line of telegraphic cable to be constructed and put in operation at the earliest practicable date. Contracts for the construction and laying of said line of telegraphic cable, and for supplying the necessary instruments and appliances connected therewith, except such work as can be advantageously and efficiently done by the Navy Department, shall be awarded to, and executed by, the lowest responsible bidder or bidders after such notice by advertisement for sealed bids as shall be deemed reasonable and sufficient by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That in all advertisements for bids, and for all bids for work for, or appliances, and all contracts made for such work and material in connection with said telegraphic cable and necessary appliances, it shall be provided that the wires, cables, insulators, batteries, instruments, and all other materials shall be of the best quality, and of American manufacture and reasonably adapted in every respect for the highest efficiency.

"That when such telegraphic cable is completed the operation of the same shall be under the control of the Postmaster-General, who shall have authority to receive and transmit messages in the interest of commerce and the public, other than United States Government messages, and shall establish a rate of toll therefor, not exceeding 25 cents per word between the designated port in the State of California and Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands. The Postmaster-General shall arrange and provide for the transmission of messages from news associations and news agencies to the newspapers of the United States, commonly known as press messages, at a rate not exceeding one-third of the above-named rates for ordinary private messages; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated toward the construction of said cable and connecting land lines, as hereinbefore provided; and the total cost of said line shall not exceed $2,500,000, to be paid for from time to time as appropriations shall be made by Congress."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to further insist on disagreement to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider amendments 163 and 164 together. They are one and the same. One is for the cable and the other for the steamer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, after line 23, insert:

"For the construction and equipment of a repair steamer, and for spare cable, $350,000."

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. My motion is that the House further insist on its disagreement. I understand the gentleman from Michigan desires to make a motion—

Mr. CORLISS. That we recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, which are to be taken together by the consent of the House, and the gentleman from Michigan moves to recede and concur. The vote will be taken on the motion to recede and concur.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I desire to know whether the gentleman's motion relates to the cable or the amendment which has just been read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. It refers to both, the House having given consent to consider them together.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire to discuss his motion?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear this amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a reasonable request, and if there be no objection the amendment will be again read. The Chair hears none, and now the House will please be in order. The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman who makes the motion to concur, the gentleman from Michigan, ten minutes.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this House has not had before it any measure of so great importance to the American people as this amendment, covering two pages of this bill. It authorizes the construction by the Navy Department of a cable from California to Honolulu. It appropriates half a million dollars as a preliminary step, and authorizes the expenditure of two millions and a half to complete the work. We authorize the President of the United States to use the vessels of the Navy Department or any ship that may be owned by the Government for the purpose of its construction.

You will remember that this measure in substance was before the House on the 18th day of January last. It came before the House at that time in a bill to authorize the construction of a cable and grant a subsidy of $100,000 per annum for twenty years, or an amount of $2,000,000. I offered as a substitute a measure, which you will find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in substance the same as this amendment, except that the construction of it is now placed in the hands of the Navy Department instead of the War Department.

I do not agree with the chairman of this committee that the Senate of the United States, in enacting legislation for the benefit of our people, should be governed or controlled or directed by the laws of this House; and I thank God, for one, we have a United States Senate to engraft upon a bill of this kind legislation in the interest of our country as important as this. [Applause.]

While I would reform the Senate of the United States in one respect, and that is the method by which the Senators are elected, I am glad to know that they present to this House repeatedly amendments on bills that will enable a majority of the members of this House to secure legislation in the interest of commerce and our country. This amendment has been pending before Congress for the past six years.

Not less than half a dozen bills have been reported to one or other branch of Congress carrying subsidies in all instances running from $100,000 per annum up to half a million dollars per annum; and a measure carrying half a million dollars of subsidy was passed by the United States Senate in the Fifty-third Congress for the construction of a cable of this character.

After the original measure was reported to this House last March the parties in interest, in behalf of that measure, went to Honolulu and secured a contract that gave them a subsidy and control for twenty years from that government, which, fortunately, was repealed on the 2d day of January by the present Administration; and you will find a full discussion of that important matter in the RECORD on the 18th day of January. Following the discussion on the 18th of January, in the light of the report of the Hawaiian commissioners, the President of the United States, on the 10th day of February (this last month), sent a communication to Congress on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, in the Senate there were two propositions presented for the committee to act upon. One to grant a subsidy and the other to authorize the construction of this cable by the United States Government, and I am glad to know that the leading members on both sides of that body advocated the support of this measure, and have passed it through the Senate.

They undoubtedly did that in the light of the record of the Hawaiian commission calling urgent attention to this construction, and of the President's communication on the 10th of February. Let me call your attention to his language:

The necessity for speedy cable communication between the United States and the Pacific islands is becoming imperative.

This is the President of the United States addressing you, gentlemen—

The construction of this cable is imperative.

He then says:

Such communication should be established in such a way as to be wholly under the control of the United States Government, whether in time of war or peace.

Further on he says:

The time has now arrived when a cable in the Pacific must extend at least to Manila, touching the Hawaiian Islands.

And further on he urges this Congress to take action thereon.

Now, let me say to the gentlemen here that unless you adopt this amendment to this bill you will have the subsidy people here at the next Congress asking a subsidy of as much money as it will cost to build this cable. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said that the cable would cost the Government very much more than the appropriation.

Let me call his attention to the testimony of Mr. Scrymser, the manager of the Pacific Cable Company, the man who controls the cable syndicates in the United States, and who testified before the committee that he could construct the cable for two million and a half dollars. I have a statement of General Greeley, of the Signal Service Corps, and he says that a cable can be constructed to Hawaii for $2,000,000. The estimate that is inserted in this amendment is two million and a half of dollars.

How many men here desire to vote down an amendment because of the rules of this House, which do not apply to a Senate amendment, denying to our Government in its necessities, denying to the President of the United States the communication he desires with Hawaii for military protection, for naval protection, and for the benefit of commerce?

There is no step that we can take in this Congress, no legislation that has been taken in this Congress, more important to our Government as a nation, more important to our naval and military organization, more important to commerce, than the amendment embraced in this bill. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to pass it. I understand there are others that will discuss this matter; I will ask the Speaker to reserve the balance of my time. How many minutes have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CORLISS. Then I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to let me have two minutes more by and by.

Mr. CANNON. Of course, there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard on this, but I will do the best I can for the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois who is controlling the time for the other side?

Mr. CANNON. I am yielding the time; I am going to try and hold the floor until I get a vote.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then the gentleman controls the time on both sides?

Mr. CANNON. Having the bill in charge and it being the expiring hours of the session, I want as nearly as possible to divide the time fairly between those for and those against, but before my time expires I want a vote, I will say to my friend.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then it is to the equity and justice of the gentleman from Illinois that those who favor the amendment must address themselves?

Mr. CANNON. If they speak in my time, they must get the time from me. Now, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE].

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this cable project. If for no other reason, on account of a fact suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] in his remarks. We are proceeding recently by progressive stages. It is proposed to build a cable to Honolulu, and the President has suggested, as stated by the gentleman from Michigan, that it will be necessary to extend the cable to Manila. Evidently this is a military project, a cable to be constructed for military purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the sundry civil appropriation bill, although it carries upward of $80,000,000, contains but a small part of the increased appropriation which this Congress has added to the annual appropriations which we have had hitherto. They come here to meet military exigencies because we are making ourselves a military power. I hold that it is a solemn duty of this Congress before it expires to place upon record what the sense of Congress is upon the present duty of the United States in its present situation.

We should say what our purposes are with reference to the future, with reference to a military government. We would like to know, the country would like to know, where we stand. In a speech by the President in Boston a short time ago he said that Congress would define our policy. The President, after speaking about what was necessary and proper to be done with reference to the Filipinos, said:

The whole subject is now with Congress. Congress is the voice and the conscience and the judgment of the American people; upon their judgment and conscience can we not rely? I believe in them, I trust them, I know of no better or safer tribunal.

That is, the "people" through their representatives here, the President says, and it is our duty to say what our policy is. And yet Congress has not spoken. There is a resolution now before the Committee on Foreign Affairs which defines what the policy of the United States shall be on this subject.

The minority have requested them to report that resolution to the House, so that it may act upon it. We have asked the honorable chairman to call the committee together so that it may consider and report that resolution, but he has refused to do so. We have been met with a refusal. We have asked the Speaker of the House to give us recognition to suspend the rules; and while we know that the Speaker is in sympathy with the resolution, still we have not been able to get recognition. In view of the evident desire of the Administration, he has felt impelled to refuse the House the privilege of expressing its will. I will read the resolution.

This resolution I introduced in the House by direction of the Democratic party in this body. It is the result of their deliberation and expresses the wish of the whole Democratic party in the country. First I will read the preamble of the resolution adopted by a Democratic caucus, expressing the direction, acting under which I introduced the resolution which is now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and which my colleagues and myself have sought by every means available to have brought before the House for its consideration and disposal. The preamble is as follows, the resolution following immediately thereafter:

We hold that the Constitution of the United States was ordained and established for an intelligent, liberty-loving, and self-governing people and can not be successfully applied to a people of different virtues and conditions. We therefore hold that a colonial policy is contrary to the theory of our Government and subversive to those great principles of civil liberty which we have been taught to cherish.

We believe, with the Declaration of Independence, that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and we are unalterably opposed to the establishment of any government by the United States without the consent of the people to be governed. And, in conformity with these principles, we instruct the minority members of the Foreign Affairs Committee to introduce and urge the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over the Philippine Islands, and assert their determination, when an independent government shall have been established therein, to transfer to said government, upon the terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights secured under the cession by Spain, and thereupon to leave the government and control of the islands to their people."

In addition to the resolution read the Democratic caucus of the House adopted another resolution, which reads as follows:

We, the Democratic members of the House of Representatives in caucus assembled, commend the signal loyalty and valor of our soldiers and sailors in the performance of every military duty to which they have been assigned by proper authority, however much we deplore the policy of the Administration now directing their movements, and we pledge our hearty support and sympathy under all circumstances, wherever engaged.

Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of this Congress to declare what the policy of the Government is. We have been told that it is not yet known what we should do. Why not? The President says that Congress should say what is proper to be done, yet Congress will not speak. There is a solemn duty resting upon us. More is involved in it, Mr. Speaker, than any man may estimate. Why not declare a policy? Ah! what is the President's policy?

We have endeavored time and again to persuade gentlemen on the other side to announce it and they have not done so. We have given emphasis to our demand and they have not responded. Why not? The President has said it is the duty of Congress to determine what the policy shall be. Mr. Speaker, there is a policy. The fact that it is not declared is not because it does not exist, but because they are unwilling for the world to know their policy at this time. It is the policy which leads to the ultimate acquisition of the Philippine Islands, the destruction of their autonomy, and the setting up of American authority under military control.

The Administration has a purpose with reference to the Philippine Islands. The country should not be deceived. The reason why that purpose is not expressed and given Congressional sanction is because the Administration itself and its partisans in Congress are unwilling to have it known because they believe truly that the people of the country will not indorse it. Their purpose is to reach it by deception, by gradual stages, by placing the country in such an attitude that the ultimate acquisition of the Philippine Islands can not be avoided.

We have seen this practice resorted to with reference to other questions. It is but a repetition of the history of the money question. The President himself favored the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1. Other gentlemen upon the floor of this House, when the bullion-purchasing law was passed, congratulated the country that we were upon the threshold of free and equal coinage of silver and gold. Professing to be the friends of silver, they have by gradual process stricken it to the ground and shown themselves to be its unalterable enemies.

Mr. Speaker, we may expect the same course upon the question which the Administration refuses to give its views upon at this time. The President says it is for Congress to determine. Does he think for a moment that the country does not know what his desire is? He has said that "We do not want the islands, but what can we do?" He has said, "Who shall haul down the flag?" What did he mean except that where the American flag has once flown it must there abide as an emblem of the sovereignty of the American Republic?

In his recent visit to the South the President, after having warmed up the hearts of Southern men by saying pleasant things of dead Confederates, took advantage of the opportunity afforded to seek an apparent indorsement of his purpose to attach the Philippine Islands to the United States. In his speech at Savannah, he exclaims, if newspaper reports are to be accredited, "Shall we have a great Navy to protect our commerce?" and the exuberant Southerners cried out in response: "Yes!" "Yes!" "Then," said he, "let us have a commerce to be protected by our Navy." Did he not mean that we should extend our commerce by extending our territorial possessions in the East? He could have meant nothing else.

Again he told the beautiful story of the color-sergeant who with intrepid courage had advanced the colors forward of the line, and being ordered by his colonel to bring the colors back to the line exclaimed in reply, "Let the line come forward to the colors!" These warm-hearted Southerners in admiration of that color-sergeant cried aloud with wild huzzas, and the President flattered himself that he carried to the country their approval of his policy to advance the line of American dominion to where the flag floated over the Philippines, under the guns of Dewey and of Otis.

Mr. Speaker, we should be honest with ourselves and with the country. We are not playing the part of a dignified and great nation. The heart of the people is not with this spirit of conquest, and this is why we have been wholly unable to get the Administration and its representatives in Congress to declare a definite policy. We should deal directly with the people. We should speak without ambiguity or uncertainty, and in the name of the Democratic party, that with all its energy opposes the purposes of this Administration as outlined by the evidences, I demand that the Administration shall speak what it intends.

The President also said in his Boston speech:

The Philippines, like Cuba and Porto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust we have not sought; it is a trust from which we will not flinch.

This is but a reiteration of the threadbare cry of "destiny," while unable to appeal to the judgment of men, to their reason, to approve of a condition which is the logical result of their own deliberate action.

Like cowards they throw themselves in the lap of Providence and say that He has thrust the situation upon them. Mr. Speaker, every martyr burned at the stake in the middle ages met this death under a false pretense of divine approval. Every Christian murdered by the hands of Mohammedan shed his blood as a sacrifice under decree of the Moslems' god. It is the refuge of cowards to shelter their error behind the throne of Providence. I have observed, sir, that when men have a virtuous deed to parade before the world they seek not to give credit to Providence, but claim it for themselves.

In the name of the people of the United States and in the name of the greatest conservator of their liberties, the Democratic party, I demand that Congress shall have the privilege of defining its will upon this great question and I demand that this shall be defined with reference to the welfare of the people of our own country first, whatever may result to the barbaric tribes of foreign isles.

THE SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

MR. DINSMORE. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me five minutes more.

MR. CANNON. At this stage of the session, and in view of the pressure of public business, I can not yield further.

MR. DINSMORE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks briefly in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 21, 23, 24, 75, 76, 77, 88, 140, 145, 146, 158, 161, 163, and 164, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1056) to provide for a public building at Cleveland, Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 259) for the appointment of Lyman B. Perkins, late of the Navy, to be passed assistant engineer; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill H. R. 9428, "An act to authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, of Maryland, to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia," asked a conference on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] five minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, some time since I observed in the public press a statement that "Mr. LEWIS of Washington arose and delivered a valedictory to the House." I do not know exactly what that meant. If it was meant to indicate that I had delivered that which I understand to be a valedictory—one's last speech—then the statement is a clear indication that that distinguished gentleman of the press who wrote the article did not know me, or did not know that I could never deliver my "last speech." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, every once in a while there arise occasions when my constituents, as in the present instance, desire some means by which they may facilitate the communication of their intelligence to others. They now demand that I shall support such a measure for such an object. There are many reasons, Mr. Speaker, which may justify gentlemen who oppose this measure, but to me the necessity of the measure is clear and unmistakable.

We found it agreeable to annex Hawaii—against the judgment of many gentlemen here. I am one of those whose judgment at the outset did not favor the annexation. But as we have adopted the policy of annexing it, making it a part of our territory, it seems to me we would unjustifiably leave those people without appropriate means of communication if we should at this time decide that they are not to have a cable. As Congress will not reassemble until December next, there will in the meantime be no opportunity for this country to take official action upon the subject. In default of proper means of communication Hawaii will be many days distant from us, while other countries having the advantage of the cables will be practically in a position of contiguity.

Many objections have been urged against this measure upon various grounds, particularly that the Government ought not to go into this business; yet if I am not mistaken many of the gentlemen who make such arguments find it agreeable to support a projected scheme of subsidy by this Government in behalf of ship-owners for the purpose of stimulating the commerce of the seas and promoting commercial communication from the States of California, Washington, and other Pacific ports with Hawaii. These same gentlemen find it agreeable to support the proposition for building the Nicaragua Canal under the supervision and sole control of this Government. I am with them. I am unable to perceive any distinction which can justify my distinguished friends in supporting the first two measures I have just named, and at the same time opposing the one now under consideration for a Government cable.

Shall we have communication with Hawaii or shall we not? Shall this Government control the means of communication whereby it may ascertain the whereabouts of its war ships and keep abreast with the course of its governments or shall it not? If this question be answered in the affirmative, then the policy of our Government is to adopt such means as will enable it not only to control but actually to possess this means of communication and, by possessing it, control it exclusively against those who might desire to use it for their private ends at critical times.

Whatever objection I may have, Mr. Speaker, personally, to the form of the proposition, by the direction of the constituents that I have the honor to represent on this floor, who feel that this work is necessary for their welfare and to their prosperity, I trust, in their behalf, that the motion of my distinguished friend from Illinois will not prevail. [Applause.]

That is what I desired to say upon the question.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes. Mr. Speaker, of the time remaining to me to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I have but one rule to govern me with reference to the expenditures of public money, and that is, not to vote for any expenditure for any purpose which can be prosecuted reasonably well by individuals. There would be no end to expenditures of public money, if it is once commenced, for projects that can be as well or better performed by individuals. The Government can never do any business, no matter what, as well as it can be done by private individuals, if they are willing to put their money, their time, and their enterprise into it.

If the Government builds this cable line, it would have to operate it; have to provide for its support. It is precisely the same principle as would be involved in the building of a railroad.

A telephone, a telegraph, or a cable line can be built by private individuals, and operated better than it can be operated by the Government. There are many details of the work that would be difficult to regulate by law if the matter were under Government supervision. In the event of the construction of this cable by private corporation, the Government would still have the use of it in case of war. If war comes, the Government would take possession of it if necessary. There is no way to reduce governmental expenditures if the Government is to engage in enterprises which can be prosecuted reasonably well by individuals.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROW. Certainly.

Mr. CORLISS. I would like to ask the gentleman, as between the proposition to build this cable line by the Government or paying a subsidy of over $2,000,000 to a company, which would the gentleman select?

Mr. GROW. Of the two I should rather pay the subsidy. I think it would be better for the Government. I think it would be desirable even to pay the subsidy rather than to enter into a business enterprise which belongs strictly and should belong exclusively to private individuals.

If the Government undertakes to build this cable line, we have no means of knowing the cost, for it takes all the risk in its construction. There is no mode of determining what will be the expenditure in which we will be involved. The $2,000,000 involved in the subsidy is a known amount and is spread over twenty years of time.

I have not risen, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of discussing the details of this proposition, but I have only risen to speak of what I believe to be the proper policy to be pursued in these cases. I know no way of reducing expenses of the Government, which are now so large, except to vote against all enterprises involving public expenditures which can be properly carried on by private individuals and which properly belong to them.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes or such of that time as he may desire to occupy to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this proposition to construct a cable to the Hawaiian Islands, because, in my judgment, the Government of the United States should not invade the domain of individual enterprise. As between the proposition which has been offered to subsidize a cable line to Hawaii and the counter proposition that the Government construct one of its own, I favor the construction by the Government. I do not believe in granting a subsidy for any such purpose.

If there is a necessity for a cable at all, it will be constructed by private enterprise. It will be constructed because it will pay the promoters of the enterprise and because there is a necessity for its construction.

Now, then, it has been suggested by gentlemen in this debate that this is a military necessity and that the cable must be constructed because of the demands arising from that source. I do not agree with that view. I am so much in opposition to it that I should be unwilling to see the Government's money expended for that purpose.

I do not desire, however, to enter upon the discussion of that question at this time, in the few brief moments at my disposal. Hawaii, it is true, is a part of the United States, we are interested in the islands, and we have a regular intercourse with them.

Those communications seem to be sufficiently close to answer every purpose of commerce and every function of government up to this time in connection with military or naval operations. That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the proposition to construct a cable at the expense of the Government, believing that individual enterprise at the opportune time will construct the cable and thus relieve the taxpayers from the $2,850,000 carried by the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining? The last two gentlemen did not consume quite all their time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] three minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, in the last session of this Congress I voted for the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands. I did so because I was persuaded that we ought to have those islands as a military necessity. Lying as they do on the great highway between America and Asia, nearly halfway between the two continents, the argument was offered that it was necessary to have those islands as a military station, as a great naval station.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it becomes absolutely necessary that the Government have a military cable. If we are going to have a great military and naval station there, I want to emphasize it again that it becomes absolutely necessary that the Government should own and control this cable, and I trust that gentlemen who are opposed to the Government owning these great public utilities, gentlemen whom I presume to be honest in opposing the principle of the Government owning telegraph and railroad lines, will not let that idea interfere with the passage of this amendment; because if those islands are going to be of any benefit to us on account of our having a great naval station there, we must have communication with that naval station by means of a military telegraph. Here is a proposition that the Government let the contract to the lowest bidder.

Mr. SPALDING. That the Navy Department shall build it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, so much the better, because I believe they can build it cheaper than anybody who can get the contract, because some favorite might get the contract at a larger price than he ought to have. Now, the Government builds the cable; and if I heard the reading of that amendment aright, it provides that this cable shall be constructed out of American materials made by American labor; and I hope and trust that our friends on the right side of this Chamber but on the wrong side of this question [laughter] will live up to their profession that they have been and still are the friends of American labor.

For this, I understand, is to be done by American labor, and I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has talked so many times in the interest of the American laborer, will not desert him now in the time of his necessity, when he has a chance really to do something for him. I thank him for the time that he yielded to me.

Mr. CANNON. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

[Mr. LENTZ addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the House should agree with this Senate amendment. The subject of a Pacific cable is one that has received a great deal of attention in the committee of which I am a member. During the last four years a number of gentlemen versed in cable laying and operating have appeared before that committee, and given the committee, perhaps, all the information which was possible to get. I think we ought to have cable communication, not simply with Honolulu, but with Asia; but I am not willing to secure it by the means suggested in this amendment.

In the first place, I am utterly opposed to the Government going into this kind of business or engaging in any enterprise of this kind where it is possible to secure individual effort and success through individual effort.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Is there any difference in principle between the Government constructing this cable and the Government constructing the Nicaragua Canal?

Mr. HEPBURN. There is a great deal of difference.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I mean in principle.

Mr. HEPBURN. The Nicaragua Canal can not be constructed by individual enterprise. [Cries of "Why not?"] Individual effort and endeavor never will go into that enterprise. If it is to be built, if it is a necessity, then it must be built through governmental aid. There is the same necessity for that that there was for the General Government thirty-odd years ago to aid in the construction of the Pacific roads. It would be better if individual capital had gone into that enterprise; but for twenty years the people have been waiting, and waiting in vain. The enterprise was too gigantic for the individual capital then in the country, just as the Nicaragua Canal is now. But in reference to this matter there is no necessity of that kind.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska rose.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not propose now to answer all the possible objections that may be made by the whole Populist party. I want to talk about something else. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman to suspend a moment until we can have order. I want to hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask my friend from Iowa a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Would not your principle require the carrying of the mails by private enterprise rather than by the Government as now operated?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman permit one question? Did I not hear the gentleman the other day advocate the construction of an armor-plate factory by the United States Government?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CORLISS. Did you not—

Mr. HEPBURN. Simply for the reason that men have by combination made it impossible for the Government to get proper service at any reasonable price.

Mr. CORLISS. Is there not here a combination interested?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; and I will show you that it is not, too, before I get through. That is what I am here for. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen must remember that the item provided for in this bill is but one item, and but one cable as the beginning of the expenditure. Here is the proposition to appropriate $2,850,000 for the purpose of laying one cable between Honolulu and the Pacific coast. The gentleman knows that witnesses who testified stated that it was necessary, in order that business could be done with certainty and dispatch, that there should be a duplicate cable. Not only that, but every witness testified that the life of a cable was about twenty years. So, while you are providing for one cable, one strand, you must within the next twenty years provide for four. You must multiply the $2,850,000 by 4 before you can ascertain what this enterprise is to cost.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this proposition is not affected as was the other that has been suggested to the House. There is capital, there are individuals ready and willing to enter upon this enterprise, not for a subsidy of $3,000,000, as the gentleman from time to time has said. It is misleading. He is not ingenuous when he makes that statement. The proposal was that which was embodied in the bill proposed to this House—that a payment not to exceed $100,000 should be paid to the corporation that would undertake this enterprise. For what?

Not for service between the Pacific coast and Honolulu, but for all of that service, and, added to that, all the Asiatic service. They were to be paid for twenty years, and after that the payments were to be suspended, but the service was to go on for all time.

Mr. CORLISS. Does the gentleman deny that the bill advocated by him on the 18th of January carried a specific appropriation for $100,000 for twenty years?

Mr. HEPBURN. One hundred thousand dollars to be paid for twenty years; but the gentleman gave the impression that there was an appropriation for the gross sum of $3,000,000, and that is a very different matter. He has studiously withheld the fact—never once has referred to it—that after the annual payments the service was to go on for all time.

Mr. CORLISS. If you will look at my remarks in the RECORD you will find to the contrary.

Mr. HEPBURN. To secure that, the Government was to give a lien on all the property and all the cables of the company. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the cable ought to be built. I think it ought to be built, if it can be built, by American labor, from American materials, and through American capital. I will go that far with my friends on the other side. I do not know whether it can be; none has ever been made in the United States of this kind or character, but I do not doubt that it can.

But you must remember, Mr. Speaker, that I have not enumerated all of the cost. It has been shown, all the witnesses concur, that a vessel of peculiar make, unsuited for other uses, must be constantly kept for the purpose of frequent repairs. You must remember that perhaps there is no property in which man can invest more liable to deterioration, to harm, to destruction, than these cables stretching along upon the uneven bottom of the sea. There are precipices, mountain ranges, and often, we are told, a cable is suspended over a precipice, many thousands of feet in height, wearing against rocks and liable to be interfered with by animal life. It seems to me we ought to consider all these costs, probably certain, before we enter upon an enterprise of this kind.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I will yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. We are not only called upon to expend these sums, but one or two vessels are to be used, for how long I do not know, in making the necessary surveys. They cost something. They will make an aggregate of cost provided by this bill of at least $3,000,000.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will not the private corporation be obliged to incur the same expense, and do they not do it for the purpose of making a profit?

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe they do for the purpose of making prospective profits. I do not think anyone supposes that at first this will be a profitable enterprise. In time it will. Let me say further that I expect the corporations that propose to do this work for this sum expect subsidies elsewhere. They told us frankly that they did. At one time they expected $40,000 from Honolulu and $200,000 from Japan. They would not have thought of accepting $100,000 and embarking in this enterprise if it had not been for the additional subsidies, they told us frankly, they expected to get from other nations.

If we appropriate and authorize this $3,000,000, we certainly could not get that money for less than 4 per cent. We shall probably have to pay that, and there is $120,000 for interest. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars, which we would pay each year for this service between here and Honolulu, while we are offered for $20,000 less not only that service, but the added and more important service of the transmission of all our dispatches to the Asiatic coast. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] desires leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD; and as I can not yield further time, I will ask that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY] may have leave to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a few words, and then I will ask for a vote.

This is a proposition to build a cable at the expense of the United States Treasury from the Pacific coast to Honolulu. This is legislation which the Senate has put on a general appropriation bill by way of amendment. Now, if there were no other reason for opposing it, I would be against concurring with the Senate, because under correct parliamentary usage and with due regard to the rights of the House this bill is no place for such a proposition.

But there are other reasons. While some time, and I hope soon, a cable will be laid to Honolulu and beyond, it must be built after full consideration and legislation. Why, sir, what did we witness in this House a short time ago? The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], a member of that committee, took the best part of a day debating and disagreeing about what legislation should be had upon this subject, and the House came to no conclusion.

Yet, notwithstanding the House under those conditions has failed to pass a bill, the gentleman from Michigan, true to his convictions, thanks God that there is a Senate which, in regard to this amendment, agrees with him. Well, I will let the Lord and the Senate and the gentleman from Michigan work the matter out. [Laughter.] I thank the good sense of the framers of the Constitution and the good sense of the House that we are able to keep our rules and our parliamentary practice consistent.

"But," says some gentleman, "why do you not discuss the merits of the cable?" Well, I have not been able to come to a conclusion under the lead of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, and they have not been able, and the House has not been able. That is the reason.

Now, one word in conclusion. We are not ready to adopt this amendment even if it were not upon this bill, for the reason that this proposed cable takes us only to Honolulu—a single cable, at a cost of $3,000,000, and if, as claimed, a duplicate cable must be built, six millions.

Now, this project can wait until this House can come to a conclusion by a majority vote whether the best way is to spend $6,000,000 directly out of the Treasury for that cable (which carries us not more than one-fourth of the way to Manila) or whether this cable can under proper legislation be laid to the better advantage of the Government by private companies.

But I say again, let that matter be as it may, this bill is no place for this proposition; and I ask the House in these closing hours of the session to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan to concur, and then vote to insist upon our disagreement, so that the question can be put into conference and this great bill be settled. I now ask for a vote.

Mr. BERRY. Did you not promise the pretty Kanaka girl that you took to dinner at the Loun, at Hilo, that you were in favor of a close connection between this country and the Hawaiian Islands? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may understand my promises better than I do, but when he and I were down in Hawaii he was in that delightful condition that what he said himself he laid to somebody else. [Laughter.] I now ask the previous question.

Mr. CORLISS. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CANNON. I want to get this bill into conference. I have treated my friend from Michigan with every possible courtesy, but I must insist now upon a vote.

Mr. CORLISS. I am not complaining of the gentleman from Illinois, but I insist that I have a right to reply to some remarks of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CANNON. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

Mr. CORLISS. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The question being taken, the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. I rise to a question of personal privilege. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, a copy of which I now hold in my hand, I ask the Speaker whether it is not in order at any time for a gentleman to rise to a question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his question of privilege?

Mr. CORLISS. The gentleman from Iowa in his remarks on this floor stated that I had studiously withheld the fact, and never once here referred to it, that after the twenty annual payments the service here is to go on for all time.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point that this is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CORLISS. In other words, the gentleman from Iowa asserted that I had attempted to deceive the House. I insist that such remarks should not be permitted.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman from Michigan has any such idea, I withdraw the observation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman to recede and concur in the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CORLISS) there were—ayes 77, noes 102.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays; or first I will ask a vote by tellers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering a vote by tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. CORLISS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being 35 in the affirmative and 142 in the negative; the affirmative vote not being one-fifth of the whole number.

Mr. CORLISS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CORLISS. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if a quorum has voted?

The SPEAKER. There was a quorum voting.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to further insist on the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I now move, Mr. Speaker, that the House agree to the request for a conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following resolution, which I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that the conferees on the part of the House should not agree to the amendment numbered 88 in the sundry civil bill, increasing the compensation of the appraisers of customs at the ports of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Baltimore.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from New York is not in order. It is certainly not in order to instruct in such manner the House conferees.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the motion is in order, as a further conference has been ordered with the Senate.

Mr. MOODY. I am inclined to think, Mr. Speaker, that the motion is not in order, at least at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the motion is in order now.

Mr. PAYNE. The amendment of the Senate refers to the salary of certain Government officials at Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Chicago, and the resolution I have offered simply instructs the conferees as to the views of the House on those increases.

A MEMBER. What is the increase?

Mr. PAYNE. Each of the four officials at the places named has an increase, as proposed by this amendment, of $1,000 per annum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman know the salary now received by the collector at Boston?

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that it is about $3,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And what is the compensation at Chicago?

Mr. PAYNE. I have not the figures at hand and can not inform the gentleman exactly, but I think about the same.

But whatever the compensation may be, whether it be $3,000 in the one case and $6,000 in some of the other cases, as I think it is, this Senate amendment proposes an unusual and, in my judgment, an unnecessary increase. If these salaries are raised, the salary of every assistant appraiser should be raised, on the same principle.

I am opposed to the adjustment of salaries by an appropriation bill, as in this case. These are matters of legislation that should be considered and acted upon by both Houses after due deliberation. I do not know of one single employee in the United States service who ought to have his salary increased or who is not receiving more than he would receive in outside business.

I am opposed to the policy, which has been more or less pursued in Congressional legislation, of allowing a little more salary here and a little more salary there, which proceeding savors largely of favoritism and does not subserve any public interest. Where salaries are manifestly too small, legislation can readily be passed through both Houses to correct the injustice.

I did not like that provision in the bill the other day that gave every Government employee five days more leave of absence every year with pay while he was away. I do not believe it is right. I do not believe we should go into that sort of business. In fact, I do not know of any salary that ought to be increased, except perhaps the salaries of a few judges and the salaries of the members of the House of Representatives and the Senate. I think they are the poorest paid for the work they do of any Government employees.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. We are with you on that. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. And I do know that most Government employees receive twice and some of them three times as much as the same men would get outside, and if they were absent a day they would have to lose their time in these outside institutions.

I hope the House will make this instruction.

Mr. CLARDY. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MOODY. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts five minutes.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, in the very few words which I shall address to the House I do not desire to discuss the merits of this amendment. The only contention that I desire to make at this time is that the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] ought not, in justice to the members of the conference committee on the part of the House, to prevail. The Senate placed this amendment upon the bill in accordance with the rules of that body. The House conferees disagreed with the Senate amendment and reported the disagreement to the House, and under the lead of the gentleman from Illinois the House has insisted upon its disagreement and has agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate.

Now, the proposition of fact is just this, and upon that I shall say nothing except to state it: In the city of New York the chief appraiser gets $6,000. In these cities named the chief appraiser gets $3,000. The work is equivalent. It may be claimed that the pay ought to be equivalent, but I am not making any argument in regard to that. I do not like this method of legislating upon an appropriation bill. But we will meet that question when we reach it. I only want to state the exact question that is now before the House.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], not content with the action of the conferees in disagreeing to this amendment and reporting their disagreement to the House, not content with the fact that they have asked the House to further disagree to this amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate, desires to bind the conferees upon this small item, the only one selected out of all those in disagreement between the two Houses.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is a faithful public servant. He is certainly an economist. He certainly does not believe in agreeing to amendments that ought not to be agreed to. He has given no indication that he desires to do anything out of order. I do not know but he would consider this motion a reflection upon him and his colleagues upon the conference committee, of which I have the honor to be one. The only proposition I make is that the conferees ought not to be tied up. It is entirely unusual. The bill ought to go back to a full and free conference, and I think we can take care of it between the two Houses.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me I desire to say that I fully concur in the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and in giving expression to that sentiment I am making no reflection upon my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. In view of the numberless amendments that have been made by the Senate to this bill, I think that we are simply strengthening his hands by giving specific instructions upon some of these amendments of the Senate.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has said this is a small item. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that Chicago is included in this? Has the appraiser asked for an increase of his salary? Has the appraiser in Baltimore asked for an increase in his salary, or has the the appraiser in Philadelphia? Not at all. But because some individual in the city of Boston desires to have an additional thousand dollars of salary, an attempt is made to make a combination and to include a number of these appraisers in the various cities.

Now, I am opposed to that. My attention as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means has been called to the nature and character of the duties of these appraisers, and I say here $3,000 is a sufficient salary for the appraiser in the city of Boston and $3,000 is sufficient for the salary of the appraiser in the city of Chicago, and I trust that the members of this House, both Democrats and Republicans, will unite with my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and give specific instructions to the chairman of this committee and aid him in his honest and patriotic effort against the looting of the Treasury in this manner. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] such time as he desires.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to ascertain whether I understand the gentleman's proposition. As I understand it, the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is to instruct the House conferees to stand firm against a proposition to increase four salaries.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the substance of it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will take but half a minute.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Remember, I have but half a minute.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Do you think there would be any danger of these gentlemen resigning from those positions unless their salaries were raised?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know about that. I know that there are probably 10,000 patriots out in my friend's district and mine—

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I was going to suggest that there were thousands in my district who would take their places.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether these appraisers are getting too much or too little. I know that that has been the salary for many, many years. Now, I think I know another thing—that if there is anything to be done in the interest of the public it would be to reform the customs service. They have gotten districts, I do not know how many; but you can not get rid of them, because they create these offices. Now, my judgment is, this salary ought not to be increased; but after all, if it is the judgment of the House, I have no objection to the House saying so, and then no doubt the conferees would voice the House. That is all I want to say.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution of instructions was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the appointment of conferees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees Mr. CANNON, Mr. MOODY, and Mr. McRAE.

JOHN B. TURCHIN.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois, by unanimous consent, obtained leave that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5553) granting a pension to John B. Turchin, and to withdraw the bill from the files of the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BAKER of Illinois, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies thereof, the papers in the case of James S. Crawford, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, permission was granted to Mr. LENTZ to revise and extend his remarks made in the House on February 20, 1899, on the bill H. R. 12125.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLARK of Iowa, for this evening's session, on account of ill health.

FUNERAL SERVICE OF LATE LORD HERSHELL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 3, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you, for the information of the House of Representatives, that it has been arranged to hold a funeral service for the late Lord Herschell at St. John's Church at 5.15 p. m. on Saturday, the 4th instant.

At the request of his excellency the British ambassador, the attendance of the members of the House of Representatives is respectfully invited.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN HAY.

Hon. THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand there are one or two bills on the Speaker's table; after they have been disposed of I will move that the House take a recess.

ELIZABETH V. LITZENBERG.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4838) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth V. Litzenberg, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11712) to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska moves, on the same bill, to suspend the rules, nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and agree to a conference.

The question was taken; and two-thirds (in the opinion of the Chair) having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the House nonconcurred in the amendment of the Senate and agreed to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees Mr. MERCER, Mr. GILLET of New York, and Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, there are some matters on the Speaker's table that can go to conference. Pending that motion, I would like to call up one District bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion for a recess?

Mr. DOCKERY. What is it?

Mr. BABCOCK. They are little railroad bills.

Mr. PAYNE. I withdraw for the purpose of appointing conferees on that bill.

WASHINGTON AND GETTYSBURG RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9428) to authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, of Maryland, to extend their line of road into and within the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments; which were read.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur, and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TAMPA, FLA.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 414, "An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Tampa, Fla.," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same with amendments striking out the word "three" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID H. MERCER,

J. D. HICKS,

J. H. BANKHEAD,

Managers on the part of the House.

FRANCIS WARREN,

H. D. MONEY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agrees to the same with an amendment striking out the words "three" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two;" and the Senate agrees to the same, the effect of which is to increase the amount authorized by the act for the purchase and construction of said building from $100,000 to $250,000.

DAVID H. MERCER.

J. D. HICKS.

J. H. BANKHEAD.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes) the Speaker declared the House in recess until 8 o'clock in the evening.

The recess having expired, the House at 8 o'clock resumed its session.

RENUMBERING OF CERTAIN PARCELS OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 12184) to distinctively designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purpose of assessment and taxation, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish the gentleman from Wisconsin would explain what they are.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to renumber lots in subdivisions and blocks where they have had duplicate numbers which has resulted in a great deal of difficulty and trouble in the tax collector's office. For instance, in block 5 there may be two lots numbered 3, and I am advised by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that at this time many tax sales and many certificates are of these lots that have been sold owing to confusion of the numbers.

A particular Senate amendment strikes out a provision that before the deed goes on record there must be a certificate attached to the deed from the register stating that the description in the deed complied with the new numbers that will be placed on the different lots.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until half past 8.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes) the House took a recess until 8.30.

The recess having expired at half past 8, the House resumed its session.

CRIMINAL CODE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following conference report on bill H. R. 8571, an act to define and punish crime in the district of Alaska. The report is lengthy, and I ask that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there any statement of the conferees?

Mr. WARNER. There is no statement.

The SPEAKER. There should be a written statement accompanying the report.

Mr. WARNER. I will withdraw it and submit a written statement.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the report be read, and then the House can determine whether it will insist on a statement.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 8571, "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

In amendments numbered 55, 59, 68, 104, strike out the word "numbered" and insert in lieu thereof the abbreviated term "No. —."

And the Senate agree to the same.

V. WARNER,
HENRY R. GIBSON,
JOHN W. MADDOX,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEO. L. SHOUP,
THOS. H. CARTER,
S. R. MALLORY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that this report gives the House no light on the subject. I think I shall have to insist on a statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. WARNER] be permitted to make a statement on the floor in lieu of the written statement required by the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARNER. In excuse for not having a written statement I will say that the conferees only finished their work a few moments since, and the enrolling clerks said they must have this bill within twenty or thirty minutes or it could not be enrolled in time to become a law at this session. For this reason I have been unable to write the statement.

The amendments proposed to this bill are immaterial throughout. Most of them are mere changes in the numbers of sections and chapters. The most material amendment is this: On the original bill we adopted the local-option high-license law of the State of Illinois. The Senate preferred the license law of the District of Columbia for the reason that it has been construed by the Federal courts. The conferees on the part of the House acceded to this amendment of the Senate, and it has been adopted instead of the Illinois law. That is all there is in it.

The bill as amended does not create a single new office or provide for a single new officer beyond what the original bill contemplated. It does not impose one dollar of additional expense. It is substantially the original bill, with the exceptions I have mentioned.

Mr. OTJEN. Substantially the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. WARNER. Substantially the original bill as passed by the House and sent to the Senate. I now ask for a vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me a moment?

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Notwithstanding the crudities and errors in the code of Alaska, I think, in view of the fact that there can be no intelligent legislation upon any question in this House at this time, it is better "to take the evils we have than to fly to others that we know not of." Therefore, I am in favor of ratifying the action of the conference committee. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WARNER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF A LAW.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent for the printing of 1,000 additional copies of public law 163.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to know what that law is.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is the law for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it very desirable that there should be a reprint of that law, because almost everybody in the Territory wants a copy of it.

Mr. RIDGELY. I hope no one will object to this request. I am having calls for this law every day and can not supply them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present several privileged reports from the Committee on Accounts. I send to the desk a resolution reported by the committee which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $365.32 to Joseph H. Johnson, for services performed, under the direction of the Clerk, in the Clerk's document room, from July 9, 1898, to December 4, 1898, both dates inclusive; and the Clerk is hereby authorized to continue the employment of one folder in the Clerk's document room during the present session of Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund, at the rate of $75 per month.

The question being taken, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BULL. I am also directed by the committee to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to continue the eight additional folders now employed in the folding room and known as resolution folders for four months after the expiration of their present service, at a compensation of $75 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to know from the gentleman who reports this resolution what occasion there is for continuing these folders for four months after the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, there is a letter there from the Doorkeeper stating the necessity for these folders, and if any gentleman desires to have it read, I will ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman offering the resolution if that is usual.

Mr. BULL. This is the usual resolution, and I would state—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is it usual to retain eight?

Mr. BULL. Usually there have been fifteen, and this is a reduction from fifteen. If this passes, the number of folders will be reduced by seven.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why do not you retain the other seven?

Mr. JOY. To save money for the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the House commenced the reform a year ago—cutting off the seven men.

Mr. BULL. I move the passage of the resolution.

Mr. LOUD. I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of it whether it would not be better to have this run to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BULL. I am agreeable to that.

Mr. LOUD. I will offer that amendment, making it until the end of the fiscal year, instead of four months.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California offers an amendment to the resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "for four months after the expiration of their present service," and insert in lieu thereof the words "until the end of the present fiscal year."

Mr. BULL. I accept that, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

DOCUMENT AND BILL CLERK.

Mr. BULL. There is another resolution which I wish to present. I ask for the reading of the report which embodies the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred resolution No. 141, beg leave to make the following report:

Strike out, in line 10, after the word "year," the words "and that the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, instructed to provide for the annual salary of said clerk for the next fiscal year in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill;" so that the resolution will read as follows:

"Resolved, That S. D. Newcomb is hereby appointed document and bill clerk at the Clerk's desk in the House, under the direction of the Journal Clerk, to examine for reference and identification all bills, resolutions, and petitions presented to the Clerk, and that the said clerk shall be paid for such services the sum of $1,600 per annum. Said sum to be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives from the contingent fund of the House from December 6, 1897, until the close of the present fiscal year."

The resolution as amended met with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Accounts, and they recommend that it do pass.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask if that is an entirely new office created, a new position?

Mr. LOUD. I will state for the information of the gentleman that this is a new office and it is not. There has been a person detailed at the desk for some time to perform this work, and he has been paid the difference between the salary that he was receiving in the place to which he was originally appointed and the salary of this position in the general deficiency bill.

Mr. MOODY. I should like to ask the gentleman from California if he is in favor of this proposition or not?

Mr. LOUD. Well, that ought not to be satisfactory to the House, Mr. Speaker, even if I am.

Mr. MOODY. It would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. LOUD. If there is any one extra place in the House of Representatives that is needed, it is this one, and I hope that the Committee on Appropriations will hereafter incorporate in their appropriation bill a provision for a clerk in this place. He is needed, and there has been a person appointed as a folder who has been detailed every year to do this work.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is an entirely unnecessary office. In every department of the Government in the city of Washington there are at least one-third more employees than are actually necessary. They are actually in each other's way, and it looks as though this House has gone wild in the way of appropriations and creating new offices for special individuals, and I think the time has come when we should call a halt.

In every department, as I have said, at least one-third of the employees ought to be turned out and the other two-thirds made to do the work.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How about the members? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from Georgia can answer that question.

It seems to me as though the whole country wants to come in and feast and fatten upon Government pap. They come up and get in positions one day, and the next day they want their salaries increased. I think that we should call a halt. I am opposed to this resolution, and I hope, sir, that it will be voted down. It is unnecessary.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from California stated this whole case in a nut shell. This is a work that has been done and paid for. It is a work that must be continued and must be paid for. Heretofore it has been paid for in a roundabout and indirect way, sometimes on an appropriation bill and sometimes in another way. This simply makes it definite and fixes it. The work must be done, and it must be paid for.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that somebody has got to pay it. I do not hear anybody raise his voice here in favor of the taxpayers. The voices are all raised for the tax consumers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can not the gentleman hear his own voice? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from Minnesota can answer that for himself. I want to hear somebody say something in the interest of the taxpayer, to protect them from this greed, which has seemed to take possession of the House here in these closing hours of the session. The House seems to be going at breakneck speed in the way of appropriations.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the great difficulty with the House of Representatives, when it has these spasmodic efforts of economy, is that it generally lights upon the most deserving case that is presented to it. We have been expending thousands and millions of dollars probably in directions where it would have been well for the voice of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] to have been heard in opposition. I will say to the House again that if there ever has been any expenditure of money authorized and warranted by any act of this body, this is more deserving than any that has come before it.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from California alludes to me and says that I ought to have raised voice against some other appropriations. I will say to the gentleman that I am constitutionally opposed to appropriations except when they are necessary, and I have come here and opposed and voted against a great many of them. A great many times at midnight, nearly, when the gentleman from California was asleep, sweetly dreaming in fairy lands, I have stood up here and opposed the looting of the Treasury by bounty jumpers, coffee coolers, deserters, and camp followers.

Mr. PAYNE. This is a regular Friday night speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from New York has not attended regularly enough on Friday night, when he ought to have been standing by the soldiers, to know anything about my speeches. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Accounts, I want to add a word to what the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has said. This matter has been thoroughly investigated by that committee, and all the members of the committee are in favor of the proposition, Democrats and Republicans alike. I consider it the most meritorious proposition that has been submitted to our committee.

I am just as much in favor of economy in the administration of public affairs as is the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] or any other member on this floor, but the sentiments he has expressed do not fit this case. Here is a work which is in the nature of skilled work. It has been performed, and faithfully performed. It is in the interest and for the convenience of every member upon this floor that it shall be performed, and it has been well performed. No man without experience and special fitness could perform it as well. The salary of the gentleman who has been performing it, in the place to which he has been assigned on the roll, is only $60 a month.

He could not stay for that salary. He was promised that it should be brought up in this way to the amount named in this resolution. It has been done in this way year after year. It has been done in the interest of the public service and for the convenience of every member of this House. The work ought to be paid for.

When a measure comes up which it is proper to oppose, I shall be glad to join with the gentleman from South Carolina in the interest of economy. The principles he and I both advocate are more properly applicable to some of the items in these appropriation bills voting away hundreds of thousands of dollars for matters in which the Government has no interest whatever. This resolution simply provides for the just payment by the Government for services honestly and faithfully and well performed, as we all know, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. TALBERT. The work has been done heretofore for $60 a month, and it is now proposed to pay $150 a month.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman is mistaken. The compensation provided in this bill is just what has been paid year after year, and the amount above $80 per month has been covered each year by just such a resolution as this.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to point out to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] that it is hardly necessary for him to attack a little matter of this sort, in his own interest certainly, and possibly not even in the interest of the public. Now $60 a month is very small pay for a clerk in this House. Eight thousand votes in a Congressional district are a very small matter to stand behind a Representative in Congress. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

I hope my friend will understand that while he has all those votes—I suppose there is a population of some 170,000 there somewhere—I do not know where it is. But while he has all the votes except a few hundred mistaken, misled fellow-citizens whose votes have been scattered around on somebody else, it is not necessary for him, so far as he is personally concerned, to attack a little bit of an appropriation here on a motion of this sort. A cyclone might sweep through his district and yet he would be elected. Nobody doubts that. He has all the votes, and he has not very many at that. [Laughter.]

He is sound and all right on every one of these questions. Now, let us have a fair adjustment and a fair administration of the business of the House, and I am sure my friend, on further consideration, will withdraw his opposition to this matter and let it go through and take a great one where he may be imperiled sometime in the future—I think it will be a long time in the future.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to what the gentleman says—although really in everything he says here you can not tell whether he is a crow or a jackdaw talking from the voice. [Laughter.] I want to say that if the gentleman stands upon this floor and talks for political claptrap and plays the demagogue I have never attempted to do anything of the kind. [Laughter.] My record is that of an economist on this floor. [Laughter.]

I want to say further, that the gentleman need not go out of his way to insinuate anything in regard to the elections of the South or anywhere else. I want to say to the gentleman and to this House, say what you please, that what we have done we propose to stand by, and without any apology to make to a crow or a jackdaw or anybody else, and we will stand to it and see that it is carried out. [Applause.]

I would think the gentleman has been long enough on the floor that when he rises upon this floor he would address himself to the subject at hand instead of going out of his way and taking up side shows and making false statements, as he does upon nearly everything he talks about when he does talk to this House. [Laughter and applause.]

When the gentleman starts out, he is like the trail of a snake; you can not tell where he is going. He is like another little insect, that when you go out and see one you can not tell whether you have met him or overtaken him to save your life. [Laughter and applause.] I have never done anything to offend the gentleman, except on one occasion, when I gave him the name of Santa Claus, and I thought he had forgiven me for that long ago. I think the gentleman will now join me in opposition to this outrageous claim. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from South Carolina is a distinguished advocate of economy. The economy that has been manifested for a great many years in his district and the manner in which he gets his election is a sufficient indication that he is.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from South Carolina is responsible for everything he does and says, and the difference between him and the gentleman from Ohio is he does not make a statement upon the floor one day that the gentleman from Kansas can get up and prove he has lied the next. [Hisses on Republican side; applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I challenge the gentleman from South Carolina to make good his statement. That is a matter that gets a little bit serious; when he assumes on a little controversy on history and politics between the gentleman from Kansas and myself that I lied, he does that absolutely on his authority—

Mr. TALBERT. I simply did not call the gentleman's name. I have not said the gentleman lied. I only said I did not. Now you can make the most of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If you did say so—

Mr. TALBERT. I say if the cap fits the gentleman I can not help it. He must pull it down over his eyes. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from South Carolina is solely responsible for what he has said, and the gentleman will not question my word.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not give the gentleman's name. I did not say that it could be proved not to be true even. I did not say that it was not true, and I do not say so now. You can not get me to take back my words, and crawl as you will.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Crawl! Did I ever crawl?

Mr. TALBERT. Few other people can do it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. When the gentleman says that the gentleman from Kansas, undertaking to contradict me on a question of politics and history, proved—

Mr. TALBERT. I want to say to my good friend, let us stop this foolishness—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to say to him—

Mr. TALBERT. Let us stop this foolishness and go to business. We are wasting time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. When he says that I lie, the gentleman from South Carolina must assume the responsibility of his assault or else withdraw it. Does the gentleman state that the gentleman from Kansas has proved I was a liar? Does he stand by that?

Mr. TALBERT. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then take it back.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not say any such thing, and I won't take it back, because I did not say it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, if you did not say it, why do you repeat it?

Mr. TALBERT. In saying what I did I was not reflecting upon the gentleman or anybody else.

I said when I made a statement on this floor the gentleman from Kansas could not rise the next day and prove that it was false.

Mr. GROSVENOR (interrupting). Did you not assume the responsibility—

Mr. TALBERT (continuing). Now, if the gentleman takes that to himself, I am not responsible for it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do take it.

Mr. TALBERT. I disclaim saying anything disrespectful to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then why did you say what you did?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that both gentlemen may have leave to withdraw from the RECORD the discussion of the last five minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred resolution No. 300, beg leave to make the following report:

Strike out, on line 2, after the word "to," "continue Fred. W. Hedge" and insert in lieu thereof "appoint a;" so as to read:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a messenger in charge of the heavy mail wagon from March 4, 1899, to December 4, 1899, and that such messenger be paid by the Clerk of the House out of the contingent fund of the House at the same rate of compensation as now paid."

The resolution as amended met with unanimous approval by the Committee on Accounts, and they recommend that it be passed.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I present another resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred Resolution No. 305, beg leave to make the following report:

That the resolution be amended so as to read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, one month's extra pay to J. E. Hall, assistant clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs; H. H. Tedford, assistant clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; J. H. Garber, assistant clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs; and H. Brumm, assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims."

The resolution as amended met with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Accounts, and they recommend that it do pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, there was so much confusion on the floor that we could not hear the resolution. I would like some explanation from the gentleman.

Mr. BULL. The resolution places the four clerks mentioned in it upon the same footing as all the other clerks.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What four clerks?

Mr. BULL. The four clerks mentioned in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be again reported to the House.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether this provides an extra month's pay for all the assistant clerks?

Mr. BULL. It places these four clerks named in the resolution, who were appointed by resolution, on the same footing as the clerks who are appointed by the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. I desire to ask whether any provision has been made for the assistant clerks in the other committees?

Mr. BULL. This does not affect them.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to say that the assistant clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has been at work night and day, week in and week out, and I would like to know why that clerk is left out?

Mr. BULL. That clerk gets the extra month's pay under the law.

Mr. RAY of New York. If that resolution is to be debated here, I move an amendment to it, that the assistant clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions be included. I desire to say that we have had referred to that committee about 5,000 bills, and the assistant clerk to that committee has been at work night and day all through this session and all through last session, and must stay here a long time after the adjournment of this Congress.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that his assistant clerk has a regular assignment and is carried in the appropriation bill as one of the nineteen clerks. All the assistant clerks that are regularly assigned by resolution of this body are in the deficiency bill already provided for a month's extra pay. These four clerks are paid out of the contingent fund of the House. This resolution puts them on the same footing as the others.

Mr. RAY of New York. These are not regularly assigned clerks?

Mr. LOUD. No.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BULL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. BULL. I ask that the Clerk read the next resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to O. A. Harvey the sum of $300, the same being the difference between his pay as a messenger at $75 per month and that of a messenger at $100 per month during the present Congress.

Mr. BULL. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not move the previous question until he has told the House why it is necessary that this resolution granting increased pay to a House employee should be passed. Where the committee has considered a matter of this kind and unanimously agreed that the service rendered justifies extra pay I would not object, but I think when salaries are increased in this way we should have some explanation as to the necessity or justice of the increase.

I am not inclined to raise any issue with the Committee on Accounts when the members of the committee on both sides are unanimously of the opinion that the resolution reported is just and proper. Here is a man who appears to have served at $75 a month, and the proposition is to increase his pay to $100 a month. If there is any good reason for the increase I should be the last man to object to it. But I think there ought to be some uniform rule established, and that we ought to live up to it.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this officer was placed on the roll at $100 a month, but through an error he was reduced to $75 a month. For two months he drew $100 a month, and then, through an error, his pay was reduced.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How reduced, and by whom?

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. He signed a new pay roll through mistake. He was told that if he signed the new pay roll his pay would be the same as it had been theretofore. The object of this resolution is simply to give him the difference between the salary at which he was first appointed and the salary which was afterwards paid him through mistake.

Mr. RICHARDSON. May I ask whether this employee is on the Doorkeeper's roll?

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. I suppose he is. He at first drew pay at the rate of $100 a month, but, on signing a new pay roll, his pay was reduced $25.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. As I understand, he was appointed to the position at $100 a month?

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir, and was entitled to draw that pay.

Mr. LOUD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he should be entirely frank with the House. If this man has been on the Doorkeeper's roll, the Doorkeeper had the power of assigning or appointing him to such position as he saw fit. I know nothing about this case; but I have steadily and continuously opposed increases of this kind in what I suppose to have been cases of similar character.

Whatever position this man may have been originally appointed to—we will say it was at $100 or $150 a month; the amount is immaterial—the power that appointed him could reduce his pay, could appoint him to a subordinate position and appoint somebody else to the place that he had held. Such must be the fact of the case.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. I am informed and believe—and I speak just as frankly to this House as does the distinguished gentleman from California—that this man at first signed the pay roll at $100 a month. He supposed he was to continue to draw that salary, which he did draw for two months; and then, through a misapprehension, he signed a new pay roll, in consequence of which this reduction took place.

Mr. LOUD. How could there have been any mistake? The gentleman must be familiar with the method of the payment of clerks and employees of the House. Let me say to the gentleman again in all fairness that if this gentleman was appointed to a place at $100 a month and subsequently that place was given to somebody else, while he was assigned to a place at $75 a month, that is a matter which was within the power of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. I am not a veteran here, and can not speak in regard to the assignment of these places with the same familiarity as can the gentleman from California. But I know that an injustice has been done to this gentleman; that he has not drawn the salary that he was entitled to draw and that he did draw when he was first appointed. Who had the benefit of the difference between the amount he first received and the amount subsequently paid him I do not assume to say, but I do know that he expected to draw and did for two months draw $100 a month; and he fully expected that his salary would continue at the same rate. I think he was entitled to receive that amount.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Oh, I think I have explained the matter, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. RIDGELY. I simply wanted to know if this man continued to perform the same kind of work?

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. He did.

Mr. RIDGELY. All the way through?

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BULL. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EUDORA HILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk. It is a House bill giving leave to an Indian woman to sell a portion of her allotted lands.

The bill (H. R. 10771) for the relief of Eudora Hill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Eudora Hill, a member of the Wyandotte tribe, to whom was allotted the east half of the northwest quarter of section 19, in township 27 north, of range 24 east of the Indian meridian, in the Indian Territory, as a part of her allotment, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to sell, mortgage, transfer, or convey all her right, title, and interest in and to said land to whomsoever she may desire.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this woman is a member of the Wyandotte tribe—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is this a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand a second.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this woman for whose relief this bill is introduced is a Wyandotte Indian woman owning certain lands in Montana. Because of the condition of the health of her husband she has been obliged to move to Colorado, and the bill simply gives her the permission, which she would otherwise not have, to dispose of the land or a portion thereof.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Has this been considered by a committee of the House?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HULL. Of the House?

Mr. SHERMAN. Of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 9 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.), the House took a recess until 10 p. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 10 o'clock p. m., resumed its session.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES ON THE LATE NELSON DINGLEY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the eulogies upon the late Nelson Dingley, a Representative from the State of Maine, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report. The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11083) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
A. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. B. ALLISON,
S. M. CULLOM,
F. M. COCKRELL,

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the committee of conference have further considered the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and have made no progress whatever on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The Senate conferees are unwilling to agree to the instructions under which we went over there relative to electric lights. They expressly stated that they never would agree to that, and of course the House conferees felt that they could do nothing but bring the proposition back for the consideration of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks, if the House conferees were discharged and a new set of conferees were appointed, that any better progress could be made with the Senate?

Mr. GROUT. Well, that is hardly a question for me to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wanted to challenge the gentleman's attention to the fact that on this electric-lighting business of which he speaks, as I remember his position, he was in accord with the Senate.

Mr. GROUT. Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman did not correctly understand me.

Mr. HOPKINS. If I have done the gentleman an injustice, I am sorry for it. That was the impression I had; and if no progress has been made, it seemed to me that we ought to have somebody on the committee who would carry out the views of the House and reach some conclusion. [Applause.]

Mr. GROUT. Now, you shall see how unadvisedly the gentleman speaks—

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it a fact that the amendment reduces the price of electric lighting here to general consumers from 15 cents to 8 cents?

Mr. GROUT. That is the proposition; yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Or, in other words, cuts the compensation in two?

Mr. GROUT. Not quite, but nearly so.

Mr. BABCOCK. No; it does nothing of the kind.

Mr. PAYNE. Does it reduce it from 15 cents to 8 cents?

Mr. BABCOCK. It does in some cases, and in others it increases it from 4½ cents to 8 cents. In some cases it reduces it from 15 cents to 8 cents, and from 12 cents to 8 cents. In others it increases it from 7½ to 8.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin can not mean that. It did not raise any rate. It fixes a maximum rate. They have special rates for large consumers always, as in the Treasury Department and elsewhere, a low rate. He does not mean that it raises the rate anywhere. Now, unless the gentleman from New York wants to ask a question—

Mr. PAYNE. I do. I would like to know on what basis the House acted when they decided that the present rates were double what they ought to be, whether there was any investigation as to the earnings of the company, the profits of the company, the cost of the electricity, or any question of that kind? Was any such thing decided or presented to the House, or did the House vote without that information?

Mr. GROUT. No such data were presented or considered, I will state for the information of the gentleman.

Now, with reference to my friend behind me here, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], who speaks about the House conferees agreeing with the Senate, I will ask him, did we not bring in a disagreement with the Senate amendment? Most assuredly we did.

How, then, can the gentleman say that the conferees are agreeing with the Senate? Did we not expressly say that we would not agree to the proposed extension of conduits unless the rates were reduced from what they now are? Why does the gentleman then say we are agreeing with the Senate conferees? How much better it would be to be more fully informed, or else to speak more cautiously, one or the other.

I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that we carried the instructions of the House over to the Senate conferees, and that we stood by them notwithstanding their persuasion to get us to agree upon some other proposition.

We said, "We are the agents of the House, and we bring this proposition to you." They simply repudiated it absolutely and completely. What else could the conferees do but bring the proposition back to the House?

Mr. CANNON. Now will my friend allow me to ask him a question. I understand the instructions of the House are $75 for arc lights.

Mr. GROUT. Seventy-two.

Mr. CANNON. Six dollars a month for arc lights, and not exceeding 8 cents per thousands watts for incandescent lights?

Mr. GROUT. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. You have been unable to get an agreement in accordance with the provisions of the instructions of the House. I want to ask the gentleman whether they are unable to get an agreement to strike it all out?

Mr. GROUT. That was proposed by my associate on the conference committee [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. CANNON. And you were not able to agree?

Mr. GROUT. They were unwilling to strike it out.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask my friend whether he thinks, if this instruction was taken off, he could get an agreement that is reasonable?

Mr. GROUT. I do not know whether it would be reasonable or not, but something like one or two points higher per thousand watts. Nothing has been expressly said that the Senate would agree to 10 cents per watt hour; but there is another feature to the instructions given to which the gentleman has not alluded here. It imposes a tax of 4 per cent on the gross earnings, and that they repudiated altogether as not to be considered at all.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I want to ask my friend further, because I know his familiarity with this bill, and his fidelity to the instructions of the House, and his ability as its representative—I want to ask him whether, in his opinion, the conferees should be sent back to the Senate without instructions, to make such an agreement as they saw proper for the consideration of the House?

Mr. GROUT. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a delicate question to answer. I think if we were not bound by instructions—I will speak for myself—I should be inclined to agree upon a rate upon incandescent current somewhat larger than 8 cents.

Mr. GAINES. About how much larger?

Mr. GROUT. Possibly 2 cents larger; not exceeding 10 cents for that current anyway, I will say; and I do not know that I would that. I can hardly tell. If the Senate would yield to 9 cents, I would try to get it; but I hardly think they would yield.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Before that I want to say, in my judgment, that at this stage of the Senate the instructions given to the House conferees ought to be rescinded. I know them both, and I am not afraid, so far as I am concerned, to trust them, they knowing what the temper of the House is; and under existing conditions I believe they ought to be sent back without instructions.

Mr. GAINES. Now, will the gentleman from Vermont yield to me for a question?

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES. You remember, in the course of the former debate on this question, some valuable data were brought out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]. He told us that they were authentic and official. Now, did you carry those data into the committee and discuss it?

Mr. GROUT. I said before the arrival in conference of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]—he was a little late—what was stated here on the floor when we brought in the other report. I stated to them further facts which had come to my knowledge which would carry the rates even below what the gentleman stated on the floor.

Mr. GAINES. Below what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES. What objection did they have to this?

Mr. GROUT. They said, "It is not a conference, but you have come over here with an ultimatum."

Mr. GAINES. Did they have any facts?

Mr. GROUT. They said it was only the opinion or statement of some one who knew no better about it than they did.

Mr. GAINES. A mere dictum on their part without any facts.

Mr. GROUT. Now I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK].

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment does not raise the question of rates or price for electric lighting, but what they propose to relinquish is the one thing that Congress has held sacred and distinct for a hundred years, and that is the control of the streets of the city of Washington.

The combination which is about to be formed of the electric-light companies and other corporations of the city of Washington is asking you to vote to-night to give them the right to extend their conduits in any street, alley, or public park in the city of Washington.

Now, that proposition the House meets with a counter proposition, "Gentlemen, if you want these rights, if you want us to give you all the privileges we have to give, then make rates that will protect the public." Now, what are proper rates? I do not concede that this is the proper time, I do not concede that this is the bill, in which this matter should be considered.

But the difficulty is that this same question has been on every appropriation bill since I have been in Congress, and it was only when I appealed to the Appropriation Committee here and asked them to eliminate and let the gas question alone that the Committee on the District of Columbia succeeded in reducing the price of gas to $1.10 and $1 per thousand.

Now, I will show you what they are getting for electric current in the city of Washington, and then, gentlemen, you can judge whether these rates are enough or not. It was shown on the floor of the House, from the books of the gas company, by their own sworn statement and their own figures, that it costs them 68 cents per thousand to make, distribute, and deliver gas.

You authorized them to charge $1.10 for five years, and at the end of five years to reduce to $1 per thousand. Now, under this provision, you gave them an advance of about 50 per cent over the cost. What is the cost of the electric-light current? The Potomac Company bid on and secured the contract for lighting the Treasury Department at 4 cents per thousand watts.

Mr. GROUT. Four and a half cents.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Vermont says 4½ cents, and I accept the correction, but that is not material. This was a lower bid than that put in by the other company, and what did they do? Did they furnish the current?

No. They sublet the contract to the United States Electric Light Company for a less sum, and the Potomac Company is collecting the money from the Government and paying the United States Company for a current furnished at a less sum than 4½ cents, and putting the profits in their pocket.

Now, I submit this proposition to the House: If the electric current is worth 15 cents, why should the United States Company take a subcontract at a less sum than 4½ cents?

Another statement which I did not care to make on the floor: It is private, coming from the books of a large corporation here, and I hoped that I would not be forced to make it; but in the construction that is now about completed, a great plant is being built by the United States Electric Light Company at an expense of more than $400,000. They have one of the greatest consulting engineers in the United States, Mr. Frank Sargent, of Chicago, who constructed the electric-light works for the World's Fair and other great institutions in different parts of the United States.

Now, in the contract made with Mr. Sargent, which is a written contract, he has 5 per cent on the cost of this construction, and he enters into a guaranty to furnish electric currents at a cost of less than 2½ cents per thousand watts.

This includes the coal, the labor, and all the expenses necessary in developing this current, except the interest on the plant and the fixed charges, like taxes and matters of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. Does that include wear and tear?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say, if my friend will allow me, right there—

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I will be through.

Mr. CANNON. It was at this point that I wanted to say what I have to say. While I have not a great familiarity with the matter, I think I have enough familiarity to know that that statement as to the cost is absolutely misleading. I want to state to my friend, further, that while I have given no particular attention to this investigation in connection with Washington, yet with the price of coal as I understand it to be here, and considering the wear and tear, it can not be produced for three times that amount.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Illinois is making a statement that is entirely wild; and I made my statement from facts and figures. This statement is based on coal at $9.14 a ton, and based upon the usual price paid for employees connected with such an establishment, and all other necessary expenses, excepting fixed charges like wear and tear and interest on the plant, which would not be an item to exceed 10 per cent.

Another word right here. This is the limit—2½ cents per thousand watts. But the gentleman says that he will produce it for less than 2 cents—that the plant will do it for less than 2 cents.

But I will concede that that estimate is 50 per cent out of the way, and then it would make only 3½ cents. The limit in the instructions to the conference committee is 8 cents; that is more than 100 per cent profit, and out of that must come the interest on the plant, also wear and tear, as the gentleman from Illinois says.

Mr. GAINES. How much did you put the coal in at?

Mr. BABCOCK. Two dollars and fourteen cents per ton.

Mr. GAINES. And we have got mountains of it in Alabama and Tennessee for 80 cents a ton. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And it would cost $3 to ship it here.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is another question this House should consider. I am advised that the maximum rate for one company is 12 cents and the other company is 15 cents, and that contracts are made all the way from 4 cents to 15 cents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to this House that we represent the interest of 300,000 people in the District of Columbia, and is it any reason that this company of its own choice should furnish the Government current at 4 cents and charge the private consumers almost four times as much?

Now, we have provided in a previous law that the Government should have gas at 10 cents a thousand less than private consumers, which the committee considered a sufficient reduction for large consumers.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me an interruption in order that the House may understand this question? It is said that certain consumers are supplied at 4½ cents.

I think the gentleman should inform the House that that is for light by day and not for light by night.

It is admitted on all hands, I believe, that an electric-light company or a gas company is able to supply light during the day at a very much less price than during the night.

Mr. BABCOCK. Electric lights are burned at the Capitol and in other buildings, of course, during the day. But it costs so many pounds of coal to develop a horsepower. One horsepower is equivalent to 760 Watts; and whether the light is furnished during the day or during the night, it takes just so much energy to produce the required current.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a duty to perform here. The House is not asking anything, but the Senate comes to us with a proposition to give away all the rights that have heretofore been secured to the Government in our streets. And after we do that, how shall we be able to secure proper rates?

A MEMBER. If nothing be done, what will be the result?

Mr. BABCOCK. Present conditions will exist.

Now, the point I make is just this, that we must insist upon present conditions until proper legislation is enacted or else abandon our right to the control of these beautiful streets.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman read to the House the language in which, as he states, Congress is asked to give up all the rights we have in the streets of the District?

Mr. BABCOCK. The amendment incorporated in this bill is but one portion of the amendment proposed to be put on in the Senate. I have a copy here. It has been reported in the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. How can the Senate put anything more in the conference report than is there now?

Mr. GROUT. I think I can explain that matter. This amendment is for the benefit of the United States Electric Lighting Company, which has conduits down that are too small. The company wishes to take up those conduits and enlarge them.

As an illustration of the situation, I explained to the House, when this matter was up before, the company can not at present carry a strong enough current into the Arlington Hotel to light it fully. As the law now stands the Potomac Company can not get in there at all.

Now, it is proposed to let the United States Company come in and lay larger conduits and carry larger currents of electricity. But the House conferees say that we should not extend their rights in any way until proper rates are fixed; that when such rates are fixed these new privileges should be extended to both companies. That is the position of the House conferees in this matter.

Mr. GAINES. But the gentleman from Wisconsin stated that these companies were all going to consolidate.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to add one thing more. As I have already said, Congress for more than one hundred years has jealously guarded the right of the Government to these streets. They belong in fee simple to the United States Government, not to the District of Columbia.

The privileges which are asked by these companies would, if put up at auction, bring $1,000,000 in gold to-day.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield for a question.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. This is a proposition, as I understand, to allow this company to lay certain conduits—

Mr. BABCOCK. All companies.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And now you propose to safeguard this franchise by fixing a maximum limit on the charges for electric-light service—

Mr. BABCOCK. That is it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And a failure on the part of the House and Senate to agree would leave the streets unoccupied for the purposes proposed, and no detriment would result to the people.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly—none whatever.

Mr. GROUT. They would not have the electric-light service.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And they now have some?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, in a limited way, but desire it in a much larger way.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then the gentleman in charge of the conference report agrees with the conclusion expressed by the gentleman from Wisconsin that if the House adheres to its instruction to the conferees and the Senate fails to assent the only harm will be that the people who do not now have electric-light service will not get it.

Mr. GROUT. It leaves matters just as they are now.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman in charge of the bill has said that one measure particularly objectionable was the 4 per cent tax on gross receipts. I would like to ask whether this company is now paying any tax to the District of Columbia, except such as may be paid on the real estate it owns?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand the tax paid is very small. But I do not think it so important that that provision should be retained in the bill, because we can regulate that matter hereafter; but in view of the rumored consolidations about to take place, I believe, as I said here yesterday, that this is the last opportunity Congress will have to fix the rates for electric-light service in the city of Washington.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it be a fact, as he has apparently and to me satisfactorily demonstrated, that the rate paid to these companies is far beyond a reasonable rate, and, in view of the fact that they refuse to be competitors and are in effect a combination, whether it would not be the part of wisdom for the Committee on the District of Columbia to provide for the lighting of this city by a plant organized by the Government?

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe it would, and I have advocated that for years—the purchase of the Great Falls water power and the establishment of a plant of our own.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then is it not best now not to commit to these companies any permanent contract, or price, or franchises whatever, and next December to take hold of it and see whether we can not operate a model organization of this kind in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe that is correct. [Applause.]

Mr. GROUT. Now I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have been able to hear but little of the debate on the other side. The confusion has been so great that it has not been possible to hear.

I think my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] unintentionally did the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] an injustice. The gentleman from Vermont and myself differ as widely as the poles on political questions, but upon all these matters relating to the regulation of corporations in this District and the fixing of rates he has always stood for the interest of the people and the interest of the Government.

There is a controversy between the Senate and the House. The Senate offers a proviso which gives to the United States Electric Lighting Company the privilege to repair, enlarge, and extend their conduits. The effect of the proviso is obviously in the interest of the United States Electric Lighting Company. Whatever privileges are just should be granted alike to both of the companies operating here.

Now, then, these companies desire to secure certain privileges that they do not now enjoy—the enlarging and extending of their conduits. Coming to Congress and asking privileges, Congress should demand of the companies a reduction of the exorbitant rates they have been charging the people of this city and the Government.

I think it will facilitate an agreement on the bill if the House should release the conferees from this instruction.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman has had large experience on conference committees. Is not this the rule on all conference committees, that the House proposing new legislation on an appropriation bill must recede if the other House stands firm?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true.

Mr. HULL. Then why not let them recede from their amendment and leave this question as it was before?

Mr. DOCKERY. The House conferees will undoubtedly adhere to that position, as we have already, unless we can secure reasonable rates for the Government and the people. These companies desire the privilege of enlarging and extending their conduits so as to enlarge the scope of their business and increase their profits.

Now, I am quite willing that this privilege should be accorded to both the companies, provided we can secure an agreement at the same time to a reduction of rates. Of course, if we can not secure a satisfactory reduction, then the Senate amendment must fail, under the rule to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has referred.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does not our House provision require a tax on the earnings to be paid into the Treasury?

Mr. HULL. The instructions require that.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is there not an instruction to that effect?

Mr. DOCKERY. There is.

Mr. RIDGELY. What is that provision?

Mr. DOCKERY. Four per cent.

Mr. RIDGELY. On the gross earnings or the net earnings?

Mr. DOCKERY. On the gross earnings.

Mr. RIDGELY. And the Senate is unwilling to concede that.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Senate is unwilling to concede that.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do you think the House ought to remove that instruction from the committee?

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I think if we want to pass this bill before noon to-morrow, there must be some concession.

Mr. RIDGELY. Do not you think possibly we had better not pass it and wait until next December than to yield everything?

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, yes, if we have to yield everything, perhaps I would take that position, but that is not the issue.

Mr. RIDGELY. That is my position exactly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the question asked by the gentleman from Iowa, if the House stands firm on this proposition the Senate amendment goes out and the bill does not fail.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then does not the gentleman from Missouri think it is better, on as important a question as this to the people in this District and to the taxpayers, that we should let it go out until we have more time to consider it, than to make an agreement in the closing hours of the Congress, when we can not be fully informed and it can not be fully understood?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will state very frankly that under ordinary circumstances I should say to the Senate, "You must yield as to this amendment;" but I feel sure that unless we avail ourselves of this opportunity to secure a reduction it will be years before Congress secures a reduction of rates to the people.

Mr. GAINES. Why could we not do it next fall just as well?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman knows the difficulty of passing independent bills. Suppose that the House passes a bill for a reduction of rates along the line of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Being an independent bill, it goes to the Senate, and the chances are, judging by our experience in the past, that the bill would sleep in some pigeonhole. In other words, all the relief we have secured for the taxpayers of the District has been on an appropriation bill.

We have reduced charges for lighting one-half in the last five years on appropriation bills. All these independent measures that go to the Senate sleep the sleep that knows no waking. That is the history of such legislation, and probably will be the history in the next Congress, if legislation is attempted upon an independent bill.

Now, then, the question is whether we shall abandon the Senate amendment and get nothing for the people, or secure a compromise that will reduce the burdens upon the people and upon the Government to a considerable extent.

Mr. GAINES. Are not the people crying out for this reduction?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. Is there any objection to the extension of these privileges asked by these companies?

Mr. DOCKERY. There is. I do not want to give them—

Mr. SWANSON. I do not mean on the question of rates and the question of taxes, but is there any objection to extending these conduits?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly I object to it, and the House conferees object to it, because we do not want to give them the privilege of increasing their income without at the same time securing a reduced rate for the people.

Mr. RIDGELY. Another question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RIDGELY. I believe that the gentleman from Wisconsin stated that this amendment that the Senate asks us to accede to will virtually give a monopoly of the streets to one company?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, well, we do not propose to do that. So far as the House conferees are concerned, we do not propose to give a monopoly to the United States Electric Lighting Company.

Mr. RIDGELY. My understanding is that there are two companies now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is there any provision to keep them from consolidating into one company?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Wisconsin says they intend to consolidate. I do not know what the law as to trusts may be. I suppose there is some sort of an anti-trust law in the District; and if it is the usual law, it is not enforced. But I think it is an open secret here, or at least I hear the suggestion, that it is in contemplation for these electric light companies and the gas company to organize a trust at an early date.

Mr. RIDGELY. And they will be consolidated into one company virtually?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the suggestion that comes to me. It may not be authentic, but I believe there is a project on hand to organize a trust. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for a question.

Mr. McEWAN. I think the gentleman says that this can be brought up and acted upon in an independent bill. Now, will not there be appropriation bills next session whereby we can get this same thing brought up in the same way that we now have it. If so, it only postpones it, as gentlemen say, and we can have proper rates, both in regard to charges and franchise tax.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, there will be appropriation bills next session. The Government must live.

Mr. McEWAN. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. And somebody may offer an amendment to it, but under the rules of the House, as they stand now, legislation would not be in order on an appropriation bill at this end of the Capitol.

Mr. McEWAN. How was it in order at this time?

Mr. DOCKERY. It was not in order. This is a Senate amendment. Such an amendment as this would not be permissible under the rules of the House when the bill was under consideration in the House.

Mr. HULL. I want to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. If it is true as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, let the Senate recede and let the bill pass as it should, without tying the Government up in the future.

Mr. GROUT. They do not propose to do it. If they had hinted at that, we should have at once tried to secure a settlement of the question.

Mr. HULL. It is a well-settled rule that the House that proposes new legislation on an appropriation bill must recede.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I have told the gentleman from Iowa why we were trying to secure some adjustment of this matter.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman from Ohio said a while ago that we had better not legislate at all upon this proposition now, but next session bring in a measure and get the Government to erect an electric-light plant to do all the lighting. The question I want to ask is this: Is there anything in this bill that will prevent the Government from doing that at any time it chooses, if it should desire to do so?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly not, because the House conferees distinctly stated to the Senate conferees that if any adjustment was made it must be accompanied with a proposition to reserve the right to alter, amend, or repeal the provision.

Mr. BRUMM. Then you do not give away an eternal franchise as against the Government?

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, certainly, the House conferees would not think of agreeing to such a proposition.

Mr. GAINES. You have stated this question, and you gave some reasons why the settlement had not been made. For instance, the dilatory action of the Senate.

If we do not concede now, or it is conceded now, it is proposed to exact rates in consideration of our transferring the streets. If we do not transfer the streets, and defer the matter until next session, what besides the dereliction of the Senate will prevent it being done?

Mr. DOCKERY. Assuming the House would act, there would be nothing. Now I will yield to my colleague for a question.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman has said we give away no permanent right. Of course I know the gentleman was referring to the fact at that time that we can alter and amend and therefore fix the rates. But does he not understand that when we give away the right to put in the streets these conduits, they become permanent improvements, that they are never taken up, and they become great investments, and we have given away a permanent right so far as that investment is concerned, and we can only fix the rates afterwards, as he has said, by an individual bill that must meet the approval of both Houses?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will ask unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, print the bill with the number of the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the Senate amendments may be printed and numbered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. BARNEY, and Mr. LIVINGSTON.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, a word in reply to the question of my colleague. The trouble is the electric-light companies have the streets now. This proposition is to only extend their conduits in certain directions in the District and into the suburbs, but it is not true that either one of the companies enjoys a monopoly. Other companies may come in here and establish a business.

The Potomac Electric Light Company did come here under a charter from the State of Virginia and set up shop to do business. The United States Company tried, by injunction, to drive them out, but the courts held in favor of the new company. And because of the advent of the new company we have been able by competition to effect a large reduction in the rates paid for electric lighting.

The question is this, whether you will maintain the status quo and not extend the conduits at all, and trust to the future for legislation reducing the rates, or whether on this bill you will give them the right to extend the conduits into the suburbs, at the same time reducing the rates charged by the companies, reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. OLMSTED. Can the gentleman tell us, or can the committee tell us, how the maximum rates suggested by the House or by the House conferees compare with the rates in other cities of about the same size as Washington?

Mr. PAYNE. Where they have underground conduits.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; where they have underground conduits.

Mr. GROUT. The rates in Boston, New York, and Chicago, and Philadelphia, I think, although I am not certain about Philadelphia, are 20 cents per kilowatt hour. They are too much, I have no doubt.

Mr. GAINES. Is it the same kind of lighting?

Mr. GROUT. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask my friend if he is satisfied that if this committee can go back without instructions we could get an agreement at the rate of 10 cents per kilowatt hour?

Mr. GROUT. I think we can.

Mr. CANNON. And get an agreement on arc lights for $6 a month?

Mr. GROUT. I think so.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman make any agreement that we shall not retain complete control and power to change or alter these rates, or otherwise dispose of this corporation as it sees proper?

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman may be sure that the committee will take care of the reserved rights of the people in that respect as well as they know how.

Mr. CANNON. Now, another question. I ask my friend if the substantial maximum now per kilowatt hour is not 15 cents?

Mr. GROUT. It is.

Mr. CANNON. What is the rate for arc lights?

Mr. GROUT. Ninety-one dollars and twenty-five cents a year.

Mr. CANNON. So, if you can go without instructions, you are satisfied you can reduce the maximum rate from 15 cents to 10 cents per kilowatt hour, and for arc lights from $91.25 to $72 per year?

Mr. GROUT. I hope to be able to do that.

Mr. RIDGELY. But will our committee yield the 4 per cent tax on the gross income?

Mr. GROUT. For the sake of an agreement, you mean?

Mr. RIDGELY. Yes.

Mr. GROUT. We might, if we could not help it.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then our committee will yield to them two or three hundred per cent profit, as proved by competent experts?

Mr. GROUT. I do not know about that.

Mr. PAYNE. Where are your experts?

Mr. GROUT. The apostle of this tax, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], says that it is of far more importance to carry the cheap service to the people which we are struggling to obtain, and on this point I want to back up what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] said about the reduction of rates for electric lighting.

I want the House to understand that since 1891 this committee has been at work on this subject and has reduced the price per arc light from 50 cents to 25 cents per night, cutting down the price one-half. In other words, from $182.50 per night to $91.25 per night.

A MEMBER. How were you able to do that?

Mr. GROUT. Because that related to the public lighting, of which we had entire control. In view of that record, I do not think gentlemen need have any apprehension that this committee will give away the rights of the people in this respect.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Missouri entirely misunderstood my statement to the gentleman from Vermont if he thought I was impugning the honesty of that gentleman. No man in this House has a higher respect for the gentleman from Vermont than I, or appreciates more his sterling, rugged honesty, which has been demonstrated in this House again and again.

What called forth my remark was the attitude of the gentleman on this question—the fact that he differed from the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, whose business it is to look into matters of this kind and enlighten members of the House on all these local questions. When that question was up the gentleman in charge of this conference report [Mr. GROUT] differed in toto, as I understood him, from the views expressed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GROUT. That is entirely a misstatement. I agreed with him that we should not concede any of these rights until we had secured fixed rates. I did not want to have the conferees instructed, which I said would be carrying an ultimatum to the Senate conferees. I held that under such circumstances, our hands being tied, there could not be a conference in the proper sense of the term. I objected to being thus fettered. That is all. The gentleman did not understand me correctly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am very glad to get this statement of the gentleman's position.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman will find by the RECORD that it is the position I originally took.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understood the gentleman to say—I was near him, but I may have misheard, and I am very glad to be corrected—I understood him to say that the price fixed by the House was too low, and that the Senate would not agree to it. Of course, if that was his view, he was not in a position to present properly, with his usual ability and influence, the merits of this question. That was what called forth my remark.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the position in which we find ourselves is brought about by an attempt on the part of the Senate to place legislation on a general appropriation bill. This very question which we are considering is one entirely foreign to the scope and powers of the Committee on Appropriations. It is not the function of that committee to create law—to authorize great corporations to engage in business in this city or to permit corporations to combine in a trust.

Their business is simply to take the law as it exists and make appropriations accordingly. But in this conference report we are confronted by an attempt on the part of the Senate to originate legislation which not only permits these electric-light companies to combine with each other, but the scope and character of the language is such that they can combine with the gas companies so as to control the entire lighting of this city.

Another thing which I desire to bring to the attention of members of the House is this: The Senate amendment, as it originally came to the House, was limited to three lines and a half as it appears on this appropriation bill. That amendment was disagreed to. But the Senate is not content with that.

As I understand from the gentleman from Wisconsin, and he is corroborated in that statement by the gentleman in charge of this conference report, the Senate proposes an amendment covering an entire page which gives these companies the power to extend their service all over the streets of this city, in the public parks, and everywhere else. As the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, the occupation of the streets is a matter that Congress has heretofore guarded, compelling every corporation desiring any privilege in this respect to come to Congress.

It seems to me that this item permitting the extension of these privileges over streets not heretofore occupied and over the public parks is the pith and point of the difference between the House and the Senate. Now, as the Senate understand that the rules of the House permit no new legislation upon appropriation bills, it seems to me highly proper for the House to insist upon the instruction already given the conferees. Let them go back to the Senate and say that if they desire legislation of this kind it must be presented to Congress by the duly authorized committees of the House and Senate, that they must not attempt to get legislation of this sort on an appropriation bill.

And if the Senate should adhere to its amendments and permit the bill to fail, let that body take the consequences. The House can afford to stand by a position which is right in principle and sustained by precedent. [Applause.]

Mr. GROUT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McEWAN].

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, this House did not go to these companies and ask them to extend their pipes or conduits. The companies came to Congress and asked for this privilege. It seems to me that the House conferees could very well say to the Senate conferees that these corporations who are asking the Senate to put the provision in question on the bill must make some concessions for this valuable right they seek.

Our conferees are in a position also to say that the District can get along without the proposed extension, and that no great harm will come to the city if this matter be delayed another year. If it be for the sole pecuniary benefit of these companies to have these extensions, new conduits, then they ought in all justice to make some compensation to the public for these privileges. But they are not willing to do so.

Even in the most conservative States, and some of the largest of them in point of area, population, and wealth, and in the cities therein, by its adoption it is now admitted to be a proper principle to charge a franchise tax. If it were left to me to legislate upon this matter, I would not consent to anything in this conference unless the companies conceded all that would meet the just expectations of our people in exchange for these very valuable rights.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] rightfully said when once we yield these rights we can not get them again for the people, however valuable they are or may become. If they are valuable, they should not be given for nothing. We have no right, as just stewards, to do so. We ought not to give anything away that belongs to another—in this case to the people. We have no right whatever to give up public property—and franchises are a species of public property—unless we get some revenue in return for these valuable franchises.

Again, it has been shown by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that there is an amendment proposed by the Senate by which all these streets can be taken by these companies. If we levy a franchise tax upon the gross or net receipts of the companies, as this business expands and their profits grow by reason of this extension, then the franchise tax will grow accordingly, and that, I believe, is the right principle in matters of this kind—to have the revenue to the Government increase as the profits increase to the holders of the franchises.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word, and a word only. The streets are for the public; and if the public is better served by having conduits laid in them, why, then, we ought to lay them. I want to say further that now, as I am credibly informed, the maximum rate for electric lighting is 15 cents per kilowatt hour and $91 a year for each arc lamp.

Now, the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. GROUT] says that he is satisfied that we can get an agreement reducing the rate from 15 cents to 10 cents per kilowatt hour, and from $91 a year to $75 a year—

Mr. GROUT. Seventy-two dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Seventy-two dollars a year for the arc lamps. Now, that is one-third, and next winter the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] will have just as much power to cut it down lower as he will have if it is not now reduced.

Let us make the reduction for the public now of one-third, and then, if it ought to be still further reduced, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] has just as much power to reduce it further as he will have if we do not reduce it one-third now. In other words, if he is right, let us not fail to get a part of what is right now, because he wants to do the whole thing then.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman yield for a word?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman says the committee will have just as much power then. He is mistaken.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. BABCOCK. After you have given these corporations all they want and all we have got to give we are shorn of our power.

Mr. CANNON. That is specious, but not true. I want to say that we have just as many rights now as we shall have then; and when you let them lay their conduits on a reduction of one-third, the power is in Congress specially reserved, if it be necessary, to repeal the franchises outright or to make lower rates by legislation. The gentleman says we ought to eat two loaves of bread, whereas now we can only eat one. We propose to eat one and a half, and let him get the other half next winter, if he can.

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask two or three questions?

Mr. GROUT. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want a little information. In the first place, does this still grant a right to these companies to lay these conduits?

Mr. GROUT. The proposed amendment gives them the right to lay new conduits and to enlarge those already down.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, does the amendment reserve to Congress the right to amend, repeal, or change the grant at any time it sees fit?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly it will.

Mr. RAY of New York. Does it now? That is the question.

Mr. GROUT. Not in its present form.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then, of course, if it stands as it is now, you can not change it.

Mr. GROUT. But that provision was drawn by outsiders. It was not really presented to the Senate.

Mr. RAY of New York. I am talking about the proposition as it now stands. So that if it should become a law as it is now, the gentleman from Illinois is wrong, and you could not change it. Is not that true?

Mr. GROUT. That has been a question.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, another question. Does this proposed amendment grant an exclusive privilege to these companies?

Mr. GROUT. No; not at all. Now I wish to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the situation to be this: The existing conduits are not large enough to furnish sufficient light to the houses in front of which they are at present laid. In addition to this, extensions are desired in order to reach localities that are not now reached by the electric-lighting plants.

It seems to me that this is a public use and a public necessity that we ought to meet now, if we can accompany the grant with the proper restrictions. Now, what are the facts? First, it is demonstrated that no monopoly whatever is granted. These gentlemen have announced that they will assent to no amendment whatever which does not contain a clause reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Whether that clause was inserted or not, my own opinion is that this would be a mere revocable privilege granted to these companies, a temporary right at the will of Congress to use these streets. We have ascertained that these grantees are compelled by existing law to give to the District government the use of at least three ducts in each one of the conduits laid down, and that applies to future conduits, as I understand, as well as those already laid.

Now comes up the question of a possible consolidation. I say that consolidation has no terrors, provided the power of regulation and control is reserved. Consolidation means simply a reduction in operating expenses—a reduction which ought to operate to the advantage of the consumer, and which will operate to the advantage of the consumer if the power of regulation and control is properly exercised by Congress.

Next we come to the question of taxation. I hold that a franchise tax should be imposed upon every corporation enjoying a public use. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield to me two minutes more.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The tangible property of these companies is limited. The real thing from which they receive profit is the privilege of furnishing light, and the way of measuring that by way of taxation is to impose a tax upon the gross receipts.

Now, what should be the tax upon the gross receipts? That varies according to the profit. When the profit is 25 per cent of the gross receipts, the tax upon the gross receipts should be less than the profit on 75 per cent of the gross receipts. In the case of street railroads in this city we impose a tax of 4 per cent on the gross receipts, and their operating expenses are 50 per cent.

Now, we have in proof that these companies furnish light to Government institutions for 4 cents per thousand kilowatts, and it may be assumed, then, that that is the operating expense, for they certainly do not furnish any light at a loss. Then, I say, a tax of 4 per cent upon the gross receipts would be a fair tax.

Assuming that you fix the rate for a thousand kilowatts at 10 cents, 4 cents is only 40 per cent, whereas the railroad operating expenses are 50 per cent in this community. But, recollect, when furnishing a large amount of light at 4 cents kilowatt hour, we, at the same time, in view of the fact that upon a large proportion we get only 4 cents per thousand kilowatts, instead of 10 cents, we should make some reduction.

It seems to me that under all the conditions we should take a middle course, and that the gross tax upon that gross revenue should be between 2 or 3 per cent, which would be fair, until by further investigation we can ascertain the relation the operating expenses bear to the gross receipts. Now, then, as to the rate.

It may be assumed that these companies can make electric light at 4 cents per thousand kilowatts. The expense of furnishing it at retail is much greater than furnishing it at wholesale; and it seems to me a fair rate would be between the amount suggested by the gentleman. I am willing that there should be a free conference with these gentlemen.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I shall only detain the House for a moment. As I believe every member upon this floor knows, I have always during my connection with this body favored legislation controlling the gas rates, the electric-lighting rates, and telephone rates.

The question at issue at this time is what are fair and reasonable rates. I believe, while I am not as fully informed as I should be, that I perhaps know as much concerning what would be fair and reasonable rates as the majority of members upon this floor. I believe that I know what the rates should be, what rates are fair and reasonable alike to the consumer as well as the producer, and I stand ready and willing to vote for those rates.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this is a proper subject to be presented from the District Committee; but the precedent has been established. For many years the Committee on Appropriations has presented this subject for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROUT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield one of my minutes to my colleague.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Now I know this, briefly, that if the idea which I understand is presented by the conference committee prevails, the rate will be 10 cents for incandescent lights by the watt hour and $72 for the arc light. Then the city of Washington will be supplied with cheaper light than any other city of its size in this country. If the information presented by the chairman of the committee, as well as those who are informed upon this subject, is right—

Mr. HENDERSON. You think we ought to stand by the conferees?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I say relegate this matter to the conferees, with the understanding that the conferees will accomplish all that is possible.

Mr. GROUT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague and the gentleman from Nevada presented to us a view of the situation that is entirely illusory. They say that the proper thing for us to do now is to grant this extended franchise, and then at some other time, when we have ample opportunity, and when we all know about this subject, then let us put a regulation upon these gentlemen that will secure fair rates.

I want to remind you that that can not be done; that if you have a separate bill, if you do not use the coercive power that you have in an appropriation bill like this, you will never get your legislation. It is always stopped at the other end of the Capitol. Let me remind you of the efforts made here year after year in order to get a reduction in the price of gas. It was shown that it could be manufactured and distributed at 48 cents a thousand.

Time and time again we tried to get that legislation; but always it was stopped at the other end of the Capitol; and finally a compromise was made by which the company was permitted to have nearly a hundred per cent above the sum that the gentleman from Wisconsin tells us would be fair. I say if we do not get this reduction now we will never get it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I just want to say one word. I do not believe, with the gentleman from Nevada, in the benign influence of trusts, either in its application to electric lighting or anything else.

But I rose to say this for the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and I speak disinterestedly, because an extra session has no extra terrors for me, since my term ends with the expiration of this legislation.

He says he must have some of these appropriation bills to read; that he can not read these five great appropriation bills if there is very much further delay in their passage. He appeals to the House to expedite as far as possible the passage of these appropriation bills.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference on these three amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BABCOCK. Do the instructions given the committee last night still apply? I believe there has been no order of the House vacating them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is a new conference.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, that the same instructions be given the committee to-night.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. PAYNE. I want about two minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman did not rise and ask for the floor.

Mr. BABCOCK. I was on my feet all the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he should have recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] if there was any question as to who should be recognized.

Mr. BABCOCK. At the urgent request for the bill, I move the previous question.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the instructions be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any company availing itself of such privilege of extension of conduits as heretofore provided shall not charge or collect more than $4 per month for each arc light of 2,000 candlepower, or more than 8 cents for each 1,000 watts for incandescent current, and any company charging or collecting an amount in excess of such rates shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $50 for each and every offense, to be collected as other fines are now collected in the District of Columbia; and shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes upon personal property, each year 4 per cent of its gross receipts from whatever source, and its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Pending the motion for the previous question, Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, of course, after what has been said, if the instructions are passed by the House, there will be no agreement on this bill.

The simple question between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] and the conferees seems to be this: They can get a reduction from 15 to 10 cents, and the gentleman from Wisconsin insists upon a reduction from 15 cents to 8 cents. He is not able to give the House a single fact as to what is the cost of distributing electricity, except that it costs so much for the generation of the current.

He does not give his calculation to the House of the waste in distributing the electricity; he gives no facts upon the deterioration of the plant; he gives no facts as to what the cost of these conduits will be; he gives nothing but the cost of generating the electricity at the power house.

Now, is it worth while for the House to fool on this question? Is it worth while for the House to say that they will not have any agreement upon this bill; that this bill must fail? Is it not better to leave the conferees to settle that question and bring their report back to the House, and then if their report is approved by the House, it can be adopted.

If it is not satisfactory to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if it does not suit the majority of the House, they can vote it down, and after that, if they are of that mind, they can vote to insist on the disagreement and insist upon instructions; but had we not better try first to get an agreement, and leave these men for a full and free conference?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the instructions.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 103, noes 22.

So the instructions were agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GROUT, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. DOCKERY.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11577) for the relief of B. F. Parlett, collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the eulogies upon the late Nelson Dingley, a Representative from the State of Maine, 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,000 for the use of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and I ask that the statement be read instead of the conference report.

The conference report was read.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

C. A. BOUTELLE,

S. G. HILBORN,

AMOS J. CUMMINGS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be accepted and that the House further insist upon its disagreement on those points on which the conferees have not agreed.

Mr. HOPKINS. The arrangement before this bill went into conference was that when this matter came up in the House there were two Senate amendments upon which we should have separate votes.

One of them, as I remember, is Senate amendment numbered 4, which I would like to have the Clerk read, as I desire to make a motion with regard to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that in this report there has been a partial agreement.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There has been a partial agreement between the Senate and House conferees.

The SPEAKER. Does that agreement cover the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not know to what amendment the gentleman refers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read amendment No. 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after line 22, insert:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to purchase from the Gathmann Torpedo Gun Company, of Chicago, Ill., the gun equipment for one or more of the harbor-defense monitors authorized by the act approved May 4, 1898, such equipment to consist of two guns for each vessel, of not less than 10-inch bore and not less than 40 feet in length, capable of throwing the Gathmann type of shell containing about 500 pounds of wet gun cotton; said guns to cost not more than $32,500 each, and the workmanship and material to be equal to the present standard now used in the Navy, and subject to the usual inspection of the Bureau of Ordnance, and the sum of not exceeding $350,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, who presents this conference report, has the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, is my motion pending?

The SPEAKER. Was the amendment just read included in the agreement referred to?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no knowledge on that point; it may be. I understood there was some agreement to have a vote in the House on certain provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. And this is one of them. Now, in order to bring this question properly before the House, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this Senate amendment, and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The proper order of procedure is, first, to vote on agreeing to the conference report. If there are matters of disagreement outside of the report, they will come up afterwards. If this amendment is one on which the conferees have reached an agreement, it will be necessary to defeat the conference report in order to get at it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This amendment has not been agreed to. I ask the acceptance of the conference report so far as we have reached an agreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, as the Chair understands, now moves to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the remaining Senate amendments. If the gentleman from Illinois desires a separate vote on any of these amendments, he will indicate which they are.

Mr. HOPKINS. One of them is amendment No. 4, as I understand. Would a motion be now in order that the House recede from its disagreement to that amendment and concur in it?

The SPEAKER. If there are amendments on which no one desires a separate vote or to which there is no opposition, the question might be taken on those amendments, amendment numbered 4 being reserved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I also want to reserve the right to a separate vote, according to the agreement made the other day, upon Senate amendment numbered 55.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Is that the amendment in regard to armor plate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then I will modify my motion so as to ask that the House further insist on its disagreement upon all the other amendments on which the conferees have failed to agree, with the exception of the two amendments named—the Gathmann gun amendment and the armor-plate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Amendments numbered 4 and 55.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand a separate vote on each one of these amendments.

The SPEAKER. A separate vote being demanded, the question is now on the first amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to be heard a few moments on that amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Do I understand that my proposition has been acted on?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has demanded a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That will probably take up time enough to defeat this bill and prevent the construction of any warships—

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I understand it is the purpose on the other side to try to call up a contested-election case; and if that is true, I intend to do what I can to secure a roll call on every one of these amendments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not know anything about the contested-election case. I thank God I do not deal in that way with great public questions. I am here to provide for the national defense if I can.

Mr. BAILEY. You can provide for it by leaving that partisan election case alone.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not the jurisdiction of that matter, and the gentleman knows it. It is within the jurisdiction of the House, and it is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. I have the power to take the position I have indicated, and I am going to do it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman can take that responsibility; and I will see that it is fixed so that nobody will misunderstand it.

Mr. BAILEY. I take it.

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon amendment numbered 4, on which the gentleman from Maine moves that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. How is it that the first motion is put on amendment numbered 4?

The SPEAKER. Because that is the first amendment on which there is a disagreement.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Illinois moves to recede and concur?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has control of the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I differ somewhat from the prevailing view in this body, apparently. I desire to know what can possibly be said in favor of this proposition. I would like to know what argument can be brought in here in favor of what seems to me, after a very careful examination, to be one of the most barefaced and inexcusable attempts to force upon this Government a dangerous experiment that never has been properly tried and never has been recommended by any expert.

I hope the gentleman will explain his motives for championing this measure, and then I shall occupy a very few moments myself.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I shall approach the discussion of this Senate amendment in an entirely different spirit than that manifested by the gentleman in charge of this conference report.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is your right, of course.

Mr. HOPKINS. From the investigation that has been made this Gathmann gun is no longer an experiment. This amendment was adopted by the Senate upon the recommendation of the Naval Committee of the Senate, composed of some of the most distinguished members of that body who have served longest in it.

In the discussion there, preceding the adoption of this amendment by a very large vote, it was clearly shown that such experts as Admiral Sampson, of the Navy; Major Heath, of the Army; Commander Hall, of the Navy, who superintended the experiments at Indian Head, and a number of other naval experts have pronounced this gun to be a weapon that has passed the experimental stage.

It is able to shoot 500 pounds of gun cotton a distance of 10 miles with the precision and accuracy of the best guns in the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Has the gentleman any letter from either of those gentlemen to that effect?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman knows that I have not had a letter from either of them.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I did not know it. I supposed you had or you would not have made such a statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I am not responsible for the suppositions of the gentleman from Maine. I stated to him what was said in the Senate of the United States. It was said by one of the distinguished members of the Naval Committee that this had the approval of Admiral Sampson, of Major Heath, and of Commander Hall, and that Assistant Naval Constructor Dashiell, a lieutenant in the Navy, also favored it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this proposed amendment is not a matter of the extent or character suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. The members of the House will know by reading the amendment adopted by the Senate that it simply authorizes the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to adopt two of these guns upon two of the monitors that are authorized in the last bill.

It does not instruct or direct him to do it, but leaves it entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, so that if on his further investigation he should find that there is any objection to the adoption of this gun, it is within his discretion to reject it.

Now, let me say a word upon this subject. I have here a number of photographs showing the powerful effect of this explosive upon a 10-inch harveyized plate. It shows that it blows it into atoms, and, as was said by one of the members of the Naval Committee in the Senate when the matter was under discussion, one shot from one of these dynamite guns would blow up this entire Capitol.

It was further shown that one of these little monitors, with one or two of these guns upon it, in the harbor of New York would be able to defend that city and that harbor against any fleet that could be sent against it by any of the great maritime nations of the world.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman state what great naval expert made that statement?

Mr. HOPKINS. Did I say a naval expert had made that statement?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I supposed you meant one.

Mr. SIMPSON. What kind of an expert?

Mr. HOPKINS. As I said, I am not responsible for the suppositions or understandings of the gentleman from Maine. I give simply the statements of these men who have investigated this matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Who are they?

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman had read even the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he would have known who made remarks of this kind. Now, I want to state still further—

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. You stated that some persons who took part in the experiments at Indian Head recommended the adoption of this gun. Did the formal report made by the persons who conducted that experiment, filed in the Navy Department, recommend its adoption?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course not.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did they not recommend its rejection?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course.

Mr. HOPKINS. Senator HANNA was a member of the committee that investigated it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did not the persons who conducted that experiment and who made a report to the Navy Department recommend the rejection of this gun and say it was not fit for use at this time?

Mr. HOPKINS. Who?

Mr. DINSMORE. That is the report of the official board that conducted the experiment?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have a statement here from Professor Alger—

Mr. DINSMORE. I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Gentlemen, if you will come at me one at a time I shall be obliged to you.

Mr. DINSMORE. Take the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] first.

Mr. HOPKINS. I shall like it better than when you come at me in pairs. I am giving you the statement of these men who have investigated this at Indian Head and Sandy Hook, and they make the statement that I have made here.

Mr. DINSMORE. What men are these?

Mr. SIMPSON. Senator HANNA, the great naval expert. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman wants a little information—

Mr. DINSMORE. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would recommend him to go and acquire it and not attempt to make a kindergarten out of the House at this time.

Mr. DINSMORE. Oh, the gentleman ought to be able to give us the information.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I assert that the commission that conducted these experiments did reject the gun.

Mr. HOPKINS. Have I the floor or has the gentleman from Missouri?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, Admiral Sampson advised that $50,000 be appropriated for experiments three years ago.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Speaker, a short horse ought to be soon curried. The time of this body certainly is worth something. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] might occupy the floor for the next four weeks and he would not be able to put his finger upon one solitary iota of expert indorsement of this experiment.

He talks about what took place before the Senate committee. I know something about what took place before the Senate committee, and I know something about how perversely committees sometimes act.

When this measure was proposed and pushed and lobbied and pressed upon that committee, they had before them this document from the chief source of information on this subject in this country to date, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the United States Government, Commander O'Neil, than whom no officer's word goes further, than whom no officer in the United States Navy stands higher as an authority upon every naval subject, and especially upon that of which he has special charge, that of ordnance.

I state here, upon my responsibility as a member, that not one solitary indorsement to placing this gun on board of ships has ever been obtained from any authoritative naval source up to this time. I do not want you to take that from my statement. Gentlemen sometimes make mistakes.

Here is an authorized, full, most explicit statement from the chairman of the Ordnance Bureau of the United States Navy, making a protest against this infamous proposition.

I am going to use terms that I think appropriate about placing on board a ship of the United States a gun that would subject our sailors to the risk of being blown to pieces and the ship possibly ruined in experiments with a high explosive gun that has never yet been fired with a load unless they have prepared bomb-proof places before they dared to fire it off on land.

It is in an experimental stage to-day, and everybody knows it. These plates are brought in here to-day. What can we judge by them? Let me ask you how reliable is this claptrap?

What is the use of us having trained men, and especially trained in ordnance, if we are to be stampeded every time somebody gets a photograph and exhibits it and says if we get one such gun in the New York Harbor we could defend it against the world, and expect the gentleman from Illinois or any reasonable man to believe it?

A MEMBER. At whose interest is it?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not here charging the inventor; I am not here to attack the persons of the patentees. Patentees are very enthusiastic. They may believe that you could blow the moon out of its orbit. I am not responsible for them. [Laughter.]

I am here charged with a duty and with the responsibility of protecting the American sailors from being subject to this peril, and I am going to do that to the extent of my humble ability.

Now, here is a letter sent officially to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. Now, let us see how high this new projectile, this gun, this new defense to protect us against the world, are held in the only place where any reasonable man should go to-day to get authoritative and wise advice.

Captain O'Neil addressed this letter on the 13th of February to the chairman of the Naval Committee. I will not read the whole of it. He speaks of what he knows, and what it is proposed to be done with it. I will read but a few extracts. He says:

All the Gathmann experiments have been made with wet gun cotton.

Gentlemen may think I am earnest about this matter. I am. It is an important and serious proposition when we authorize the Secretary of the Navy, and to that extent give an indorsement of Congress to a proposition to enter turrets with these guns, and these men to be compelled under their orders to go into the turrets while these guns are being fired, while they do not dare to fire them to-day on land without providing holes in the ground to protect them while they are being fired. He says this:

All the Gathmann experiments have been made with wet gun cotton, and it has been shown that it is very insensitive to shock and is capable of withstanding the roughest kind of treatment if not acted upon by a detonator, but in order to safely get its projectiles out of the guns it is necessary to use about 85 per cent of water, which, of course, reduces the capacity of the projectile by that amount in weight.

With such a large percentage of moisture it is difficult to obtain an explosion of high order, and in many of the experiments made with Gathmann shells considerable quantities of unconsumed gun cotton has been picked up near the scene of the explosion.

That is a nice sort of thing to be around on the gun deck of a ship, where a battle ship costs $5,000,000,

Then says the Commodore:

Persons unfamiliar with the action of the present type of projectiles charged with gunpowder, are apt to underrate their power of destruction, and also to overestimate that of wet gun cotton. It is a fact that wet gun cotton is a more powerful explosive by far than ordinary gunpowder, but, exploded in the air, it is by no means as powerful as generally supposed.

If confined, its action is exceedingly violent, and a small quantity exploded in the bore of a gun would ruin it, and a large charge, under such conditions, would probably completely wreck a gun, turret, and possibly fatally injure a vessel herself; whereas an ordinary shell charged with gunpowder may break up and explode in a gun with no injury to it, perhaps, beyond disfiguring the rifling.

Now, let me give you something about this great experiment where the world is blown to pieces, picked up, and carried off in baskets and wheelbarrows. [Laughter.] This is a statement from a responsible officer who knows what he is talking about:

While success has been reached in several instances by the Gathmann Company, there has been a long series of failures, which should be taken into account in a general consideration of the subject, and the likelihood of their recurrence should be carefully weighed.

Now, let us see what it does. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is an account from the head of a bureau on these experiments that have been tried:

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I think we have an agreement, if you are willing, to take this other matter out of the RECORD—the matter calling up the contested-election case. The gentleman from Indiana wants to make a statement.

Mr. BAILEY. It will save a separate vote.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let me finish the effect of this document. If it will expedite matters, I would be very glad to do it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BROWN AGAINST SWANSON.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the contested-election case of Brown against Swanson will not be called up for consideration. There have been two decisive votes on the case, and there will be no further attempt to call the case up for consideration.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BAILEY. In view of that announcement, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a separate vote on each of these amendments. I did not make the demand for a vote upon these amendments that are in controversy. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I will accept this demonstration as more potent than argument, and ask for a vote. Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I claim that I have a right to reply to the remarks of the gentlemen from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I insist that I have the right to reply.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We want to get this business through, and this demand for a vote ought to be respected. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I insist that the gentleman should allow me to be heard in reply to what he has said. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no option in the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first vote to be taken is on the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if I am not to have the opportunity to discuss this matter, I withdraw my motion, if I have the right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to withdraw the motion.

Mr. BAILEY. After the previous question has been ordered, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Not after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly willing that he should have unanimous consent to withdraw his motion.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can understand the disinclination of the gentleman from Maine to allow me to reply, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the motion? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine that the House further insist on its disagreeing vote.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read amendment 55.

The amendment was read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I understand that an agreement was reached to have a separate vote on this proposition. It seems to me that after we have gone over the matter as thoroughly as we have for the last two or three years it ought not at this stage of the session to require much debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman from Maine, and I only ask for a few minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Alabama debated the question at considerable length on the original bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman, and I do not desire to occupy much time of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. PAYNE. Move the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New York that his suggestion to move the previous question without a fair opportunity for debate—

Mr. DALZELL. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that if we discuss this question at all, it ought to be discussed at considerable length.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I do not desire to take up the time of the House. If the gentleman will give me five minutes to state the proposition as I understand it to the House, it is all I ask.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment 55 and agree to the same, and on that proposition I simply wish to say this: This proposition that the House is now required to vote upon does not fix the price of armor in any way.

It merely provides that if the contractors who make the armor in this country are unwilling to furnish the armor at the price that will be fixed in this bill for the purchase of armor that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to build an armor-plate factory for the purpose of making armor plate for the Government and the Government's vessels.

Now, I say that is a reasonable proposition. We may fix the price for this armor plate at one figure or another; but I say that when Congress has in its wisdom fixed what it considers a reasonable price for the purchase of this armor and has declared that it is not going to pay more, then it is a wrong to the nation to hold up the construction of these ships and say that they shall not be built because we can not find an armor-plate manufacturer in this country who is willing to make armor for us at the price which Congress has named as a reasonable price; and the amendment which we are now asked to vote upon contemplates merely that in the event we can not buy this armor for the price named by Congress the Secretary of the Navy shall proceed to purchase ground and erect a building for the manufacture of armor plate.

I do not propose to go into a discussion as to whether this plan is practicable. We all know that an armor-plate factory is little more than a rolling mill on a large scale with larger machinery. We all know that the Government can construct such a factory as well as the private parties who have already constructed them in this country.

We know from our experiments in the manufacture of great guns that the Government has manufactured those guns for itself cheaper and better than they have been made by private contractors. For years we have had this contention every time this bill came before Congress. The time has now come to settle this question one way or another.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES. I want to state that France, Italy, Japan, and Russia have all government armor-plate factories.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true. The great nations of the world that have large navies (except the English nation) have their own armor-plate factories.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. There is not a nation on the face of the earth that has an armor-plate factory except Russia.

Mr. GAINES. I dispute that statement absolutely. I showed you letters to that effect months ago, and I have them right here now in the RECORD.

Mr. DALZELL. And I have here a statement showing what I have just stated.

Mr. GAINES. I do not see why the gentleman should make that statement in the face of the record I have exhibited.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yielded to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DALZELL. I will put the evidence of my statement in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Tennessee will be seated.

Mr. GAINES. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not interrupt me unnecessarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee had no right to the floor.

Mr. GAINES. And he had not the right to stand up there and give me impudence; and I will not take it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I did not intend to provoke hostilities on the other side by yielding to the gentleman from Alabama a part of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but my recollection is that the report of Secretary Herbert stated that those nations had their own armor-plate factories; and it was on that information that I supposed I was correct in my statement.

But if those nations have not their own armor-plate factories, it does not prove that we should not have ours. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to occupy the time of the House further at this time. We have already spent much time in the discussion of this question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, before making a call for the previous question, I desire to say a word to the House. This is a very important matter and it ought to be very carefully and dispassionately considered.

What the Senate proposes in these amendments, in effect, is simply this—words may sound one way and mean another—the practical operation of these amendments will be to prevent our getting in the next five or six years any battle ships or any armored cruisers. We have evidence on this subject from the Ordnance Bureau and from the Navy Department.

I have evidence personally from one of the greatest shipbuilding firms in the world—William Cramp & Sons—that to carry out a contract which they have made with the Russian Government for two battle ships which they are now building they have paid and are paying $575 per ton for armor of the most desirable quality which they are putting on those ships.

The British Government within three weeks has made contracts for armor for ships for which they have contracted to pay £117 per ton. We put into our bill as reported a figure at which, as we ascertained on the authority of the Department, we could get this armor. No man living has suggested any place on the face of the globe where we can get the best attainable armor for one penny less. We ought to have the best armor, and should pay what is necessary to be paid in order to get it.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] two years ago was the instrument—possibly the innocent instrument, possibly the ignorant instrument—I do not know which, but certainly the instrumentality on the floor of this House by which our ships then on the docks were detained two years in obtaining armor. By a motion of his upon the naval appropriation bill he deprived us of the opportunity of getting any armor unless we could get it for $445 a ton.

My information is—and I believe I am as well informed on this subject as any layman on this floor—my information is that we can not get a ton of armor fit to put on our ships for $445 a ton.

That bill was railroaded through this House on a wave of some kind of enthusiasm that I did not understand. It went to the Senate.

The Senate took that bill, and with the full knowledge that no factory in the United States and no factory in this world would furnish a ton of armor for $445 a ton, they put into that bill a provision that this Government, with its desire to hold up the flag wherever it floats—with the bellicose shouting around these corridors, "We will never haul down the flag from any place where it may have been planted"—the Senate has fixed a price of $300 in our bill, and has said that we shall never have any armor that costs over that amount per ton. There is not a Government on the face of the globe to-day that can get armor fit to put upon a mud scow for that price, and every expert knows it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not want to be interrupted from three or four places at once. I am talking common sense. I want to have my time undisturbed. I am only going to take a few minutes.

Now, this Senate committee, in the first place, say we shall not pay more than $300 a ton for the armor, and it is written in the bill that the Secretary must buy armor of the best obtainable quality.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman will be fair.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not want to be interrupted. I did not interrupt you. I will not be interrupted. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Oh, no; you are not going to do that to me. You are not going to vote yet.

They not only say we shall not pay more than $300 a ton, knowing that we can not get the armor for that price, but they go on and say that if the Secretary can not get the best armor in the world at that price, when England is paying $585 a ton, and when an American manufacturer is being paid $575 a ton by another government, when they know that armor can not be obtained at the price they name, then they say that unless the Secretary can get the best armor in the world at that price he shall build an armor plant. Then when will we get our ships?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Onemoment. The gentleman from Alabama rises to a point of order. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, now, make that point of order after my yielding to you, and you will be a very grateful appearing individual.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman refuses to allow me to correct a statement, and it is this, the $300—

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My point of order is that the gentleman is discussing the price of armor, and the price of armor has nothing to do with this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not stated any point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My point of order is that the debate should be limited to the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the question before the House is the armor-plate factory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the debate on neither side has transcended the limits of the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They say that we shall not pay more than $300 a ton. I say the man who wrote that amendment and the men who agreed to it knew that we could not get armor for that price and that was practically compelling us to build an armor plant which may be completed at some time in the future, and the cost per ton of its product is something that no man can know.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want every man who believes in protecting our Navy and upholding our flag to vote this proposition down. I ask for a vote and I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are many gentlemen on this side who desire the yeas and nays. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, 38 members voted in favor of ordering them.

The other side being demanded, there were 117 in the negative. Accordingly, more than one-fifth voting in favor thereof, the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 129, answered "present" 9, not voting 123; as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the other amendments and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HILBORN, and Mr. CUMMINGS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11093) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, numbered 57, 58, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167 and 168, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WASHINGTON CITY PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report. The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 11712, "An act to provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD.

Managers on the part of the House.

JAMES McMILLAN,
J. H. GALLINGER.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The Senate agrees to the bill as it passed the House.

DAVID H. MERCER,
CHARLES W. GILLET,
J. H. BANKHEAD.

The question was taken, and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AND GETTYSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report I desire to present.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9428) to authorize the

Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company of Maryland to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5; and agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,

G. M. CURTIS.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

JAMES McMILLAN,

A. F. GORMAN.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The Senate amended the House bill by providing that the cars of the street railroads should not be switched in the public streets of the city, and that the Commissioners shall enforce all proper regulations in regard to handling cars at terminal points; and also a further amendment that the road shall be required to issue free transfers to passengers of the Maryland and Washington Railway Company and the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, so that one fare only shall be paid for a continuous ride on the lines mentioned.

One or two other amendments, merely clerical in their nature, were made by the Senate to the House bill. The House nonconcurred in the Senate amendments. The conferees recommend that the House recede from its disagreements and agree to the amendments.

J. W. BABCOCK.

G. M. CURTIS.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the motion to adopt the conference report.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 12106, which has come from the Senate with amendments. It is not a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Before reading the amendments I hope we can have order, as I propose to move to concur in the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. If the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is adopted, the amendments will be agreed to. The Clerk will report the title of the bill and the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, with Senate amendments.

The amendments were read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, if the House does not desire any statement in regard to the matter, I shall simply move to concur in all the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. LENTZ. I want to know why this increase is made, in the early part of the bill, in the number of clerks?

Mr. HULL. It has not made an increase, Mr. Speaker: it is simply cutting down the pay. It strikes out the pay at $1,800 and at $1,600, as fixed by the House, and increases those at $1,400 and those at $1,000 and those at $1,200. The total number is not increased. In place of an increase, it is a reduction in the pay for the same number of clerks. The same is true as to messengers.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does this simply apply to the immunes?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; this applies to the Army of the United States.

Mr. RIDGELY. The entire Army?

Mr. HULL. The whole Army. It is the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

Mr. RIDGELY. I did not catch it exactly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to have five or ten minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that anything that a member can say will have the slightest effect in shaping legislation in the House. I have never witnessed in all my life so much of absolute and unqualified brutality toward the members of this House as I witnessed during the last hour.

Now, these improvements or amendments on this bill may be, and they doubtless are, some of them, wise and in the best interest of the public service. I presume they come here at the hands and by the brains of the experts that we have heard something about.

But I want to warn this House, now that I have been able at last, after a great struggle, to get a chance to say a few words, and I am probably not to be knocked on the head by a club from some distinguished chairman of some sort. The gentleman from Iowa is a gentleman, with his other good qualities.

I do not think that this country has always profited by the experts of these Departments of War and Navy. There came a war, Mr. Speaker, last summer, early in the season.

For years before there had been offered to the Departments of this Government one of the most marvelous of all the engines of war—smokeless powder; and yet, when the war came, we did not have a single ounce of it. Why not? Because these experts, some of whose testimony has been read to us here to-night, said it was utterly worthless.

They are utterly worthless, unfit for use; and yet when we got into the war the whole world said, "What is the matter with the Yankee nation that when poor Spaniards, and even the reconcentrados in Cuba and the poor devils of insurrectionists at Manila, had smokeless powder, the United States did not have it?"

And when we attempted to have it it was denounced by these experts, who now denounce every innovation, everything that is not old, time honored, and worm-eaten, and worthless. And so we have passed through this House a bill creating six new war ships that are absolutely worthless, obsolete.

You could not sell them to any intelligent nation on earth, unless to the Chinese, for $2.50 a piece. And the gentleman comes here and talks about the character of the armor plate, while we are now proposing to build these ships that have no armor and are absolutely worthless, unless it should be as tugs in the harbors of the country to pull the freight ships out.

I take with a good deal of allowance the testimony of these experts on these questions. I state this: That there is not one improvement in the Navy of the United States that takes it out of the category of the old wooden ships at the close of the war that is not the product of somebody's brain that has been compelled to force it on the country over the heads of these experts.

The amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. HULL, the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be omitted and the statement read.

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments to the sundry civil bill, make the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying conference report:

The Senate recedes from its amendments 24, 75, 77, and 88, making appropriation for the public building at Los Angeles, Cal., the same having already been provided for in a separate act; striking out the House provision relative to a road in the Zoological Park; appropriating $55,000 for the street on the west border of the Zoological Park, and for purchase of land adjoining the said park, and its provision to increase the salaries of the customs appraisers at Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Baltimore.

The House agrees to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 21, 22, and 78, appropriating for the public buildings at Newport News and Cleveland, for additional land for the Baltimore public building, and the proposition of the Senate for widening the Adams Mill road at the entrance of the Zoological Park.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on amendments 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, and 23, authorizing public buildings at Nashua, N. H.; Cheyenne, Wyo.; Durham, N. C.; Selma, Ala.; Evanston, Wyo.; Deadwood, S. Dak., and Hartford, Conn.

On amendment 140, appropriating $150,000 for Yaquina Bay.

On amendments 145 and 146, appropriating $100,000 additional for the Missouri River.

On amendments 168 and 161, appropriating $50,000 for a Soldiers' Home in South Dakota.

And on amendments 163 and 164, appropriating $850,000 for the Pacific cable.

J. G. CANNON,

W. H. MOODY,

THO. C. McRAE,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to adopt the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the conference report be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to all Senate amendments except number 10, and as to number 10 I make the following motion:

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question should be put first on the gentleman's first motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that on all the amendments, except the one numbered 10, the House further insist on its disagreement with the Senate amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to move that the House recede and concur in amendment No. 10 also.

The SPEAKER. That will come later.

Mr. CANNON. My friend is not wise in that matter. I think he does not understand the position, and I have made no motion with reference to amendment No. 10.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CORLISS. I ask for a separate vote on amendments 163 and 164, relating to the Pacific cable.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want to go all over it again?

Mr. CORLISS. Yes; let us go over it again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will state the amendments on which no separate vote is asked, all except amendments numbered 10, 163, and 164. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House further insist on its disagreements with the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents the following as an amendment to amendment No. 10:

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the gentleman on what basis this scale is made—one-half, one-third, or what?

Mr. CANNON. For buildings of $100,000 and under, one-half; over $100,000, ordinarily one-third; on some larger amounts, less than one-third, but with power to contract in each case; and more than enough money to buy the site, make the plans, and all that can be expended in the coming fiscal year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad if my friend would let me first make my statement as to what this amendment does. This is in lieu of amendment No. 10.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Before the gentleman leaves the other question—

Mr. CANNON. I have not left it; I am right on it. I trust I may be permitted to make my statement. If I do not make it plain, I will yield for any question.

Amendment number 10 has in it two towns which are not in my modified amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is just what I was coming to.

Mr. CANNON. I was coming to that myself. [Laughter.] One is Nashua, N. H., which is, in number, 10 by an inadvertence, because it is in a separate amendment that is yet in conference and has been further insisted upon already. The other is Deadwood, S. Dak.

A MEMBER. Why do you leave that out?

Mr. CANNON. Because it is legislation as well as appropriation. This bill has got to pass the House and the Senate—

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me suggest that there are two others left out—Columbus, Ga., and Macon, Ga.

Mr. CANNON. They are elsewhere in the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will permit me to say that the bills for Macon and Columbus, Ga., are not for the purchase of sites, but for additions to buildings already erected.

Mr. CANNON. Are they in the bill anywhere?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then they are not affected by this motion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. With great pleasure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I listened to the reading of the gentleman's proposition, and there was no item there for Leadville. Was the omission intentional or not?

Mr. CANNON. Let me explain. If Leadville is in now, it is not affected.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. How do you propose to affect amendment 10?

Mr. CANNON. That is exactly what this motion is.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I did not so understand. I would like to hear the amendment read again. You propose to affect only two places?

Mr. CANNON. I propose that the House adopt, in lieu of amendment 10, the amendment just read, which drops out Deadwood.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. And Nashua?

Mr. CANNON. Nashua is in another provision. This does not affect Nashua. The modification which I have made leaves nothing unprovided for that is now in amendment numbered 10, except Nashua and Deadwood; and it does not affect Nashua, because Nashua is in twice—once as a separate amendment other than No. 10.

If this motion is adopted, it does affect Deadwood, because Deadwood is in the omnibus proposition; and it is necessary to get it out of the omnibus proposition if the House pursues the course that it indicated on Durham, N. C., this afternoon. Therefore, by this proposition I seek to eliminate it, because there is no legislation authorizing a public building at Deadwood.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman ought not to stand on a proposition of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. "The gentleman" does stand on a proposition of that kind, and hopes the House will stand with him.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Has not the gentleman made a mistake and left out a great many other places?

Mr. CANNON. I am only dealing with No. 10.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. No. 10 is the very one which I insist leaves out a number of places.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman insists in vain. If he will compare No. 10 with my proposition, he will find that my explanation covers the differences. There are differences in the amounts appropriated.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I am not talking about amounts, but places.

Mr. CANNON. I have explained the differences. Now the gentleman must take my word, or else he must go and hunt up the bill and compare it.

Mr. KITCHIN. In the amendment you have offered, have you included any town for which there is no law at present?

Mr. CANNON. We have not.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not mean to say but what there is sufficient necessity for the public building at Deadwood. He simply stands on a technical point that there is no authorization.

Mr. CANNON. I mean to say that the Committee on Appropriations performs its functions of appropriation, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds performs its function of reporting legislation for the authorization of public buildings, and the Committee on Appropriations insists that there are other committees in the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all; and that motion is not in order.

Mr. KELLEY. Does not my motion take precedence over the other?

Mr. CANNON. I think not.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. Is not a parliamentary inquiry in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not to take a gentleman from the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Has any public building been appropriated for in the sundry civil bill save those for which bills have passed the House?

Mr. CANNON. No; not one.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the trouble over on the other side.

Mr. CANNON. Nor has any been agreed to that has not passed both House and Senate, and that is what is the matter with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. KELLEY]. He wants to get Deadwood in, his bill not having passed both House and Senate.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman ought to stand by his record, and even in the short time in which I have been a member of this House I have known the gentleman to bring in legislation of this kind on appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON. My record is of no importance, whether good, bad, or indifferent. I will take care of my record.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand this amendment No. 10 mentioned certain public buildings and sites that are provided for in the sundry civil bill and also provides for buildings authorized in separate acts. Now, where the sundry civil bill provides for amounts different from the amount originally appropriated, this amendment No. 10 has no reference to that, as I understand it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Those are provided for in another place.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not desire to occupy the gentleman's time, but to make myself clear. For instance, there was a bill passed for enlarging the building at Macon, Ga. It was put in the sundry civil bill by amendment of the Senate. As I understand it, this amendment No. 10 does not deal with it at all.

Mr. CANNON. I will not be sure that Macon is in No. 10. If it is in it, this amendment of mine does not affect it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Take Brunswick, Ga., for example. I understand you bring in a reduction of the amount, and then I understand you merely make so much of it immediately available. Which is the case?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that this is an appropriation bill. Brunswick, Ga., is authorized to cost not exceeding $50,000. Now, my amendment recommends an appropriation of $25,000—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To be immediately available?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But it does not reduce the amount?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; there is no legislation in my amendment. Now, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, I think, can not make that motion.

Mr. KELLEY. Am I not in order, Mr. Speaker, in making such a motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to make that motion.

Mr. CANNON. Then let me understand. I offer this amendment. I will ask for the reading of the beginning of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows—

Mr. CANNON. Now, that is my motion. Pending that the gentleman from South Dakota moves to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. To recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has occupied a great deal of time—

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, does the gentleman want to address the House.

Mr. KELLEY. For a very few moments.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has taken up a great deal of time of the House at this late hour for the purpose of defeating the erection of a public building at Deadwood, S. Dak.

He has not attempted to show to the House but that there is necessity for the erection of that building, as much so as at any place where buildings are appropriated for by this bill. He simply stands on the proposition that previous legislation has not been had and that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

But I say that this is drawing close lines. I do not see why this bill should be defeated on a technical proposition of that kind. At Deadwood, S. Dak., the Government of the United States is paying over $6,000 annual rental for the use of buildings that are not at all suitable, that are not fit to hold the United States court in or for post-office purposes.

I can not understand why the gentleman from Illinois picks out this little city of Deadwood and aims his shafts against it. He has done so before since I have been a member of this House.

This is not the first instance in which the gentleman from Illinois has endeavored to defeat legislation in the interest of the city of Deadwood. He brought in here, on an appropriation bill, new legislation, as he calls it, to prevent the establishment of an assay office in that city on a former occasion. The House saw the injustice of the gentleman from Illinois upon that occasion and did not sustain him in his unwarranted fight against it.

Now, I do not believe it is necessary for me to take up the time of the House, for the House will appreciate the fact that the gentleman himself has not undertaken to show one reason why a public building should not be erected there the same as in the other places that are provided for in this bill, with the one bare exception that it is legislation along with appropriation, and that certainly can not be considered an innovation in this body. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I guess not. You are speaking, but am I yielding time to you?

Mr. KELLEY. I was recognized by the Speaker on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota will recollect that the gentleman from Illinois yielded to him three minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I understood I obtained time from the Chair on my motion.

Mr. STEELE. It is only a break; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. My friend from Illinois made a worse break than that when he said I was not in order to make my motion. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] should inform himself. Had I the floor in my own right, as I believed I had, my motion for the previous question would have been in order; but as a matter of fact, a man would feel lonesome in this House unless breaks were made once in a while. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I will just ask for one minute, and then I want a vote. There are five or six buildings on the sundry civil bill that the House has disagreed to, all on amendments separate from No. 10. Now, Deadwood happens to be with twenty or thirty buildings in No. 10. Deadwood is not authorized by law, and therefore I offer my motion.

Mr. KELLEY. We want to authorize it by law.

Mr. CANNON. I hope that my friend, I having treated him courteously, will possess his soul in patience for a minute.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, yes, certainly; but the gentleman ought not to be so irritable.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am not irritable; not half as irritable as my friend is.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no; I beg to differ with you. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CANNON. You will not vote a minute. I want the same rule applied to Deadwood that is applied to the others. That is all. We had this contest out on the North Carolina building this afternoon. The gentleman says I discriminate against Deadwood; that I do not like Deadwood.

Mr. KELLEY. They have done so before.

Mr. CANNON. I do like it. I never was there, but I hope it will become live wood.

Mr. KELLEY. They like you, too.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, I do not like it well enough to break down the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and have this bill made a vehicle, out of order, to draw it through.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. KELLEY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, yeas 89.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the remaining three amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House further insist on its disagreements to the other amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Now, does the gentleman desire to have a vote on the other amendment?

Mr. CORLISS. I desire to have a separate vote upon the Pacific cable amendment.

Mr. CANNON. That is all.

Mr. CORLISS. There are two amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; that is all that is left.

Mr. CORLISS. I move that the House recede, and concur on the amendments 163 and 164.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote. This is the matter we fought over this afternoon.

Mr. CORLISS. Let us have another vote on it.

The question was taken; and the motion to concur was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House further insist on its disagreement to the other amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11082) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WM. W. GROUT,

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,

S. M. CULLOM,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that we have made no progress whatever toward agreeing on these disagreeing votes. It is an illustration of the old adage, that you can lead a horse to water, but you can not make him drink. We can not make the Senate conferees agree to our instructions.

We can only bring back the report again and say we are just where we were when we came in before. The Senate practically refused to listen to the proposition. They say it is not a conference; and they treated us quite curtly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure, for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is there much difference between the conferees on the second proposition, to add 100 members to the police force of the District of Columbia?

Mr. GROUT. We did not discuss that this time. That was up before. I will state with reference to that, we have given the conferees distinctly to understand that we could agree to any such number, but have intimated to them—and I will tell the House all that has passed in conference if it be proper, but I do not wish to violate the rules—that we might agree to a small number, 25 men and a sergeant, perhaps.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the conferees will not agree to that increase.

Mr. GROUT. I shall be glad not to feel compelled to agree. This was a proposition provided that we could close up all of it. We have to concede some things; and while it is against my judgment and that of my associate, we feel that possibly we might concede that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to have two minutes, if the gentleman will yield it to me.

Mr. GROUT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, about a year ago I had occasion to look at some statistics concerning the police force of the various cities of this Union, and I was struck with the fact that the city of Washington has to-day a police force about two or three times as large as cities of the same size throughout the United States. That is, to take into consideration, in addition to the Metropolitan police here, the police force that are also given by the Government.

There is a police force for the Mall. Members of the police force are stationed at various circles and at certain intersections of the streets; also the Capitol police, the police for the Treasury building, police for the War, State, and Navy building, and they aggregate nearly 300 members.

The present police force of the District numbers 623 in addition, making a total police force of over 900 members. There is not another city in the Union of this size that has a police force of over 400.

It seems to me the conferees ought to stand firm and say to them that there shall be no increase in the police force in this city. Of course, if we want to create offices, we can do it and where there is no necessity for it, but it seems to me the conferees ought to be firm.

I have some statistics here which I read a year ago, and which I would like to read again, because they give the population and police force of the several cities at that time.

I do not think it is right that we should have any great increase in the police force of this city, because I believe we have two or three times as large a number as cities of a corresponding population, and when we take into consideration that the population of this town is composed of men who are in a large proportion office-holders and must of necessity be law-abiding citizens, I say there is less necessity for a police force in this city than in other cities in the Union.

When you take into consideration that the great mass of the population of the city have taken an oath to support the Constitution and obey the laws, and that they are law abiding, it will be seen that it does not take policemen at every few corners to keep watch on them.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then the gentleman would advise a reduction rather than an increase?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would advise a reduction instead of an increase. When you take into consideration the statistics of the police in other cities in the United States, as shown by this record which was compiled up to 1893, it will be seen that it supports my position.

The city of Milwaukee, which had a population of 240,000, had a police force of 263 men as contrasted with 900 men for this city. Pittsburgh had 360 members on the police force, including subordinates of all kinds. The city of Minneapolis, with a population of 220,000, had a police force of 225.

The city of Detroit, which is a larger city than Washington, had a police force of 286. The city of Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans., combined, had a police force of 220; Cleveland, 310. It seems to me from these statistics that it is plain and clear that the police force of this city is now amply sufficient.

Mr. GROUT. Well, Mr. Speaker, I might go into an explanation to show that this city is peculiar, as it extends over such a large area. Population does not go for so much as area does. It has three or four times as many square miles as these cities mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think that that can be sustained. I think you will find that most of these cities are as large or nearly as large as the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves that the House further insist and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House further insist on its instructions to the conferees.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BABCOCK) there were 40 yeas and 55 yeas.

So the House refused to instruct the conferees.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GROUT, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. DOCKERY.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

The motion was agreed to.
The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a resolution (in which the concurrence of the House was requested), providing for printing extra copies of the eulogies on the late Senator JUSTIN S. MORRILL. The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7865) to pay the J. S. Stearns Lumber Company $379.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has recommitted to the committee of conference the report of the committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

EULOGIES ON HON. J. S. MORRILL.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution of the Senate relative to printing eulogies on the late Senator MORRILL.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the proceedings in memory of the late Senator JUSTIN S. MORRILL: 4,000 copies for the use of the House, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Their being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the concurrent resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes a. m.). I move that the House take a recess until five minutes past 3 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate further insisted on its amendments to the District appropriation bill Nos. 57, 58, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agreed to a further conference, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.). I move that the House take a recess until 4 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9428. To authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, of Maryland, to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 11712. To provide a site for a building for the Washington Public Library.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1206. Granting an increase of pension to Sophia W. Buxton; and

H. R. 718. For the relief of Benjamin F. Vennum, of Wheeling, Ohio County, W. Va.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. The message just received from the Senate informs us that that body has agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor appropriation bill. I present on behalf of the House conferees the same report, and move that the House agree to it. As the report is somewhat lengthy, I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with, except the portion pertaining to the Nicaragua Canal amendment, so called, which perhaps the House would like to hear. I ask also that the statement prepared by the House conferees may be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The conferees appointed by the House of Representatives report that, after full conference with the Senate conferees on the river and harbor bill, No. 11795, they have agreed, and hereby report back the said bill as agreed upon. A list of amendments agreed to or disagreed to are more specifically set forth in the accompanying statement:

The amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, made immediately available by the terms of the bill, was $12,524,684.94.

The net additions in the bill as now presented for the ensuing fiscal year are $2,240,193, making a total of $14,773,877.94.

The amount appropriated in the House bill for expenditures the payment for which was made contingent upon certain results was $300,000. This item is left unchanged in the Senate.

The amount appropriated for continuing contracts by the House bill was $17,110,538.70. The net increase in this amount as provided in the bill now presented is $5,515,785.43, making the total amount appropriated in the bill for continuing contracts $22,626,324.13.

The bill as now presented also carries an item of $1,000,000 for the investigations and preliminary measures for a canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

The total amount carried by the bill as now reported, it thus appears, is as follows:

For fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.....	$14,773,877.94
Contingent appropriations.....	300,000.00
For continuing contracts.....	22,626,324.13

Total for river and harbor items .....	37,600,202.07
For interoceanic canal.....	1,000,000.00

Total of entire appropriations and liabilities .....	38,600,202.07
--	---------------

The provision in the Senate bill for reservoirs and for surveys for reservoirs is stricken out.

The provision in the House bill providing for a repeal of the provisions heretofore made for the improvement of Yaquina Bay, Oregon, and for a ship railway at The Dalles, Columbia River, Oregon, is stricken out.

For Yaquina Bay provision is made in the bill as agreed upon for a survey and a report as to the feasibility and that no expenditures shall be made until a report is made thereon.

For the ship railway the provision in the Senate bill for an appropriation of $50,000 is stricken out.

The provision in the Senate amendment pertaining to the Nicaragua Canal, appropriating $115,000,000 therefor, is stricken out, and in lieu thereof a provision is made authorizing the President to investigate any and all routes across the Isthmus of Panama suitable for a canal, and to particularly investigate the Nicaragua route and the Panama route; also to ascertain the most feasible route for a canal to be owned and controlled by the United States; also to ascertain the approximate cost of such canals, together with the cost of harbors at the termini of said canals and the approximate cost for maintenance thereof; and an appropriation of $1,000,000 to defray the expenses thereof is made, and the President is requested to report to Congress the result of his investigation, with his recommendations thereon.

The bill as now agreed upon and presented also includes a codification of existing laws pertaining to rivers and harbors, though containing no essential changes in the existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make an inquiry in reference to the New York Harbor project. Has there been an agreement in reference to that?

Mr. BURTON. As agreed upon by the conferees the bill contains an appropriation of $4,000,000 to secure, if it can be obtained by private contract, a channel 40 feet deep and 2,000 feet wide from the Narrows to the sea.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the Senate provision?

Mr. BURTON. There is a provision in the alternative to the effect that if such private contract can not be made, the Government shall build or purchase dredges and prosecute the work to obtain such a depth of water as I have already stated.

Mr. LOW. Does this report include Man-of-War Rock?

Mr. BURTON. That is included in a provision for the East River, for which an appropriation of $350,000 is made.

Mr. MOODY. Is there anything in this conference report looking toward the beginning of irrigation of the arid lands?

Mr. BURTON. There is not.

Mr. TONGUE. I should like to hear the provision of the report in regard to Yaquina Bay.

Mr. BURTON. I repeat the request for unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with except that portion pertaining to amendments numbered 243 to 246, inclusive. These four amendments pertain to the provision with reference to Yaquina Bay, about which inquiry was made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE], and those pertaining to the so-called Nicaragua Canal project. I will say that this report is very voluminous, and all the essential portions of it have been expressed in the statement just read at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the reading of the conference report be dispensed with except the parts that he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TALBERT. With all the additions and subtractions, what is the increase of the bill over the total of it as it left the House?

Mr. BURTON. A little over $8,600,000.

Mr. TALBERT. The increase?

Mr. BURTON. The increase is a little over $8,600,000; from a little less than $30,000,000 to $38,600,202.07. That is the amount authorized or appropriated by this bill, including the Nicaragua Canal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the report had better be read before the discussion. The Chair thinks it important.

The portions of the conference report indicated by Mr. BURTON were read.

[For conference report see Senate proceedings.]

Mr. MOODY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BURTON. I shall be pleased to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], to an amendment to the sundry civil bill, which is still in disagreement between the two Houses, for improving Yaquina Bay, continuing improvement, $150,000. If I understand the situation correctly, that proposition should have been made, unless this bill had repealed the provision in the river and harbor bill of 1896 and 1898, with reference to Yaquina Bay.

Mr. BURTON. That would be a matter for the Committee on Appropriations to decide primarily, but this bill contains a provision that a board of three engineers shall be appointed to examine that project and report upon its desirability, and that no further action shall be taken upon that until they report. That would make the appropriation unnecessary.

Mr. MOODY. That answers my question, Mr. Speaker. Then, in the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio, there is no occasion to make any appropriation in the sundry civil bill, in view of the conference report, in case the House adopts that report?

Mr. BURTON. No; because this act contains a provision, a substitute for the original section as the bill passed the House, and to the effect, as I have stated, that no further proceedings shall be had there or work done until an examination by a board of engineers has been made and they have made their report; also my colleague reminds me of the express statement that no money shall be expended, except, of course, this $5,000 for the examination.

Mr. MOODY. I will ask the gentleman what would be the condition suppose the board of engineers should report favorably toward the project for Yaquina Bay?

Would there not be the necessity for placing at the disposal of the War Department in the sundry civil bill an amount of money that could be utilized before December next for this project?

Mr. BURTON. I think that is a question for the members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MOODY. Would such a report be likely to be made before the assembling of the Fifty-sixth Congress?

Mr. BURTON. I am unable to answer the question definitely, but probably not. It is quite unlikely.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] if he can tell me what became of an amendment providing for $200,000, offered in the Senate, which I understood was to be a part of the bill for the Lake Washington waterway?

Mr. BURTON. That was not put on the Senate bill, and hence it is not in this bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. It is not incorporated into this report.

Mr. BURTON. It was not in the original House bill, nor was it in the Senate bill, and hence it is not in this conference report.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I knew it was not in the House bill, but I understood it was adopted in the Senate.

Mr. BURTON. The bill contains no such provision.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I should like to see if I understand this correctly. As I understand it, under this bill a million dollars was appropriated for investigating the feasibility of the various routes across the Isthmus, and the provision is left without any limit as to the amount that shall be paid to engineers, is it not?

Mr. BURTON. Up to a million dollars.

Mr. REEVES. The compensation is to be fixed by the President.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Do you not think it is a little bit loose to turn loose a million dollars without any limit on the compensation that is to be paid to the engineers?

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman must take into account the fact that we had to meet an appropriation of $115,000,000, and a million dollars did not seem very large to us in view of the contrast between the two amounts.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I do not know but what the gentleman is correct about it. Still, it seems to me that a million dollars is a pretty large amount. If we must lose the million, it is so much less than the $115,000,000 that it seems small; but still it struck me that to turn loose a million dollars without any limit as to what should be paid was a little bit loose.

Mr. BURTON. The whole compensation is to be fixed by the President, and a very considerable sum might be required for engineering purposes. It is not merely the employing of five or six engineers. It will be necessary, probably, to employ two or three hundred.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. That is probably true; but the compensation is left entirely open.

Mr. BURTON. We saw no other way of providing for that. We could not provide for their wages in advance. Engineers of different grades of ability and different qualifications will have to be employed.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I am not inclined to find any fault with it, except that I wanted to call attention to the apparent looseness of it. But it is so much less than $115,000,000 that the amount does not seem so large in comparison.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I see that the provision for Yaquina Bay provides for a board of engineers, who are to estimate the cost. In view of the fact that the contract has already been let and signed by the contractors at about one-half the original estimate of the board of engineers, we should like to know from the gentleman from Ohio why it was thought necessary to make an estimate of the cost of that improvement? The contract has been signed for $511,000, whereas the board of engineers set the cost at about a million dollars.

Mr. BURTON. I will answer the gentleman by stating that the provision is not only for an examination of the present project, but for such modification as may seem desirable. If a different project should be recommended, then it would certainly be necessary to estimate the cost.

Mr. TONGUE. One further question in reference to the answer of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. This contract having been let and signed by the contractors, who are being held responsible pending this matter, why does the gentleman from Ohio think it is going to take nine months to have a resurvey of Yaquina Harbor? Why can it not be done within sixty days?

Mr. BURTON. I wish to call attention, in answer to the gentleman, in the first instance, to a part of his statement which seems to me hardly accurate. The contract is not yet let. A contract is not complete until it is signed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. TONGUE. That is technical.

Mr. BURTON. It is not only technical, but substantial. Then, further, an unusual number of surveys are provided for in this bill, as I have stated, to persons who have applied for examinations in numerous localities; and under provisions already made the engineer force is going to be taxed to the utmost during the next year, and we do not think it will be probable that the necessary examination can be made and the report and figuring upon it completed before the next session of Congress.

Mr. TONGUE. If the sundry civil appropriation bill should contain an amendment appropriating $150,000, that would be available in case this board of engineers are favorable.

Mr. BURTON. It would be available.

Mr. TONGUE. And it could be used if this report should be favorable.

Mr. BURTON. If the project should be modified, it would not be available. The project recommended might be a larger and more expensive one, or a smaller and less expensive one.

Mr. TONGUE. It could, therefore, do no harm to make the appropriation, and might assist if it was made.

Mr. BURTON. From the standpoint of the gentleman, it would not; but as regards the policy of making an appropriation under existing circumstances, that is a question for the Committee on Appropriations to decide, and not for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In your provisions about a survey you say that the money "shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." Now, with the Treasury depleted and a deficit, it may possibly be the case that there is no money, as all the money is appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact—

Mr. TALBERT. Is it not possible that all the money in the Treasury has already been "otherwise appropriated," by which the project will fall to the ground?

Mr. BURTON. I can answer the gentleman by a statement which is easily understood by himself—that this is the phraseology used in all appropriations.

Mr. TALBERT. I only asked for information.

Mr. BURTON. That is a financial question in regard to revenue and expenditures about which I do not think I can give any better answer. [Cries of "Vote!"] I desire to retain control of the bill, but I understand the gentleman from Iowa desires to be heard. Now, while I otherwise should ask the previous question, I do not wish to shut off debate. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to raise a point of order against the amendment pertaining to the Panama Canal.

Mr. PAYNE. That comes pretty late, after you have discussed the bill.

Mr. MOODY. It is too late.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is the first opportunity I have had. The gentleman has been engaged in answering questions of other gentlemen, and each time when I desired to do so I had to yield while the gentleman was answering questions. This is the first moment I have had.

Mr. BURTON. As I understand the rule in regard to this, it is that any member may rise in his place and present a point of order, even while another person is speaking. It seems to me the time has passed for the gentleman to raise a point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a snap judgment that the gentleman ought not to take at this time. My point of order is made in perfect good faith.

Mr. BURTON. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that while I desire that opportunity be given for discussing this bill, in view of the fact that it is but little more than seven hours until the close of this session, that I do not think it best to enter into a refined discussion of points of order, and I hope there will be no desire to make them or to elaborately discuss the Nicaragua amendment or any other project.

Mr. HEPBURN. For myself, I have no desire of that kind. I simply want to present a point of order that I believe to be good. In the first instance, I raise the point that the amendment proposed by the committee is not germane to any subject in dispute between the two Houses. In the second place, it is entirely new legislation suggested by them, having no relation to any subject that was in dispute between the two Houses.

The matter in dispute was whether or not there should be undertaken by this Government the building of the Nicaragua Canal by way of Nicaragua and San Juan River. The Senate had said by their legislation that that should be undertaken; the House had disagreed to that. Now, the gentleman proposes, in lieu of that legislation, a provision for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, 5 degrees of latitude south of the site of the other canal. I submit that that is not germane to any matter of difference and that it is entirely new legislation, for the first time suggested to either House by this committee. I want to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the phraseology of this amendment:

That the President of the United States of America be, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to make full and complete investigation of the Isthmus of Panama, with a view to the construction of a canal by the United States across the same to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Again I read:

And generally the President is authorized to make such full and complete investigation as to determine the most feasible and practical route across said isthmus for a canal, together with the cost of constructing the same and placing the same under the control, management, and ownership of the United States.

There is a provision here for the investigation of the Nicaragua route, if the Nicaragua route can be found on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I must raise the point of order in the first instance, for I see it is going to lead to extended discussion, that the point raised by the gentleman from Iowa was not raised at the proper time; that he allowed it to pass until too late.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman ready for the Chair to rule?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order was not taken at the proper time. Nothing is better settled than that a point of order must be raised prior to discussion.

Mr. HEPBURN. But there has been no discussion, except simple inquiries and answers.

The SPEAKER. That is discussion.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I desire to make a motion, if now is the proper time, that the House—

Mr. BURTON. I can not yield the floor to the gentleman from Iowa for that purpose.

Mr. HEPBURN. There has been no demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa had the floor on a point of order; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has the floor.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio, then, to yield to me to make that motion. The gentleman did not make objection to this. Mr. Speaker, there is hidden in this a snare under the pretense of investigating with regard to the Nicaragua Canal, under the terms of this amendment. The gentleman has so ingeniously worded it that there can be no investigation except in regard to the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. I decline to yield for a motion. If the gentleman from Iowa desires time in which to address the House, and we can agree, I shall be pleased to yield to him. What is the least time the gentleman will be satisfied with?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, if I can not make the motion I do not know what the discussion would avail me.

Mr. BURTON. I suggest that this is a conference report before the House, and if the gentleman has anything to say about the Panama or the Nicaragua Canal, provisions concerning them are contained in this conference report. He can address the House, and I think it will be possible for him to make his remarks germane to the subject before us. I do not desire to yield any considerable time. Will ten minutes be sufficient for the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN. Ten minutes will enable me to say all that I desire to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Iowa to make a motion?

Mr. BURTON. No; I can not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then he is to talk to the air.

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not accept the gentleman's courtesy on those conditions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to. On motion of Mr. BURTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the report of the conferees on the naval appropriation bill will be ready soon, when that bill comes over from the other House, and I move that the House take a recess until 5 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes) the House took a recess until 5 o'clock.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12123) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I send to the desk a report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the report read in full, or does he move to dispense with the reading?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think, Mr. Speaker, it would expedite matters if I should read a very brief statement of the managers on the part of the House. It is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House respectfully make the following statement of the result of the second conference with the managers on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval establishment:

The Senate receded from its amendments numbered 4, 22, 23, and 24. No. 4 embraced the Gathmann-gun proposition, which goes out of the bill. Nos. 22, 23, and 24 contained the provisions for appointment of boards to examine and report on locating a new dry dock on the Columbia River, Oregon, a naval coaling and repair station in California south of San Francisco, and a dry dock at or near Key West; all of which are stricken out.

The House conferees receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agreed to the same with an amendment providing that one of the dry docks in addition to that at Boston may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be constructed of stone or concrete faced with stone.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 55 the House conferees insisted upon their disagreement. These amendments embraced the reduction of the number of battle ships, armored cruisers, and protected cruisers, the reduction in the price to be paid for armor, and the establishing of a Government armor plant, on which the House conferees did not feel at liberty to or disposed to yield in view of the emphatic action of the House immediately after the first conference.

C. A. BOUTELLE,

S. G. HILBORN,

AMOS J. CUMMINGS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to say that the questions in disagreement between the two Houses have resolved themselves into these: The number of ships to be authorized, the price to be paid for armor, and the question of building an armor plant, upon which the House has so emphatically expressed its judgment. I have waited in the other body pending the discussion of the conference report as presented there, and while the Senate has voted to insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference, and while I can not predict absolutely the outcome, I am impressed with the belief that if the House shall insist upon the position it has assumed we shall be able in the next conference to come to an agreement which will be consistent with the attitude the conferees have thus far assumed, as I believe in deference to the very strong feeling and disposition of the House.

Mr. LENTZ. What difference is there now between the two Houses as to the number of battle ships?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Senate strikes out one battle ship, one armored cruiser, and two of the protected cruisers.

Mr. LENTZ. That would leave eight.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That leaves eight; but my judgment is that the proposition for a reduction in the number of ships is very weak in the Senate. That is my impression from the best information I can get.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be adopted.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask one question. If the Senate should agree to the $445 limit, would the gentleman be then willing to grant an authority—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, that is a matter for the conferees to act upon.

A MEMBER. And for the House.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report, it was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments still in controversy between the two Houses and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. HANDY. I ask for a separate vote on the armor-plate proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the remaining amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by that body. The gentleman from Delaware asks for a separate vote upon the amendments—

Mr. HANDY. Simply on the armor-plate amendment; and when that amendment comes up I shall move that the House recede.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Delaware will specify the particular portion or clause of the amendment that he desires to vote upon, it will simplify matters.

Mr. HANDY. My memory is that the amendment is the fifty-fifth, but I have not the document with me to enable me to speak with certainty.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There are practically two propositions on this subject, although they merge themselves somewhat. The limit of price is fixed at $300, instead of $445—

Mr. HANDY. That is a separate amendment, is it not?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; the price fixed is $300, but the armor-plate proposition is made dependent upon that price in this way: The proviso is that if the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to obtain armor plate of the best quality at such a price—that, is $300—

Mr. HANDY. But if the price is made different that proposition would refer to a different price.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But the price has not been made different up to this time.

Mr. HANDY. I desire that we should insist on our price, $445; but as to amendment 55 (if I remember the number correctly) I wish to move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. As to the other amendments, the gentleman from Maine moves that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Before the question is put, I should like to put to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry—whether upon a conference report you can vote on a portion of a proposition?

The SPEAKER. These are separate amendments; and there will be no difficulty about voting on them separately.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, if we should adopt a motion to recede and concur with the Senate in building an armor plant and a change should be made in the other clause it would complicate matters.

The SPEAKER. Supposing a change was made in the other clause, to limit the price to $600 instead of $300.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think the members would vote very differently under those circumstances from the way in which they would when the limit is fixed at $300.

The SPEAKER. But if the gentleman demands a separate vote, the Chair does not see how it can be refused.

Mr. HANDY. Not only that, but the conferees would be entirely free—

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] that the House, as to all amendments except 55, do further insist upon its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] moves to recede and concur in amendment No. 55, relating to the armor-plate factory.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I call for the previous question on that.

Mr. HANDY. I should like to have about two minutes or one minute. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The disposition of the House seems to be to vote at once.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] that the House recede and concur.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. HANDY. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 77.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], that the House further insist on its disagreement with the Senate relating to amendment 55.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that the House assent to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, Mr. HILBORN, and Mr. CUMMINGS.

TEMPORARY COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BULL, Mr. OLMSTED, and Mr. BARTLETT as members of the temporary Committee on Accounts.

VISITORS TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MARSH, Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. JETT as visitors to the Military Academy.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. DALZELL, Mr. STEELE, and Mr. SETTLE as visitors to the Naval Academy.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a conference near on the District bill. I will move that the House take a recess for twenty minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until 5 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m.

The recess having expired, the House (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m.) resumed its session.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District; whereupon the Speaker signed the same.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 6 o'clock, and pending that I yield one minute to my colleague [Mr. DRIGGS] to ask unanimous consent to address the House on whatever topic he may see fit. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets to say that on a motion to take a recess time can not be yielded. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until 6 o'clock a. m.

The recess having expired, the House (at 6 o'clock a. m.) resumed its session.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House take a recess until 6.30 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House was in further recess until 6.30 a. m.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

H. R. 12106. An act making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900;

H. R. 1206. An act granting an increase of pension to Sophia W. Buxton; and

H. R. 9428. An act to authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, of Maryland, to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, the House took a further recess until 7.30 a. m.

The recess having expired, the House, at 7.30 a. m., resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4905. An act granting an increase of pension to Stephen P. Choate;

H. R. 4501. An act granting an increase of pension to Stephen A. Knowlan;

H. R. 4498. An act granting an increase of pension to Jackson Neace;

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11083) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

BINDING OF INVALID PENSIONS COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and is, authorized to cause to be bound the reports of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Fifty-fifth Congress, at a cost not exceeding $15.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and, as the report is brief, I ask the Clerk to read it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11083) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 91, 94, 152, 157, 158, 159, and 160.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 57, 92, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 154, 155, 156, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, and 168, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to grant permits for the repair, enlargement, and extension, under proper regulations, of existing electric lighting conduits; and in every conduit constructed or to be constructed under the provisions of this paragraph three ducts shall be reserved for the use of the United States and the District of Columbia, and as a condition for the right to use conduits heretofore built or to be built under the provisions of this act the electric lighting companies shall be required at all times to furnish to the public and to private consumers in all parts of the District of Columbia standard arc lights of not less than 1,000 actual candlepower at a rate not exceeding $72 per annum for each arc light; and on and after the 1st day of June, 1899, the maximum price of electric current sold or furnished to any consumer in the District of Columbia shall be reduced from the present maximum of 15 cents per kilowatt hour to not exceeding 10 cents per kilowatt hour. That if consumers other than the Government shall not pay monthly electric bills within ten days after the same shall have been presented, said companies may charge and collect from said consumer so failing to pay said bill as aforesaid 11 cents per kilowatt hour for the electric current furnished to said consumer during said month: And provided further, That the right to amend, modify, or repeal the privileges herein granted, and to further limit the prices herein specified, is hereby expressly reserved. Any company charging or collecting an amount in excess of the rates herein prescribed shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $50 for each and every offense, to be collected as other fines are now collected in the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "325;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$622,420;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,

S. M. CULLOM,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GROUT. If the Clerk will read the statement, which is very brief, it would tell the whole story.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the District of Columbia appropriation bill submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying conference report.

On amendments 53 and 54: The amount for electric arc lighting is increased from $90,000 to $63,000, as proposed by the Senate, and a provision is inserted regulating the repair, enlargement, and extension of electric-lighting conduits, and for other purposes, which is fully set forth in the conference report as read.

On amendments 91, 92, 93, 94, and 95: Provides for 1 additional sergeant of police and 25 additional privates, instead of 100, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments 148 to 168, inclusive: Provides for various charities in the District of Columbia as proposed by the Senate, except that the five institutions confessedly sectarian in their character proposed to be appropriated for by the Senate are stricken from the bill.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,

A. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the adoption of the report.

Mr. HENDERSON. A parliamentary inquiry. Does a motion to recede from the disagreement of the House and to concur in the Senate amendments take precedence over a motion to adopt this report?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then the only way left for a disagreement in this report is to vote it down and then instruct?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the five institutions named are all knocked out, and no provision is made for them.

Mr. GROUT. No provision is made for the five sectarian institutions.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have discussed this question repeatedly in this House. We are brought here face to face for the first time with the failure to make any provision for these orphan institutions in this bill, although I understand the Senate has resisted all night, and one of the conferees has not been present in the conference, so that the gentleman has been practically voting two votes.

Mr. GROUT. With full authority of the other conferee.

Mr. HENDERSON. The other conferee was absent and not there, and the only way to protect these orphans is to vote down this report and to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. GROUT. This is a full agreement, and the absent conferee is heartily in favor of leaving out these five institutions.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to state that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] did not agree to this proposition, and only assented to sign the report because the third member could not be obtained, so that it could come before the House, and I say he did not agree to this proposition.

Mr. GROUT. Why, Mr. Speaker, he signed it, and of course agreed to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For no other reason than to get it before the House.

Mr. GROUT. He freely signed it; but I want to be perfectly fair with the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, who is always fair to all. He did say, as he signed, that he did not fully concur in all provisions of the agreement, but would join in sending the bill back into the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. He did not agree to this, but he has signed the report, so he is bound by that, and it is not one thing to write his name and tell us he did not agree. I do not take any stock in that. But we ought still to protect these children. This is the first time in years and years that these orphans have been left without appropriation for their support, and I sincerely hope the House will vote down the report, and then I will offer an amendment to recede and concur.

Mr. RIDGELY. If I understand the reading of the report, you have also conceded the 4 per cent tax on the electric-light companies.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman says these orphans are left unprovided for. In this the gentleman is altogether mistaken. All the destitute children in the District are placed by law in charge of the Board of Children's Guardians. That board was established in 1894, and 40 per cent of the appropriations to all these different institutions of the city, sectarian and nonsectarian alike, was withheld and placed at the disposal of the Board of Children's Guardians for the care of needy children. I hold in my hand a long letter addressed by this Board of Guardians to all these institutions, and many of them, because of being cut off from 40 per cent of the appropriations, surrendered certain children to be cared for by the board, but not one of these sectarian institutions surrendered a single child—not one.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are there not private institutions that are provided for upon this bill?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What are they?

Mr. GROUT. They are several in number. I can not name them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Can you call off a few of them, because I want to know whether they are sectarian or nonsectarian?

Mr. GROUT. You can know by reading the report made by the joint special committee appointed by the two Houses to investigate that subject, and I will say that that committee report all those stricken out to be sectarian. There is still left in the bill one institution exclusively under control of the Catholic Church, viz, St. Ann's Infant Asylum, which was left in as matter of compromise in the committee when we brought the bill into the House, and on the ground that it was not educational in character, as all of these that we have left out are.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. From what do we learn they took them away from there before the educational age?

Mr. GROUT. From the report of the special joint committee that investigated that subject, and they reported, as I have stated, on these five that are left out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, the gentleman will pardon me for asking one more question, and I will not occupy his time any more. There has been some difference as to what makes an institution sectarian and what does not. I remember a bill that was up here perhaps two years ago.

Mr. GROUT. Three years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You had the Evangelical Christian Union, a matter that was provided for. It was not Jewish and was not Catholic. Is that provided for in this bill?

Mr. GROUT. Well, I presume so; I think all of the charities are provided for that were provided for then. I presume it is.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It was nonsectarian; that is something that did not discriminate between Protestants.

Mr. GROUT. No; nor against Catholics. There are two Protestant institutions left out of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But are any left in?

Mr. GROUT. None that are exclusively under the control of any one church, but one of which is under the control of the Catholic Church, and that is for the care of infants.

Now, to further show that ample provision is made for these children, I will say that there is now room for 70 more children in the Industrial Home School, an institution that we enlarged by appropriation a few years ago; and the superintendent of charities says there are not less than 500 applications for child boarders now on file at the Board of Children's Guardians; that is, families who will be glad to take these children and take care of them; and the law constituting the Board of Children's Guardians places these children under the control of that board.

When the gentleman claims that the children are being neglected, it is wholly without foundation. You have the fact that when the 40 per cent was taken away these five sectarian institutions would not surrender a child. Take these appropriations away and they will take care of the children they want just the same. They will care for not a child less.

The sum of $8,000, because of the nonsurrender of these children to the Board of Children's Guardians in 1894, was turned back into the Treasury, they not having used up their appropriation. This Board of Guardians are thoroughly organized and are doing an extensive business in the care of children in the institutions in the city and some outside. The board find places in private families, where children are cared for by mothers and brought up as carefully and tenderly as they can be cared for in any institution. So it is not stating the thing correctly to say that we are neglecting the children. We have made a liberal appropriation in this bill for the Board of Children's Guardians to be expended in the care of children.

Mr. LACEY. How much is asked for these sectarian institutions?

Mr. GROUT. Twelve thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. LACEY. What churches?

Mr. GROUT. Catholic and Episcopal churches. Two of the institutions we have left out belong to the Episcopal Church, and three are under control of the Catholic Church exclusively. The other two are exclusively under the control of the Episcopalians. These institutions were all found to be sectarian by the joint committee, and in our conference Senator COCKRELL stated that there was no question about the sectarian character of them.

Now, it presents simply the question whether we will keep faith with what we said we would do three years ago, when we passed an act saying that after the 1st of June, 1897, no more money should be appropriated for sectarian institutions. That was incorporated into the appropriation bill. The next year—viz, 1898—we brought in a bill without appropriating for these sectarian institutions, and the Senate put them on and sent the bill back to the House, and we nonconcurred and went into conference and struggled over the matter, and finally came back with an agreement to concur with the Senate.

I was arraigned by certain gentlemen on the floor of the House, who demanded to know why I had agreed to these sectarian appropriations after the enactment already spoken of. My reply in substance was, in accordance with the fact, that the bill was likely to fail if the House conferees did not yield to the Senate, but I promised the House that I would never again agree to them; and in our action to-day, which so arouses my friend the gentleman from Iowa, we have only kept our promise and kept faith also with the enactment of 1897, which we were careful to put into the bill again, providing that after July 1, 1898, no more money should be appropriated for sectarian institutions. Notwithstanding all this, the Senate put them into the bill again this year, but have at last consented that they may go out.

Mr. Speaker, I need take no time in stating the strong reasons against appropriating public money for sectarian purposes, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like about five or ten minutes.

Mr. GROUT. Well, I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

[Mr. HENDERSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman wants a vote just now. I observe in the amendment that has been adopted by the Senate, I believe—

Mr. GROUT. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. That instead of reducing the price of arc lights from $91.25 per light they have increased the price more than 50 per cent over what the District is now paying.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, the gentleman does not mean that.

Mr. BABCOCK. I mean exactly what I say, and there is the amendment.

Mr. GROUT. If you mean that, you do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. BABCOCK. I certainly do, as I will explain in a moment.

Mr. GROUT. I know what the gentleman refers to, but he does not understand it.

Mr. BABCOCK. They have reduced the arc lights from 2,000-candlepower light to 1,000-candlepower light, and provided that the 1,000-candlepower light shall be paid for at the rate of $72, instead of $91.25 for a 2,000-candlepower light.

Mr. GROUT. There is not a 2,000-candlepower light in the city, Mr. Speaker, not one, and never has been; nothing but 1,000-candlepower arc lights. This is what the gentleman has in mind, and he is misled by it. Formerly, away back, appropriations ran for 2,000 nominal candlepower or 1,000 actual candlepower light. That phraseology was dropped long ago in the appropriation bills, and in the nomenclature of the electrical world there has been nothing but the 1,000-candlepower arc lights. That is just what is provided for here, and that is why the gentleman is misled. The light is precisely what we have been appropriating for right along. There is no question about it, not the least in the world.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I have ever heard of the 1,000-candlepower light. The smallest lights used in the little town where I live are of 1,300 candlepower.

Mr. GROUT. That is nominal candlepower, not actual candlepower. The amendment reads "actual candlepower."

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not know the difference between actual candlepower and nominal candlepower. I understand the terms that are usually met with, and the 2,000 candlepower is the standard arc light and the light that has been used here in the city.

Mr. GROUT. There is not a 2,000 actual candlepower light in the city, and never has been. At least, they have never been appropriated for by Congress since I have had connection with this committee. They are 1,000-candlepower lights.

Mr. BABCOCK. Was that so in the bill of last year?

Mr. GROUT. Why, certainly, and in the bill of this year.

Mr. BABCOCK. What is the difference between actual and nominal candlepower?

Mr. GROUT. It is a way that electricians formerly had of expressing it. I can not explain all the intricacies of electricity nor of electrical terms, but they used to speak of 2,000 nominal candlepower or 1,000 actual candlepower. I know that term was formerly used, but it has not been used for years.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman state that he knows that this 1,000-candlepower light is the same light that is now in use?

Mr. GROUT. I will; and I feel sure I can not be mistaken.

Mr. MUDD. You are not mistaken.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, no.

The question being taken on agreeing to the conference report, Mr. VANDIVER and others demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 34.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope my friend from Massachusetts will not ask for the yeas and nays. It is perfectly evident that the House is against us on this proposition. We have done our duty. Let the responsibility lie with those who render the verdict.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the House will give me unanimous consent to speak for three minutes, so that I can state my position, so as to put myself right on the matter, I will not demand the yeas and nays out of respect for my friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have such time as he wishes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts have such time as he wishes.

Mr. PAYNE. On condition that he withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; he said he would do that.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This case was so eloquently stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] that I do not intend to go into the merits of the question at all; but inasmuch as the action of this House has deprived these worthy charities of this amount of money, which means so much to them, I intend to indicate to this House and to the country the exact manner in which this amendment was defeated. The conference committee as appointed consisted of three members, one of whom never served on the committee at all, his powers and functions being usurped by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], who in that conference cast two votes all the time. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that that was not a fair repre-presentation of this House upon that subject. As I stated before, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], whose name is attached to that report, indicated to me and to other members of the House that he did not attach his name to the report with the understanding that he favored the action of the committee, but for the sole purpose of bringing the matter before the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think, under all these circumstances, that the House is not acting properly here, in the last few hours of the session, in depriving these worthy charities of the money that ought to be theirs. I only wish, Mr. Speaker, that there were enough members here to insist upon a roll call, so that those who, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has said, who have bowed the knee to this infamous society that is in the country could be known to their constituents. If gentlemen are honest and sincere in their attitude on this question, why do they not stand up here and be counted? We have had nothing before us for five hours now, except the naval appropriation bill. If you are honest, if you are consistent in your attitude to the people of this country, stand up and be counted. I know if there was an opportunity to go on record in this House to-day before the people of this country, that a great many of the members who have voted against this provision would not dare to go on record.

This is an attack upon the Sisters of Charity, upon the Sisters of Mercy, who day in and day out for three months in the Spanish war ministered to the soldiers, sick, starving, and dying, as I saw them for three weeks at Montauk Point.

As the eloquent gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has said, they are educating and taking care of these poor orphans without any benefit to themselves and without any emolument. Yet this House, that, according to the records of it, has appropriated $1,550,000,000 of money to cater to the whims of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT], refuses the small mere pittance of $12,000. They talk about sectarianism. Why do we pay the preacher who comes here every day? Why do we pay the preachers who are chaplains in the Army and in the Navy? I say to the gentleman from Vermont, if you are consistent no money should be appropriated for any purpose that is sectarian. You are not consistent. If you were you would introduce a provision making—

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it; and the conference report is agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GROUT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the general deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Illinois a statement?

Mr. CANNON. I will say that the duties of the clerk have been so great that we have not had time to prepare the usual written statement, and I will ask unanimous consent to dispense with it and have the report read in place of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the statement of the conferees on the part of the House required by the rules. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the words "twelve months from the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "until October 1, 1899;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
S. S. BARNEY,
L. E. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that members of the Committee on Appropriations may have leave to print statements touching appropriations and matters connected therewith.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the members of the Committee on Appropriations be permitted to print statements touching appropriations and matters connected therewith.

Mr. HOPKINS. Ought not that to be limited within a certain time?

Mr. CANNON. It will not be possible. It will take a little time, in our condition, to get the statements accurate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How long a time? Will the RECORD be held back with these statements?

Mr. CANNON. We will not delay the RECORD.
 Mr. RICHARDSON. It is usual to state some time. There will be no objection to some reasonable time.
 Mr. CANNON. Has leave for fifteen days been given?
 Mr. RICHARDSON. Say ten days.
 Mr. CANNON. That will be more time than we want.
 The SPEAKER. With a limitation of ten days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. JOHN W. CRANFORD.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That by unanimous consent opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JOHN W. CRANFORD, late a Representative from the State of Texas.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, these memorial proceedings shall appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, a great many members make inquiry of me as to the number of pension bills passed, the amount they carried, and the expenditure they add to the pension roll. I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD within the next four days a statement of the number of pension bills both committees reported, the number that became laws, and the amount that they carry and add to the pension roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman if that was not published by leave of the House a few days ago?

Mr. RAY of New York. So far as it went at that time, it was accurate; but it did not show how many became law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Do you only desire to supplement the report that was printed a few days ago?

Mr. RAY of New York. I shall not publish that entirely, because there is no use duplicating it, but will give the correct figures.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks permission of the House to supplement a report made of the number of pensions granted by Congress, the number of bills that have failed, etc., to be done within four days. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall not object if the statement is to be confined within the limits mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. RAY of New York. It just gives the facts and figures.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course, I understand that the gentleman will not indulge in any partisan politics, because there will be no opportunity for reply.

Mr. RAY of New York. It only states the facts and figures, and there will be no remarks whatever.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PAYNE (at 9 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m.). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 9.30.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House was in recess until half past 9 o'clock.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8623) for the relief of the heirs of Neil McEnery, of Johnstown, Pa.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I have a report on the part of the managers of the House on the naval appropriation bill. They have reached an agreement with the conferees on the part of the Senate. The Senate has just adopted the report and sent it over here, and it is now at the Clerk's desk. The matters pending between the House and the Senate at the last conference were in regard to the vessels and the armor. I will read the statement of the managers on the part of the House:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill report their agreement to the Senate conferees on the following basis:

The Senate recedes from its amendments 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49, the result of which is to restore the authorization of the full number of three battle ships, three armored cruisers, and six protected cruisers, exactly as provided in the House bill, and providing for the building of certain of the vessels on the Pacific coast and the number to be built by any one establishment.

The Senate recedes from 51, which is merely verbal, and from 52, 53, 54, and 55 with amendment, so that in lieu of these amendments the bill will provide as follows:

"Provided, That in procuring armor for the seagoing coast-line battle ships and the harbor-defense vessels of the monitor type, authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, approved May 4, 1898, the Secretary of the Navy may contract for suitable armor for said vessels under the limitations as to price for the same as fixed by said act: And provided further, That no contracts for the armor for any vessels authorized by this act shall be made at an average rate exceeding $300 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case shall a contract be made for the construction of the hull of any vessel authorized by this act until a contract has been made for the armor of such vessel."

This strikes out all provision for a Government armor plant; provides that the vessels authorized by the act of May 4, 1898, may be provided with armor under the terms of said act, but that no contracts for the armor of any vessels be authorized by this act.

The House conferees reluctantly yielded to the demand for this provision, but for the sake of the substantial concessions made by the Senate, and in the belief that a future Congress may be able to remedy any evil effects of legislation as to armor, deemed it wise to make these agreements, which they recommend to the approval of the House.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and not more than two of the seagoing battle ships and not more than two of the armored cruisers herein provided for and not more than two of the protected cruisers herein provided for shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 52, 53, and 54, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendments, and strike out, on page 56 of the bill, in line 17, after the word "dollars," all down to and including the word "Government," at the end of the amended paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That in procuring armor for the seagoing coast-line battle ships and the harbor-defense vessels of the monitor type, authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, approved May 4, 1898, the Secretary of the Navy may contract for suitable armor for said vessels under the limitations as to price for the same as fixed by said act: And provided further, That no contracts for the armor for any vessels authorized by this act shall be made at an average rate exceeding $300 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case shall a contract be made for the construction of the hull of any vessel authorized by this act until a contract has been made for the armor of such vessel;" and the Senate agree to the same.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
 S. G. HILBORN,
 AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.
 EUGENE HALE,
 M. S. QUAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE (at 9 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m.). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until half past 10.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House was in recess until half past 10.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

Mr. PAYNE (at 10 o'clock and 37 minutes a. m.). I move that the House take a further recess until 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. DALZELL submitted the following resolution; which was read, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed by the Chair to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. DALZELL, Mr. REEVES, and Mr. LANHAM as the committee on the part of the House.

ROBERT J. WHITTLETON.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to report from the Committee on Accounts the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Robert J. Whittleton, the sum of $123.06 for clerical services rendered in the enrolling room from April 3 to April 30, 1897, inclusive.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was passed by the Committee on Accounts, who directed that it be reported by the chairman with others which were reported. The minutes of the committee show this fact, but the chairman omitted unintentionally to report this resolution and ask its passage by the House. This is the only one of the resolutions acted upon by the committee that was omitted from the report. The gentleman who will get the benefit of this resolution is scarcely known to me. I did not introduce the resolution, but as a simple matter of justice to him I ask that it be now adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is this unanimously reported by the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. BARTLETT. It is. They directed that the resolution be reported by the chairman; he unintentionally omitted it when reporting the others.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE (at 11 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.). I move that the House take a recess until half past 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the list of House bills and joint resolutions approved by the President will be read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the list.

CESSION OF LAND IN BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 384) authorizing the acceptance of the cession by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to the United States of a certain tract of land in Boston Harbor.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the cession to the United States by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts of the tract of land described in the act of the legislature of that Commonwealth approved February 7, 1899, and entitled "An act to cede certain land in Boston Harbor and the jurisdiction over the same to the United States for the purpose of extending the present limit of the United States Navy-Yard," be, and the same is hereby, accepted.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This joint resolution is merely a cession of harbor lines in Boston Harbor in front of the navy-yard, so as to facilitate the operations of the dry dock. No consideration is paid by the United States for this cession; but it is believed by the Attorney-General to be necessary that acceptance be made by Congress. I hope the resolution will receive a unanimous vote.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess for five minutes.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Before that is done, I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves that the House take a recess for five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until 11 o'clock and 45 minutes a. m.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session, and was called to order by Mr. PAYNE as Speaker pro tempore.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

The committee appointed to wait upon the President appeared at the bar of the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed to join a committee from the Senate, to announce to the President that the Congress had finished its business, unless he had further communication to make, beg leave to report that they have fulfilled the duty assigned to them and that the President made reply, saying that he had no further communication to make; that the Fifty-fifth Congress had been one of extraordinary duties and responsibilities, which it had amply met, and that he wished for each and every member of the House of Representatives a safe return to his home. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUCKERY] will please take the chair.

Mr. DUCKERY assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore amid general applause.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. It is an admirable trait of the American character, and it is one which will contribute much toward the permanence of our institutions, that no matter how we may contend against each other over our differences of opinion, each is always ready to accord to the other whatever praise may be deserved. This commendable spirit has led some shallow men to criticize us, because they could not comprehend how we could so strenuously combat the principles of our adversaries and still respect those adversaries themselves. These men do not know that a large majority of the men in every party of this country believe that a large majority of the men in every other party are sincerely anxious to promote our country's welfare. [Applause.] And out of this broader spirit has grown a custom which is as old as the House itself, that in the closing hours of every session there shall be offered a resolution like that which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are tendered to the Hon. THOMAS B. REED for the able, impartial, and dignified manner in which he has presided over its deliberations and performed the arduous and important duties of the Chair.

[Applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, we have not always agreed with the distinguished occupant of the chair, and we have taken more than one occasion to emphasize our dissent; but remembering the momentous questions which have confronted us, and remembering, too, the intense excitement which they aroused throughout the country, as well as in this Hall, the wonder is that those occasions were so few; and in this hour of impartial retrospect I do not hesitate to say that he has been as fair to us and to our side as any one of us, were our positions reversed, would have been to him and to his side. [Loud applause.]

I move the adoption of the resolution which has just been read. [Renewed applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask for a rising vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As many as are in favor will rise.

The question being taken, the resolution was unanimously agreed to by a rising vote, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] a committee to wait upon the Speaker and escort him to the chair.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And have him make a speech. [Laughter.]

The committee appointed to escort the Speaker into the Hall of the House performed that duty, and on the Speaker's appearance he was greeted with prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. Speaker, the pleasing duty devolves upon me to announce to you that the House of Representatives has, by unanimous vote, tendered you its sincere thanks for the able, impartial, and dignified manner in which you have presided over its deliberations. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: In laying down for the third time the insignia of an office which has but one superior and no peer, I might perhaps fairly congratulate myself upon having had a great opportunity to administer a great office in the fashion indicated by the noble words known to our law, "without fear, favor, or hope of reward." [Applause.] Where I have succeeded I am sure to have your final approval; where I have failed I am sure you have given me credit for honorable intention. [Applause.]

Notwithstanding any differences of opinion or of party, you have given me your confidence in all which pertained to my duties here in a manner so full and ample that my memory of it will never pass away. [Applause.]

When I compare the opportunity you have given me with what it has been possible to do, I see how much I need your kind indorsement of to-day, for which I return you thanks and gratitude. With pleasant memories for our past, which I shall always cherish, and best wishes for your future, which I shall always entertain, I now declare this House adjourned without day. [Applause and cheers.]
